MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In the state of the Union message of January 6, 1947, I stated that I would communicate with the Congress in the near future with reference to the establishment of a single department of national defense.

For many months the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have been endeavoring to settle the differences existing between the services on this question.

I am gratified to advise that success has crowned their efforts and the armed services have reached an agreement on a plan of unification. I enclose herewith copy of a letter, signed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy under date of January 16, 1947, containing the basic elements of this agreement. I enclose also copy of my reply to them on the same date.

In addition I submit a copy of a proposed Executive order, agreed upon by the services, which presents the functions of the armed forces. It is contemplated that this order would be issued after the passage of appropriate legislation by the Congress upon this subject.

Representatives of my office and of the armed services are engaged in drafting a bill to be submitted to the Congress for its consideration. These men, of course, are available to you at any time for consultation.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The accompanying letters and Executive order will be printed in the RECORD, and the communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The letters and accompanying papers are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 16, 1947.

The Honorable ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
The Secretary of War.

The Honorable JAMES FORRESTAL,
The Secretary of the Navy.

GENTLEMEN: I am exceedingly pleased to receive your joint letter of January 16 in which you advise that you have reached full and complete agreement on a plan for the unification of the armed services.

I recognize that each of the services has made concessions in the effort to reach this agreement, and I feel that it constitutes an admirable compromise between the various views that were originally held.

The agreement provides a thoroughly practical and workable plan of unification and I heartily approve it.

You have both worked ably and effectively, with your respective staffs, in bringing about this result. I appreciate your fine efforts and I congratulate you upon an accomplishment which, I am sure, will contribute greatly to the efficiency of our national defense.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

JANUARY 16, 1947.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On May 31, 1946, we jointly submitted to you a letter which gave our respective views on the major elements involved in establishing a greater measure of unification of our armed forces.

In your letter of June 15, 1946, you expressed gratification at the progress made in narrowing the zone of disagreement which had previously existed between the services and stated your position with reference to the essential points on which disagreement still existed.

In our opinion the necessity for agreement between the military services is now even greater than at the time of our earlier letter. We and our representatives have been meeting in an effort to secure further resolution, within the scope and the spirit of the statement of your position, of the views of the two departments. We are pleased to report success in this undertaking.

We agree to support legislation in which the following points are incorporated:

(a) There shall be a Council of National Defense, a National Security Resources Board and a Central Intelligence Agency (which already exists) as agreed by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in their letter to the President of May 31, 1946.

(b) The armed forces shall be organized under a Secretary of National Defense so as to place the Army, the Navy (to include the Marine Corps and Naval Aviation), and the Air Force, each with a military chief, under the Departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force respectively. Each shall be under a Secretary and, under the over-all direction of the Secretary of National Defense, shall be administered as an individual unit. The Secretary of any of the three Departments may, at any time, present to the President, after first informing the Secretary of National Defense, any report or recommendation relating to his Department which he may deem necessary or desirable.

(c) A War Council shall be created, consisting of the Secretary of National Defense as Chairman and with power of decision, the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Air Force, and the military heads of the three services. The War Council will concern itself with matters of broad policy relating to the armed forces.

(d) There shall be a Joint Chiefs of Staff, consisting of the military heads of the three services, and also the Chief of Staff to the President if that office exists. Subject to the authority and direction of the Secretary of National Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff will provide for the strategic direction of the military forces of the United States, will formulate strategic plans, assign logistic responsibilities to the services in support thereof, integrate the military requirements and, as directed, advise in the integration of the military budget.

(e) There shall be a full-time Joint Staff, to consist initially of not over 100 officers, to be provided in approximately equal numbers by the three services. The Joint Staff, operating under a Director thereof, shall carry out policies and directives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

(f) The Secretary of National Defense shall head the armed forces establishment, shall be vested with authority, under the President, to establish common policies and common programs for the integrated operation of the three departments and shall exercise control over and direct their common efforts to discharge their responsibility for national security.

We are agreed that the proper method of setting forth the functions (so-called roles and missions) of the armed forces is by the issuance of an Executive order concurrently with your approval of the appropriate legislation. We attach for your consideration a mutually agreed draft of such an order.

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.
JAMES FORRESTAL,
Secretary of the Navy.

PETITION

Mr. GREEN (for himself and Mr. MCGRATH) presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolution memorializing Congress, the President of the United States of America, and the Italian Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary with relation to the arrival of the Honorable Alcide De Gasperi, Prime Minister of the Republic of Italy, in this country and the need of financial and economic help for Italy from the Government of the United States of America

Whereas the Honorable Alcide De Gasperi, Prime Minister of the Republic of Italy, has arrived in this country as a guest of our Government to discuss financial and economic help from the Government of the United States of America, necessary for the rebirth of his country and to alleviate the bitter suffering of his people; and

Whereas the people of Italy are united to us by long standing ties of friendship and Italy was our cobelligerent in the war, and is endeavoring to rehabilitate itself in a new regime of democracy; and

Whereas our country has fought a victorious war to establish a rule of justice and freedom among the peoples of the world, and in order to win the peace we have to assist those countries which are suffering the ravages of the war, and which, like Italy, are anxious to join with us in the maintenance and defense of western civilization: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States of America are hereby respectfully requested to use every effort at their command to extend to Italy all possible help; and be it further

Resolved, That duly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state from Rhode Island to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States, to the President of the United States of America, and to the Secretary of State of the United States to be transmitted by him to the Italian Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary.

RENT CONTROL—DISCONTINUANCE OF OPA

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have received a resolution from the Kent County (Del.) Real Estate Board urging that the Congress proceed to eliminate OPA in its entirety and that the States be given the opportunity through their legislative bodies to set up any regulations they may see fit on rent control. I ask unanimous consent to present the resolution for appropriate reference and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas rent control, as administered by the Office of Price Administration, continues to be an inequitable function; and

Whereas owners of property have been and continue to be faced with increased costs of maintenance and repair as well as increased taxes; and

Whereas a mere percentage increase of income now talked of and discussed in Congress will not cure the inequalities now existing; and

Whereas the continuance of rent control on real estate might well become an opportunity for the development of socialistic trends affecting the basic principle of home and property ownership: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Kent County Real Estate Board of Kent County, Del., in regular session met, That the Congress of the United States proceed to eliminate the Office of Price Administration in its entirety and that the respective States be given the opportunity by and through their duly constituted legislative bodies to work out their own regulatory control in such States as might deem it necessary; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of the Delaware Representatives in Congress.

PROTEST AGAINST WARTIME EXCISE TAXES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received from John Newcomer, a prominent theater manager of Osawatomie, Kans., a telegram in the nature of a memorial remonstrating against wartime excise taxes on luxury items, which now include theater admissions. I ask unanimous consent to present Mr. Newcomer's telegram for appropriate reference and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was received, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OSAWATOMIE, KANS., January 17, 1947.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Your attention is respectfully called to the recent announcement by Congressman HAROLD KNUTSON that he will sponsor continuation of wartime excise taxes on luxury items which now include theater admissions.

When this tax was increased to 20 percent it was accepted by theaters as a wartime measure that would last only for the war emergency period.

The continuation of this excessive tax would place theater attendance in the luxury class of liquor and expensive furs and jewelry, which is not the case. The bulk of theater patrons are low-salaried working people who are seeking entertainment and relaxation. It is the only type of entertainment many families can afford.

You therefore are urged to consider the above facts and if you are interested in easing the tax burden on the little fellow to use your influence to see that the theater-admission tax is returned to its normal level.

JOHN NEWCOMER,
Manager, Osa and Kansan Theaters.

VOCATIONAL AGRICULTURE AND HOMEMAKING PROGRAMS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a fine letter from the director and other officers of the Inman Rural High School, Inman, Kans., urging favorable action by Congress in behalf of the Smith-Hughes vocational agriculture and vocational homemaking program. I ask unanimous consent to present and to have this letter appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INMAN RURAL HIGH SCHOOL,
Inman, Kans., January 7, 1947.

Mr. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CAPPER: I am writing you in behalf of the Smith-Hughes vocational agriculture and vocational homemaking program. We understand that one or more bills for appropriations for this purpose will be introduced when the legislative body meets.

We wish to inform you that we have had the vocational program in our school for a number of years and are interested in its expansion throughout the rural high schools of the entire State. We believe that the program includes fundamentals for the vocational education of rural youth.

We urge that you, as our representative, support any bills that may assist in the development of the program.

Very truly yours,

M. S. KAUFMAN,
Principal.
J. C. GAEDDERT,
Director.
E. W. EVANS,
Secretary.
C. O. HEIDEBRECHT,
Treasurer.

RESTRICTION OF INDIVIDUAL FREEDOM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and to have printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, copy of a resolution adopted by Lodge 693 of the International Association of Machinists at Coffeyville, Kans., in which they express their opposition to any legislation that would restrict the freedom of any individual or group of individuals.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas labor is being accused of being responsible for most of the ills now befalling this great land of ours and, whereas we feel the actual facts do not justify these accusations; and

Whereas certain elements of our citizenship are circulating propaganda in an effort to compel Congress to pass legislation restraining labor: Be it therefore

Resolved, by the membership of Lodge 693, International Association of Machinists, That we urgently request our representatives in Congress to carefully consider all the facts before sponsoring or voting for any type of legislation that might tend to restrict the freedom of any individual or group of individuals; be it further

Resolved, That we call to the attention of our representatives some of the facts and conditions which we feel are responsible for the present existing industrial strife, to wit:

In 1942, in an effort to stabilize the economy of the Nation, Congress froze wages at a level not in excess of 15 percent above the 1939 level with the assurance to labor that prices of commodities would be held at their price level at that time. For some reason which we have been unable to ascertain those responsible were unable to hold the line on commodities with the result that living costs had risen by the end of the war to 33 percent above the 1939 level.

In an attempt to equalize wages with living costs, the Government proposed another wage increase of 18 percent which they claimed industry could grant without increasing prices. With the insurance of a normal profit, whether they operated or not, through the surplus profit-tax refund from the Government, some industrialists in an attempt, which we feel was an organized attempt to discredit labor, refused to grant any portion of this wage adjustment, thereby forcing labor to resort to the only means at their command, the strike. We should like to call to your attention the results of this latest attempt on the part of our Government to stabilize our economy. Industry, through threats, withholding of products from the market, and other means, forced Government again to grant price increases that were far in excess of those necessary to offset the wage increases allowed.

Government records show that in 15 basic industries it would have required 1.8 percent increase in prices to offset the wage increases, while the price increase actually granted was 6.4 percent. From the figures we are able to get it would appear that industry is again making unjust or surplus profits. As we go into the year of 1947, while wages have risen less than 40 percent above the 1939 level, living costs have risen to approximately 60 percent above 1939 level. On the basis of these facts we believe that labor needs a helping hand rather than an obstructing one. We urge you, as our representative in Congress, to sponsor and vote only for such legislation as will give all classes of our economy their just share of the fruits of their labor or resources; be it further

Resolved by the membership of Local 693, International Association of Machinists, That we do most vigorously oppose any legislation that might in any way tend to restrict the conditions of any collective bargaining agreement; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be mailed to the Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER, the Honorable CLYDE REED, and the Honorable HERBERT MEYER.

EXTENSION OF RECLAMATION LAWS TO STATE OF ARKANSAS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to extend the reclamation laws to the State of Arkansas. In connection with the bill, I request that a joint statement which we have prepared be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 299) to extend the reclamation laws to the State of Arkansas, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The statement presented by Mr. FULBRIGHT (for himself and Mr. MCCLELLAN) is as follows:

EXTENDING THE RECLAMATION LAWS TO THE STATE OF ARKANSAS—STATEMENT OF SENATORS J. W. FULBRIGHT AND JOHN L. M'CLELLAN

Senators FULBRIGHT AND MCCLELLAN introduced in the Senate today a bill providing for the extension of the reclamation laws to the State of Arkansas. If approved, the Bureau of Reclamation would be authorized to enter the State for study of its problems relating to irrigation, drainage, municipal and industrial water supplies, recreation, and fish and wildlife propagation and lend its influence toward supplementing existing programs for flood control and steam and hydroelectrical power development. Among the principal objectives of the bill would be to further augment and coordinate local, State, and Federal activities in the promotion of industrial development, and to bring about the fullest possible utilization of lands adaptable to agriculture or other purposes.

The original act limited the use of receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands, restricting such activities to 17 Western States. Arkansas remains as one of the richest States in the Nation in undeveloped agricultural and mineral resources, and it is in the national interest that the tremendous potentialities for development of these resources be implemented through the multi-purpose program of the Bureau of Reclamation, which may be adapted to many areas within the State.

No section of the Nation possesses such outstanding abundance of undeveloped natural resources necessary for a balanced agricultural and industrial economy, and in view of the fact that the population in the State is rapidly increasing, it is essential that a sound balance be maintained between agricultural and industrial development to stabilize the State's economy and raise the per capita income of its citizens. The Bureau of Reclamation is in a position to render great service to the State, and there is no section which is prepared to make better use of the services offered through this agency.

Specifically, there is a possibility of greatly expanded agricultural production in the area east of the White River and in the St. Francis River basin through a coordinated drainage and irrigation program. Estimates of the acreage which could be developed for agricultural purposes vary from a half million to a million acres in this area. Possibilities also exist for developing irrigation for vegetable crops on between 50,000 and 100,000 acres along the Arkansas River. Comprehensive investigations available through the Bureau of Reclamation are required to determine the full extent of the area within the State which might be reclaimed by irrigation.

Lack of adequate drainage has prevented profitable use of millions of acres of potentially valuable lands, and reclamation through drainage is an outstanding potentiality at a time when productive lands of the Nation are declining. Although privately financed drainage districts in Arkansas have helped in keeping some areas in production, the enterprises have often been ineffective, and coordination of such efforts would materially increase the effectiveness of the drainage works. Many of the districts are in financial difficulties, administration often is inefficient, drainage structures in the main are inadequate, maintenance frequently is neglected, and uncoordinated operation of some systems affects adjoining ones adversely. As a result of these difficulties, large bodies of land have reverted to disuse and considerable additional areas eventually will go out of production unless corrective measures are undertaken.

The total acreage of undrained woodlands and cut-over lands that could be reclaimed has not been determined. Detailed investigations required to estimate the acreage and the extent of benefits which might be derived as well as to determine the practicability of reconstructing and rehabilitating present drainage systems, merging or coordinating existing districts and developing new systems would be one of the first objectives of the Reclamation Service, if the bill is approved.

The State's rich valleys have not been developed to their full potentiality for agricultural production, even though annual precipitation, which averages 48 inches, only occasionally falls below a level sufficient for crop production. In some years, rainfall is poorly distributed and crops fail or yields are reduced because of lack of moisture during critical growing periods, even though the total annual rainfall would be sufficient for optimum crop production if properly distributed. Only in the famous Grand Prairie and Oak Flats rice-producing areas has irrigation been practiced to an appreciable extent in Arkansas. Greatly increased production of various crops, particularly specialty types, such as vegetables and rice, has been shown to be practical and profitable through development of irrigation projects in a number of sections.

The Grand Prairie area, where about 640,000 acres have been adapted to rice production, requires a supplemental water supply to offset effects of receding ground-water levels now threatening the present development. It is estimated that an additional 200,000 to 300,000 acre-feet of water will be required annually for sustained production in this area. The Oak Flats area west of Crowley's Ridge includes about 1,500,000 tillable acres of which only a small percentage has been developed for rice production. Many additional acres can be developed in this area by irrigation.

Another opportunity to obtain benefits through multiple-purpose developments is in the field of municipal, industrial, and rural water supplies. Flows in the lower reaches of the Arkansas, Ouachita and Red Rivers have been polluted by natural mineralization, domestic sewage, oil field brines, and other industrial wastes. Heavy withdrawals of ground water in the lower White River Valley have reduced municipal water supplies of several communities. Water courses in the Ozark-Ouachita highlands often are dry during the summer. Shallow ground water is scarce and deep wells often are too costly for the average user. Storage of surface flows to carry over dry summers is urgently needed.

Scenic attractions of the Ozark Mountains of northwestern Arkansas and the Ouachita Mountains form a magnet for thousands of tourists and vacationists annually. Artificial lakes developed on the streams in the two mountain regions to supplement and coordinate existing recreational facilities under State and Federal programs would enhance their drawing power, with great economical and cultural benefits to the State. The streams and lakes of Arkansas afford excellent opportunities for fishing and for fish propagation, while the lowlands provide extensive nesting and resting places for migratory birds.

Although much has been accomplished through recent protective flood-control projects, the State is still subject to major property losses from floods. Multiple-purpose projects constructed in many of the 17 Western States by the Bureau of Reclamation include provision for flood control and development of hydroelectrical power features. The Bureau cooperates with the Corps of Engineers, War Department, in the development of flood control and irrigation in the West. It is desirable that this same cooperation be extended into Arkansas, in coordination with existing local and State agencies.

The bill has the approval and endorsement of the Commissioner of Reclamation, Michael W. Straus, Department of Interior, who, in a letter addressed to Senator FULBRIGHT on January 7, 1947, stated:

"It is my opinion that the extension of the Reclamation Project Act to the State of Arkansas is highly desirable, for it undoubtedly would bring to that State the means of increasing agricultural and industrial activities through further development of irrigation, drainage, and low-cost electric power. All together, these certainly would substantially raise the standard of living in the State of Arkansas, and benefits would extend into the surrounding States as well. Since such an extension is for the local, State, and national welfare, it has my wholehearted support."

DISPOSITION OF BIG INCH AND LITTLE BIG INCH PIPE LINES

Mr. HAWKES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 62), which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a complete study and investigation of the desirability of disposing of the Big Inch and Little Big Inch pipe lines to private ownership, the reasonable price to be charged for such pipe lines and the necessary facilities in connection therewith, the use to which such pipe lines should be put when privately owned, and such other pertinent matters in connection therewith as the committee deems advisable. The committee shall report its findings to the Senate, together with its recommendations, not later than June 1, 1947.

PRINTING OF REPORT OF COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS (S. DOC. NO. 6)

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as required by law, on January 8 the President of the United States transmitted to the Congress his Joint Economic Report, which has been printed as House Document No. 49. On December 18, 1946, the Council of Economic Advisers made a brief report to the President. I ask unanimous consent that that report be printed as a Senate document for the use of the Senate.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

ARTICLE BY RUSSELL B. LONG IN DEFENSE OF HIS FATHER, HUEY P. LONG

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from Russell B. Long, son of the late Senator Huey P. Long, of Louisiana, which, in part, I desire to read. He says:

I have written a brief article, In Defense of My Father, answering one of the many fallacious articles that have been published about my father. * * * I would greatly appreciate it if you would see that this article is submitted and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article in question was published in the North Baton Rouge Journal, and I desire to read the note of the editor of that journal before asking unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD. I read:

EDITOR'S NOTE

Concerning the recent spread in Life magazine, The Huey Long Legend, Louisiana friends and foes of the late Huey Long are almost unanimous on one point:

The article contained many inaccuracies about Huey and Winn Parish.

Since that article was published in Life many Louisianians, Russell Long, son of Huey Long and a Baton Rouge attorney, have written to the magazine protesting its Huey Long legend.

Russell Long has requested Life magazine to give him as much space for a defense of Huey Long as it devoted to Hamilton Basso's Huey Long Legend. His letter, to date, Long said, has been unanswered.

Since the death of Huey Long, 11 years ago, many articles and an increasing flood of novels have been centered around the former Governor and Senator.

The North Baton Rouge Journal editors believe that one of the mandates for a free press is publication of both sides of every controversial issue. This article, which may be the basis for a feature to be submitted by Russell Long to Reader's Digest, is certainly by a person qualified to take the pro-Huey Long side.

Mr. Long's views are not necessarily those of the North Baton Rouge Journal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article written by Mr. Russell B. Long be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSSELL LONG WRITES—IN DEFENSE OF MY FATHER

I venture the assertion that no man of our times has been more abused, vilified, and misrepresented by the American press to its reading public than my father, Huey P. Long. Most commonly he has been accused of being a ruthless dictator who would have destroyed our system of democratic government as well with the charge as a noisy low-grade rabble-rouser. A mass of fictional novels pictures him as possessed of an obsessive lust for sexual indecencies. All glory in the fact that at law there is no right of suit by the decendants or relatives of a deceased person who has been libeled.

It now appears that Life magazine is desirous of creating a new American legend in which Huey Long is to play the role of Satan to the epic of American democracy. The fact that these far-fetched inventions of morbid imagination are untrue is easily established by anyone who would make the effort to investigate them at their source, but so powerful and complete is the press alliance in spreading these falsehoods that by constant repetition the average disinterested reader is led to accept deliberate falsification and imaginative assertion as truth.

As the son of the man, I must protest against such enormous misrepresentations.

First as to the charge that my father was a dictator. An investigation into the facts in Louisiana during his life will reveal indisputably that no man in American politics within the century had so much powerful opposition within his State and yet succeeded in winning enough elections to stay in power. His opponents pictured themselves as the righteous minority, but it was not right that bothered them. Their great concern for the preservation of decency, democracy, or what have you, reduced itself in the last analysis to a mighty indignation of the fact that he was taking taxes off the one-horse farmer and shifting them to the oil producer and the large corporation within the State; that he was reducing utility rates. The powerful vested interests in Louisiana and their spokesman press did not object to his giving free books to the school children, building a system of good roads and free bridges, homestead exemption from taxation for small home owners, building of a great State university, halving the number of illiterates. Ordinarily the wealthy and affluent in Louisiana would have been happy to see Huey Long bring such things to pass. What they objected to was that they were made to pay for all this. Taxes were placed on the severance of oil and other natural resources of the State. An income tax was passed. Taxes were placed on oil and gas, and horror of horrors, even on the business of refining oil.

If the Huey Long opposition were to have attacked him on the grounds that he was aiding the masses of the people of his State, improving the State generally, and all of this by the radical, yea, even bolshevik tactics of taxing those best able to pay or soaking the rich, their approach would have been foolish indeed. The masses would have surged to his defense. Far better to say that he had indelicate table manners, that he was a self-seeking, power-loving autocrat. Accuse the man of having no chivalry because he refused to commute the sentence of a wife who assisted in the brutal murder of her husband. Better yet, insinuate that he had designs on another man's wife. Accuse him of using high-handed tactics. The only thing I can recall the daily press missing was that it failed to imply that he snored in his sleep.

Such a campaign of steady and constant derogation could be effective. The laws permit a paper to print untruths about a public figure unless it can be established that the paper was in bad faith and well knew that the assertion was false. The defense of fair comment sometimes turns freedom of the press into freedom of libel insofar as public figures are concerned.

Except for the brief period of the 1 year in which Huey Long was elected Governor, during which a few papers supported him, his opposition included every daily newspaper in the State. He was the first Governor of the State ever to attempt to continue in public life in spite of their continuous attack, and the only one ever to succeed in it. They twisted his every statement, his every act. The fact that they could not defeat him was attributable only to the fact that he was able to convince the majority of the people that the attack was due to his program of taxing the vested interests for the benefit of the State and its masses. To the outside, the Louisiana press explained its failure to defeat him on the theory that the majority of the people of Louisiana were a mass of stupid illiterates in the hands of a rabble-rouser. There seems to be a code among gentlemen of the press that an outsider does not generally distrust the work of his fellow publisher. The disbeliever may want to get off a "white one" himself someday.

Surprisingly little is ever mentioned of his accomplishments. When he became governor he found his State deep in the muck and mire of backwardness and indifference. Finding an almost impossible highway system with 75 hard-surfaced miles; he constructed 2,000 miles of concrete highways and 1,000 miles of asphalt roads at an expense less than similar construction cost anywhere in the Nation. The State had few bridges over its streams, and many of them toll; he spanned every major stream with modern free bridges. When Huey Long succeeded in giving free school books to the school children, the enrollment in Louisiana public schools increased 20 percent. He provided natural-gas service to every population center in Louisiana. All of the State hospitals and institutions were modernized and their capacity increased more than 50 percent. Quality of improvement showed as the death rate in the New Orleans Charity Hospital fell from 4.1 percent to 2.8 percent despite a decline in per capita expenditure cost from $1.74 to $1.31. The enrollment at Louisiana State University was increased from 1,700 to approximately 8,000 students, the increase representing students who might not have had a college education but for the help that Huey Long's administration gave that institution. The charges of the Port of New Orleans were reduced 25 to 50 percent. The State penitentiary, which had cost the taxpayers $500,000 per year, was put on paying basis. These by no means constituted all of Huey Long's achievements but they are enough to cause a fair-minded man to understand why Huey Long was supported by the majority of the people of his State.

As to the charge that he was untrained, uneducated, lacking in understanding of the better things of life, I would rely upon the court records. It is a seldom-revealed fact that Huey Long was one of the most brilliant young lawyers of his time. I say young because his brilliance as an attorney began to show at about the age of 25 and he died at 42. His briefs and pleadings would do credit to the ablest practitioners before the American bar. Chief Justice Taft of the Supreme Court of the United States is reported to have said that Huey Long was the most brilliant young attorney ever to appear before him. Many laws of legislature, the first of their type, such as the severance tax or the tax on chain stores, were drawn by him and upheld in the United States Supreme Court notwithstanding the severest attack by the ablest attorneys employed by major concerns. As a Public Service Commissioner before the highest courts in the Nation he represented the Louisiana Public Service Commission on its major rate cases, and invariably won them. In speaking during campaigns, he purposely spoke with a down-to-earth simplicity, an avoidance of high-flown language such as would be expected of the average man of the community. This type speech was seized upon by his enemies to make him appear unlearned. Some imaginative writers today have him using language that would be an injustice to the most illiterate man in America. Let them search for common speech in his briefs and pleadings before the appellate courts of the Nation!

A momentous campaign was made to link his memory to the Louisiana scandals, which occurred years after his death. One of the few accusations never made of my father during his life was that of dishonesty, largely because both friend and enemy knew that he cared not for money other than his needs of the moment. He had the utmost confidence in his own ability to make money whenever he needed it and he felt that leaving large amounts of money to his children would make them worthless individuals and parasitic citizens. At his death his estate was not a lot larger than the amount he had accumulated before he rose to prominence. And that only because he was raising funds for a campaign at the time of his assassination.

After his death, however, his successors in power did not have the same aloofness from monetary temptation, but they were not alone in their greed. Numbers of his erstwhile enemies joyously came into the fold and got in on a good thing while it lasted. Daily newspapers which had so vehemently disapproved of Huey Long ran quadruple-sized issues congratulating the new Governor on his second month in office, his third month, etc. Huge full-page and full-spread ads carrying the new Governor's picture with the compliments of large corporations and State contractors added to the burden of the delivery boy. If anything was amiss, no one would have known of it. Not at least until the new Governor unwisely chose to divert the advertising to a newspaper of his own. Meanwhile a sales tax was replacing the tax on oil refining and the new State administration was burying the quarrels between Long and Roosevelt and getting itself on the good side of the Federal administration in the days of billion-dollar relief spending.

The scandals broke 4 years after Huey Long's death. Every story of an indictment had as much about the fact that the unfortunate man was a friend of the late Huey Long as the facts of the indictment. The term "Huey's heirs" was used by the press until it seemed to be one word. Yet, never was it shown that any alleged irregularity could even be traced back to a time when Huey Long was living. By this standard, everyone having known a man who committed an unlawful act would also be partially to blame. Every effort was made to convey the impression that Huey Long was in some way responsible for it all.

As for his share-our-wealth program, his enemies should be careful in their criticism lest the details of his plan become too well known. As a practical matter he never actually promised to give anything to anyone in his plan. He proposed to make it possible for people to get an education, a home, a good job, and a pension in old age. A large portion of his proposals have been adopted since his death. The present GI bill of rights together with the Social Security Act has for a large number of our people gone as far as anything he ever recommended. One of the few things remaining is to find a way to pay for what the Government is now doing. The paying, of course, reverts back to the old bugaboo of the privileged class. Huey Long wanted to place a capital-tax levy on all fortunes over $1,000,000. His theory was that the power of wealth in a few hands is a very bad thing for the Nation in a great many ways. One of them is that it leads to dishonest attempts to thwart the legislative and legal will of the majority of the people in a democracy. Sometimes this is done by bribing their public officials; more often by controlling the press.

And there you have the motive for a desire to make of Huey Long a Lucifer in the pageant of democracy. It is useless to attempt to make unpopular the idea of betterment of the poor man and the Nation by taxing where there is the best ability to pay. The end must be achieved by making the most altruistic of public servants appear to be Satanic characters. This is not necessary of the ordinary worthy who is incapable of note. But when a man comes along who is capable of achieving the utmost heights he must have special treatment. Murder is not enough. He must be maligned for all eternity. His praiseworthy deeds must be obscured or made to appear as the means of fostering fiendish purposes. He must live in history as a legendary character of the underworld.

I often wonder whether, from a niche in the heavens, an angel can look back onto this place of strife and turmoil to see what we earthlings are now doing. If my devoutly religious father could do just that, I know he would find comfort in the words of Jesus: "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven."

CONTINUANCE OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 46) continuing the authority for the investigation of the national-defense program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] to Senate Resolution 46. Under the unanimous-consent agreement when the Senate recessed Friday night the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the debate on the question now pending before the Senate is, in my opinion, being very closely followed and scrutinized by the press and the people of America. The issues involved should, I think, be made clear. The parliamentary situation is that the able Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] submitted a resolution proposing to set up again a special committee to investigate certain aspects of the war effort. Discussion ensued as to whether such a special committee should be constituted in view of the Reorganization Act which Congress recently enacted, and thereafter the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] offered an amendment to the resolution of the Senator from Maine. That amendment proposes, if I understand it correctly, that the investigatory task contemplated by the Senator from Maine to be performed by a special committee of the Senate shall be performed by a standing committee of the Senate, namely, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, let me make it clear at the outset that the question is not whether any aspect of the conduct of the war shall be investigated by the Senate or the House of Representatives or by both. No Senator on this side of the aisle has any objection to, nor would any Senator on this side of the aisle throw any obstruction into the path of the progress of such an investigation; indeed, it would make no difference if the minority should interpose objection, because a Republican Senator is chairman of each standing committee of the Senate, and each standing committee has a majority of Republican Senators in its membership. That statement applies, of course, to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which has to do with providing special funds out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and it applies to the Committee on Appropriations, which holds the purse strings of the Senate of the United States, and, of course, there is a comparable committee in the House. So the Democratic Senators, with respect to this matter, want it clearly understood that not only are they interposing no objection but they have no hesitation in agreeing to the most full and thorough and complete investigation of any aspects of the war effort.

I think here I might well call attention to the fact that in the conduct of an American war the Commander in Chief of the United States Army and Navy, who was also the President of the United States, showed himself to be first of all an American when he appointed to the high places of Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of War two eminent Americans with a long record of distinguished service in what was then the minority party, the Republican Party. So the Republican Secretary of War and the Republican Secretary of the Navy were principally responsible for the conduct of the war effort. But as I said, I wished to make it clear to the country that what we are saying here has no relationship whatever to any desire or intention to obstruct, delay, or hinder any aspect of an investigation which might touch any phase of the war effort.

The second point which I desire to make clear is that it is not merely a question as to which is the better investigating unit, a special committee of the Senate or a standing committee. I think much could be said in favor of the desirability of an investigation by a regular standing committee. I think Senators will recall from their experience that in the past as a general rule investigations by standing committees which have had legislative power and which could propose legislation to the Senate after the investigation have probably accomplished more substantial, material progress in the long run than have investigations by special committees. I think it might also be said that the standing committee usually costs less than a special committee. I believe that an examination of the files of the old Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would disclose that, generally speaking, special committees have had more numerous personnel, and that they have been paid higher salaries than has been true in the case of standing committees.

I think it will also be found that an element of sensationalism sometimes creeps into the work of a special committee, because of the peculiar psychology involved. Sometimes there is an element of politics, which seldom enters into the deliberations and functions of a standing committee. I believe that the standing committees of the Senate have made a record which will compare favorably with the record of special committees. If it were a question as to which was the better agency of the Senate to make inquiry upon any subject, our experience and knowledge would advise us that the standing committee is a more desirable, more efficient and, in the long run, more effective agency than the special committee for such investigative functions.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

I make that statement with peculiar reference to the recommendation of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress, which reads as follows:

> Legislative oversight by standing committees—recommendation: That the standing committees of both Houses be directed and empowered to carry on continuing review and oversight of legislation and agencies within their jurisdiction; that the power of subpena be given them and that the practice of creating special investigating committees be abandoned.

I believe that recommendation was embodied in the Reorganization Act. So in the case of the standing committee, for example, which investigates, we will say, the War Department, it has a continuing jurisdiction to supervise the functioning of the War Department. It does not end with a certain time, or with a certain Congress. The standing committee continues with each succeeding Congress. If some abuse in the keeping of accounts is discovered, or if some abuse in methods of procurement is found by a special committee, all the special committee can do, having no legislative power, is to publish the fact in the newspapers and file a report with the Senate, which will come to the Secretary as a bulky document which Senators will never have an opportunity to read. But before any legislative action can be taken to remedy the defect or correct the wrong, the Committee on Armed Services must take all that material, acquaint itself with it, assimilate it, draft legislative measures to counteract the evil, then consider the proposed legislation, hold hearings, and finally vote; and at last, if it acts favorably, recommend action to the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad the Senator has emphasized the last point. I think every Senator, and especially new Members of the Senate who are not familiar with the rules, should thoroughly understand that whatever recommendation the special committee might make in the way of legislation would have to go first to a standing committee. The standing committee, if it did its duty, would have to go over the material which had been assembled by the special committee before it could prepare and recommend intelligent legislation for the Congress.

Let me point out the further fact that it is a strict parliamentary rule that no special committee can be appointed unless it is predicated upon the theory that some legislation will be produced as a result of the investigation made. That is another extremely important point.

Let me say to the able Senator from Florida, while I am on my feet, that an inquiry to the counsel of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program discloses that not a single piece of legislation has been recommended by that committee during the past 18 months of its existence.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Supplementing the remarks of the Senator from Illinois and his inquiry to the Senator from Florida, let me point out that in this specific instance as to special committees that custom and rule was entirely disregarded. The question was not submitted to the respective standing committees. The rules, as well as the custom and tradition of years, were contravened. Why the rush? What is the motivation behind it all? Before we are through, I think we shall elucidate that subject on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If the Senator from Florida does not object, I should like to amplify the point made by the Senator from Illinois and the point being made by the Senator from Florida.

Previous to this time the Senate itself had organized in such a way that it anticipated that, instead of select committees being the general rule, as had been the case—a condition which the Joint Committee on Organization tried to overcome—they would be a very special exception.

The Senator from Florida has suggested that the Committee on Armed Forces could, in its ordinary procedure, appoint subcommittees to carry on an investigation. That has been done, as the Senator knows. But there is one other fact in regard to such committees as the old Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and others; and that is that the Senate itself saw the need for continuity between the legislative committees and the committees which have charge of more or less executive review. It was one of the rules of the Senate that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the ranking minority member of the Military Affairs Committee should sit with the Appropriations Committee whenever it was considering matters relating to the War Department. That was also true of the Navy Department and the State Department.

The fact is that the reorganization scheme did nothing new. It merely followed the usual practice of the Senate itself under its own rules up to that time. That is why the reorganization bill passed the Senate so overwhelmingly. Senators understood exactly what was being done.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a matter which he himself has been stressing when he stated the fact that standing committees of the Senate are continuing bodies. There is something in the new Reorganization Act which I think we should bear in mind as we consider this problem, and that is that the professional staffs of the standing committees are to be chosen for their peculiar fitness and qualifications for their work, without regard to political affiliations; it being the intention that those men on the staffs of the standing committees shall continue in their positions, even though there be a change in the political complexion of the committee, giving a permanency and continuity to the standing committees which no special committee could possibly have.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator makes a very good point, and I thank him for it.

If an investigation were made by the Committee on Armed Services certainly one or more of the four experts attached to that committee would follow the investigation through all its ramifications, maybe through many months of hearings, and, for aught we know, perhaps in many parts of the world. One or more experts would be chosen for proficiency on a nonpartisan basis, as the able Senator has pointed out, selected not by the chairman, as is ordinarily true in the case of a special committee, but by a majority of the whole committee; and such staff members would follow the inquiry all the way through its many ramifications and labyrinthine course, and they would be in position to advise the committee technically and fully with reference to all the aspects of the investigation, whereas, as the Senator has made clear, in the case of a special committee, unless by accident some member of a special committee staff should happen to be chosen as an expert—which is not likely, I imagine, when an investigation is conducted by a special committee—the personnel that conducted the investigation would probably never have any contact with the standing committee before which the matter would later have to come if any legislative results were to be achieved by the inquiry.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, following out the inescapable logic of the conclusions of the Senator from Florida, let me cite a very concrete case: Let us suppose that the special committee is continued; let us suppose it does a good job; let us suppose that as a result of its investigation it makes numerous recommendations for remedial legislation; nevertheless under the terms of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine the special committee would go out of existence in about a year. Let us assume that about the time it would go out of existence it should conclude that certain legislation ought to be put on the statute books to prevent a recurrence of the very conditions that had caused it to enter into the investigation.

I assume that inasmuch as it deals with Army and Navy purchases or with expenditures in the executive departments its recommendations would probably go in part to either or both of the two standing committees so that they could carry on hearings and gradually find a remedial policy to be incorporated into law.

We would then have the situation of the standing committees making the same inquiry all over again into the background of the matter in order that they might know the reasons for the recommendations and have sufficient comprehension of the facts to write a full and accurate and compensatory remedial provision into the law. So why not give it all to the standing committee in the first place?

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator and it seems to me that the logic of what he says is unanswerable.

I was about to say that under the rules of the Senate a standing committee can invite a comparable committee from the House of Representatives to conduct a joint inquiry, without a special resolution by either body, because that is permissible under the rules. But that is not true in the case of a special committee. If the special committee were to make this inquiry it would simply be a Senate committee and would have no jurisdiction unless it received specific authority from the Senate to have joint meetings with a corresponding committee of the House; and if the House did not set up such a committee, there would be no House committee with which the Senate committee could meet. However, if the inquiry were made by the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, it could invite joint inquiries and joint deliberations with a House committee, and Congress could accomplish legislatively.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As the Senator from Florida knows. the Senator from Maryland has been a Member of the Committee on Appropriations for a long time. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that at the very beginning of the war it became necessary to try to throw around appropriations and the letting of contracts all the provisions that reasonably could be conceived of, with the object of saving Government money and to cut down unconscionable profits. As a result, we had attorneys for the War Department, the Navy Department, and other interested Government agencies finally work out a formula, and while it was not efficacious, in many instances an attempt was made to do what will have to be done in light of any future investigations which any standing committee might conduct, because, if there have been unreasonable profits made out of the war, if there have been waste and extravagance and inefficiency in the methods which were followed in the last war, then it stands to reason that the investigation, except as to criminal aspects developed, will have come to naught unless remedial and corrective legislation is written on the statute books by Congress. Out of his experience on the Committee on Appropriations the Senator from Maryland would like to make to the Senator from Florida this observation, that had we done that as a result of the investigation of World War I, instead of waiting until World War II, we might have saved the Government a great deal of money.

Obviously the committee that conducts this investigation ought to be a standing committee which can recommend legislation to make sure that in the future, in time of great haste and expediency, which accompanies war, the Government's money will not be subjected to unnecessary expenditure.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the able Senator from Maryland for his observations.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I should like to read into the RECORD excerpts from a press release from the New Council of American Business, Inc., and then to ask unanimous consent that the entire press release be printed in the RECORD. I do this simply to show that the arguments which have been made here on the floor have not been lost on the American people and that this discussion has served a very useful purpose. I ask that the press release be printed at the end of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR. The statement, in part, reads as follows:

> The New Council of American Business, representing independent businessmen throughout the country, is interested in the present discussion before the Senate on the resolution to continue the Small Business Committee.

Of course, that is not the fact, but this question of special commitees is tied up in one bundle. I quote further:

> Moreover, the debate in the Senate has disclosed that under the Congressional Reorganization Act, the standing committees of the Senate will be more effective for legislative purposes than will be any special commitees.
> The New Council of American Business does not believe that a special committee of such limited scope as provided in Senate Resolution 20 will adequately serve the pressing needs of independent business.

It goes on further to urge that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee study and report to the Senate legislation to provide credit assistance to all business, and it points out that the standing committees will have authority to recommend legislation and report it to the Senate.

(For complete press release see exhibit 1 at the conclusion of Mr. PEPPER'S speech.)

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Idaho, and his contribution gives me a chance to reiterate that it is not the objectives of the resolution we are opposing. As I have said, none of us has any desire to interfere in any way with the most thorough, fair, and full investigation of any aspect of the war effort. By all means we also favor a continuing inquiry by the Senate into the problems of small business.

I had the honor to be for a year or two recently past a member of the Senate Small Business Committee. A splendid job was done by that committee, which was headed by the able Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. If I thought that investigation would be halted by the rejection of the resolution proposed by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who, I believe, is the author of the Small Business Committee resolution, then I should be very reluctant to oppose it, but we already know that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, under the able chairmanship of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], is prepared, as soon as the pending matter is settled by the Senate, to designate a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency to deal exclusively with the question of small business problems.

We also know that there are two other committees of the Senate which have jurisdiction which might affect the subject of small business. One is the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction over interstate and foreign commerce generally, which might, of course, embrace small business. The third standing committee which has jurisdiction is the Committee on the Judiciary. Subhead No. 7, defining the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, is as follows:

> Protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. McFARLAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. IVES in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. PEPPER. I believe the Senator from Illinois rose first, and I yield to him.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the able Senator from Florida whether anything in the proposal of another resolution to create a special committee for the investigation of small business problems, which we will discuss later, would keep the Committee on Banking and Currency from proceeding and doing the same job, as I understand they expect to do.

Mr. PEPPER. On the contrary, I am informed that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has already formulated a purpose, and the names of the personnel, to constitute a standing subcommittee of his committee to investigate the problems of small business.

Mr. LUCAS. If I may, I should like to observe further that in my opinion—and I think the able Senator will agree with me—what is true with respect to the Small Business Committee is true with respect to the committee which is now under discussion. The committee headed by the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, has untold power, under the Reorganization Act, and in my judgment, the Senator from Vermont, would have a clear right to proceed to set up a subcommittee to do the very thing the special committee is now asking to be empowered to do under the resolution we are discussing.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly; the able Senator is absolutely correct. There are two committees, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and the Committee on Armed Services, which have jurisdiction over this field, and could carry on the investigation without, of course, any resolution on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I make the further point that even if the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments wanted to carry on, notwithstanding the Senate saw fit to set up the proposed special investigating committee, it could do so, and duplicate the work being performed by the special committee.

Mr. PEPPER. That is so, without any question whatever. There is, of course, nothing in the resolution which in any sense impairs the authority of a standing committee of the Senate which has jurisdiction over the subject matter. I am glad the able Senator from Illinois emphasized that point.

I now yield to the able Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I was about to add another committee, a fourth committee, as having jurisdiction of the subject matter embraced in the resolution covering small business. I refer to the Committee on Public Lands. Take the subject of mining, for instance. That should be the subject of a continuing study, which should not be stopped by the death of any committee. It should go on indefinitely.

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad the Senator made that suggestion. I had not thought of the Committee on Public Lands, but the Senator's statement is obviously correct; and there are other committees which will touch the perimeter of the small business resolution in some way.

Mr. President, it has already been pointed out, but let me again, for the adequacy of the record, refer to the personnel of the Armed Services Committee and the personnel of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The chairman of the Armed Services Committee is the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], who has been a long-time member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

The next Member is the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I believe he also in the past was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Then there is the able Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], who, as I recall, was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the past. The next is the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], then the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN]. Those are the Republican members of the Committee and would the able Senator from Maine, who is the author of the pending resolution contemplating a special committee, wish to say that that distinguished group of Republican Senators, many of them with experience on the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs during the war, are not qualified to carry on the most thorough and effective investigation of any aspect of the war effort?

On the Democratic side are the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK]. I am inclined to think that every one of those Senators was on either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs during the progress of the war, and surely no one would suggest that there is an abler and a better informed group of Senators than the members of the minority I have named.

The members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the chairman of which is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], are the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], and the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES].

Those are all able, distinguished men. I believe it has already been pointed out that a number of those Senators have been governors of their States. I know the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] was the governor of his State, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] was governor, as well as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] has been a distinguished circuit judge. The Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] has rendered distinguished service as a State senator in his State. So they are all men of experience in public life, and, of course, of unquestioned integrity.

On the Democratic side are the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR].

So, Mr. President, undoubtedly no one would question the competency and the responsibility and the integrity of the personnel of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

As I said a while ago, obviously the objective of the resolution is the passage of legislation, for in the concluding part we find the following:

Provided further, That the committee shall report to the Senate the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, as soon as practicable, but in no event later than January 31, 1948, at which time all powers and duties conferred upon the committee shall terminate.

Unless the able Senator from Maine and the other proponents of the resolution do not really mean to end the committee on January 31, 1948, unless they really intend that it shall be a continuing committee which will be in continuous competition with the standing committee, they are asking the Senate, for all practical purposes, to restrain the hand of certain of its regular standing committees, and entrust for about a year to a special committee the task of investigating certain aspects of the war effort.

As already pointed out, the special committee would go out of existence on a certain date. In all probability their staff would not be available to the standing committees; the personnel of the special committee would not be the same, I dare say, as the personnel of the standing committees; so to a large degree all there would be would be a great deal of newspaper publicity, a great many sensational headlines, and a bulky volume or many volumes of testimony taken in many places and dumped into the lap of the Secretary of the Senate, and, by him, into the lap of a standing committee, there to repose until it accumulated dust in some already crowded corner of the committee room.

On the other hand, Mr. President, if the inquiry were made by a standing committee, there would be a personnel acquainted with the subject matter; there would be members of the committee who were familiar with the objective and the accomplishments of the inquiry, and they would be anxious to put into the form of legislation the recommendations they might have determined to make as a result of the inquiry.

So, as I said, Mr. President, if the question were the matter of determining which is the better qualified, a special committee or standing committee, to make inquiries of this sort, in ordinary times, at least, I believe that the experience of the Senate with special committees and standing committees would lead the Senate to prefer the use of its standing committees.

Let me advert here to the practice that has been growing up in the Senate, anyway, to use a subcommittee of a regular committee, even when funds had to be obtained from the Senate itself to make possible effective functioning by the subcommittee. I am thinking particularly of the Military Affairs Committee, which I know had one or more subcommittees that made very creditable investigations, and I think accomplished a great deal of good.

I am thinking of a subcommittee headed by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], which went into the question of cartels and other subjects. There were other subcommittees of the Committee on Military Affairs that functioned almost like special Senate committees during the war, but they were always amenable to the committee chairman; they were always in association with the other members of the standing committee, and there was continuity in what the committee itself did.

If I may mention another case, there was a subcommittee of which I had the honor to be chairman, the Committee on Wartime Health and Education, which was authorized by the Senate. I did not request in the resolution that the Senate appoint a special committee; on the contrary, I requested that a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, which has jurisdiction over the subject of public health, be the subcommittee to make the inquiry. I am sure from experience that we were in the long run able to accomplish more, because that was a subcommittee of a standing committee, than if we had been a special committee which had no further association, after the end of the life of the special committee, with the regular Committee on Education and Labor.

As it is now, several of us who were members of that subcommittee remain as members of the standing committee, and we are able to carry on with continuity the inquiry and the effort we first made through the instrumentality of the subcommittee.

As I said, Mr. President, there does not seem to be the psychology of sensationalism in the standing committee that there is in the special committee.

On Friday in my remarks I pointed out an instance when there was printed in a magazine article information the publication of which the full committee had not authorized, which they obtained in executive session from an anonymous intelligence officer, who testified, according to the article, before the Special Senate War Investigating Committee.

I also pointed out the report that was released by a member of the special committee, through the Republican National Committee; and yet it had never been released by the full committee; it was not a full committee report. It was prepared by a staff member, and in the opinion of one of the distinguished members of the committee that it should be made public, he made it public through the instrumentality of the Republican National Committee, a few days before the election. It certainly gave the impression to some observers that an effort was being made to use this material to influence the results of the election.

It is seldom, according to my knowledge, that we have a record of that kind of experience with a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. Undoubtedly, the Republican National Committee did not release the statement of the Inspector General of the Army, who denominated as false, and completely false, the statement of the "colonel," or whoever he was, whose blast was handed out just before election.

Does the Senator from Florida know it to be true that the Inspector General, who went over these same allegations by the so-called colonel, the intelligence officer, repudiated every one of them?

Mr. PEPPER. I did not know that, but it is likely that such a thing can happen, after sensational testimony is given, which, when it is sifted and examined by impartial and responsible sources, is found to be at least unreliable, if not designed for some other purpose.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield further to the Senator from Connecticut, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. McMAHON. I understand, on reliable authority, that that is the case, that the testimony in the instance referred to was repudiated by the Inspector General of the Army.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator for the information he gives to me and the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Maine, from reliable information which he has received, thinks that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON], undoubtedly in all good faith, has taken in a little too much territory in his summary, as the facts will reveal that the chief one criticized by the "colonel" was very promptly relieved from duty, a general in our services overseas, who was sent home. Whether or not that was because of the charges or for other reasons has never been explained.

The facts will also reveal that several other changes in personnel were made, which seemed to be directed to a solution of the problems presented by the one who had made the charges before our committee; that our committee had immediately submitted to the War Department a full transcript; and that 3 months elapsed between the time when the charges were made and the time when any public reports were made thereon.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield for a question directed to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if it is not true that when the War Department finally released its comments upon these allegations which were made in executive session, they were a complete disclaimer of the charges that were made by the "colonel."

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the Senator from Florida yield further?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is not my impression. Of course, the charges were of so comprehensive a character, I am sure, that not even the Inspector General would say there was no basis for them. It was entirely a matter of estimating their significance. As a matter of fact, many of the charges which were made had already been publicized by the War Department itself in earlier reports regarding black marketing and other irregularities of our troops in the army of occupation. The estimate of the amount of such activities and their significance is a matter of opinion, of course. But, as Senators well know, very high officers were tried for black marketing. Whether that reached such a point that it constituted a reflection on the higher officers in charge was the problem which was presented, and it still remains.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question, with the permission of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to ask this question: Did the Senator from Maine, upon receiving in executive session the allegations of this officer, submit them to the War Department and obtain the War Department's reply, before they were released through the Republican National Committee?

Mr. BREWSTER. No. There was a delay of 3 months without a reply, which seemed an indication of a certain attitude, as has previously been stated by the Senator from Maine. A month elapsed, after the charges were made and were submitted to the War Department, but during that time no action whatsoever was taken, insofar as our records showed. At the end of that time, the committee met again, and again the matter was pressed. It was then unanimously determined by the committee to send the investigator overseas, but with the understanding that there would be no further report until after the election.

It was at that point that it seemed to me that the matter was being delayed without necessity and without warrant, and it was following that that the releases were made.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, the fact that the election was coming on entered into the calculations of the junior Senator from Maine, I assume.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield further to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The idea of the election did not enter the thoughts of the Senator from Maine. It so happened that the election in the State of Maine had already been held. But when a month had elapsed and still no action had been taken, which was most extraordinary in the experience of our committee, the subtle and sinister thought did intrude itself upon the mind of the Senator from Maine that possibly the matter was being delayed for purposes which would not invite full disclosure. It seems as if the people of the United States had some rights in the matter, and from that time the action which has been a subject of discussion here was taken.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida further yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. In other words, the Senator from Maine tells us that, as he puts it, the sinister thought did occur to him that this matter was being sidetracked; and thereupon, in order to bring it out into the open, he gave the country the benefit of the matters which had been divulged in executive session. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether he communicated with the Secretary of War before he gave out this confidential report which had been received in executive session.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Maine, through the committee, had communicated this matter to the Secretary of War 4 weeks before the second meeting of the committee, and there was a further delay of 4 weeks before it was released.

Mr. McMAHON. Did the Senator from Maine indicate to the Secretary of War that he was going to release it?

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator from Maine did not.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I was just saying that sometimes, perhaps without intending it, an element of sensationalism enters into the work of special committees. I have already read the reference in the Liberty magazine article which was prepared by the distinguished Senator from Maine, and appeared in the issue of November 9, 1946. The heading, which appears in big red streamers is, "Is scandal brewing in Germany?" The article states that it was prepared by the Senator from Maine. At the bottom, also in large red streamers, appears the following:

A sensational report of grave American misconduct in the Reich has been placed before the Mead committee. Senator BREWSTER reveals its ominous contents, and calls for immediate investigation.

In the first two sentences we find the following:

Grave conditions exist in the American occupied zone of Germany, according to information received by the Special War Investigating Committee. An intelligence officer of responsible rank and experience gave it as his considered judgment that the German troops occupying France had made a better record in their personal contacts with the population than have the American troops occupying Germany.

Mr. President, had the distinguished and able Senator from Maine reflected upon the subject I do not believe he, an eminent Senator and a patriot, would have given currency to the statement of a single intelligence officer without giving his name—a statement which gave to the gullible reader the impression that the behavior of the hordes of Hitler, the evil Nazis, in dealing with the people of subjugated and subjected France, was better, as an occupying army, than the treatment of the people of Germany by the American troops of occupation. I do not believe that a standing committee or the special committee, if it itself ever acted and if it had reflected upon the seriousness of that accusation, would have disparaged and discredited the American Army by stating that its conduct compared badly with that of the German Army upon conquered France's soil. Yet, Mr. President, as I have said, that appears to be one of the things which creep into the special committee because of a sort of peculiar psychology of sensationalism which seems to accompany the special committee.

On Friday afternoon I read here on the floor of the Senate a sensational headline which appeared in the Washington Evening Star, over the name of Mr. J. A. O'Leary, an eminent reporter of that newspaper. The article stated:

Mr. President, I have before me now the Boston (Mass.) Herald, of January 15, 1947. It contains an article by W. E. Mullins. The headline is:

BREWSTER lashes two-billion-profit "fix."

The article states:

Maine's tenacious Senator OWEN BREWSTER firmly believes that greedy American war profiteers pillaged the Government for nearly $2,000,000,000 on a single phase of lend-lease.

Subsequently the writer of the article ties in that statement with the desire of the Senator from Maine to continue the special committee. The Senator from Maine is quoted as follows:

We have a staff of 30 reliable and competent investigators. We have lots of material. We have names, dates, companies, sums. I hope we can give this information in an orderly, legal manner to the American people.

Mr. President, that is a fine thing, and the Senator from Maine is to be commended for his desire to ferret out anyone who has done anything in connection with the war which is either illegal or contrary to good public policy. But, Mr. President, day after day we see statements such as that coming from the special committee, and they confirm the impression that there is a tendency toward sensationalism in the special committee; whereas the regular committee would simply go about its job of getting the facts, and, after ascertaining them, recommend to the Senate legislation of a type which would cure such abuses, and, if possible, would prevent their recurrence in the future.

So I say that I think, if all of us reflect upon our experience in the Senate with special committees, as compared to the standing committees, we will vote for the functioning of the standing committee as compared to the special committee.

I said in the first place, Mr. President, that this is not a question of stopping an inquiry into any aspect of the war. It is not a question of preventing the making of an inquiry about the problems of small business, because for several years I was a member of the Small Business Committee, and I wish to see its work continued. It has done a great deal of good. It is not a question of whether we prefer a standing committee or a special committee as an agency of the Senate to make the inquiry. The fundamental question involved here is one of the integrity of the reorganization of Congress. It is a question as to whether the Congress, which has excited such high hope in the country that we have become a body new in technique and new in spirit, will, before the month of January has passed, lapse back into the old ways of doing things, ways from which we departed by the Reorganization Act itself. That act took effect just at the beginning of this Congress. Many Senators made sacrifices in committee chairmanships or in seniority on committees in order that we might have a Congress which could more perfectly serve the interests of the people of the United States. Furthermore, Mr. President, the Reorganization Act certainly imposed upon us certain burdens, but it has given us unmistakable benefits. It has raised our salaries, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has emphasized, from $10,000 a year to $15,000 a year. It gave each of us in the Senate an administrative assistant in our offices, and he will draw a salary of $10,000 a year. It has added to the staff of the legislative counsel's office, in order that better advice in respect to legislation may be accorded us than we had before. It has added hundreds of thousands of dollars of appropriation to the Library of Congress so that the Legislative Reference Section there might be better staffed and so that we might have access to data which would help us to serve the people of America.

All that, Mr. President, we have done for ourselves, and the people of the country have applauded it almost with unanimity. The people have said, "We want Members of Congress to receive decent compensation. We want them to have adequate staffs. We want them to be able to draft legislation in a competent manner. We want technical data to be within their reach. But we want them to use the greater amount of money to the end that better government may be assured the people of America. Yet, Mr. President, in the very beginning of this plan, in the very first month of its life, Senators come on the floor and say, "Oh, we will keep our $15,000 a year; we will keep our administrative assistants at $10,000 a year each; we will keep the personnel of the legislative counsel's office; yes, we will cling to the additional appropriations for the Library of Congress and other advantages, and to the retirement provision."

Today Members of Congress have retirement benefits such as are available, aside from the armed services, to no other branch of the Government. We passed a law and provided a retirement system which gives us security in our old age at a lower rate than the ordinary civil-service employees of the United States Government pay, but the people have not objected to that. The people say, "Very well, we will recognize that it is in the interest of public service by public men that they not be frightened of the time when they shall die in the poorhouse, or fall, as one ex-Senator did, on the streets of an American city from hunger." They say, "Let Members of Congress not be afraid to do what they deem to be right in the Halls of the people's Congress." And some of us now say, "Yes, we will keep all the benefits of the act, but we cannot make the sacrifice of giving up the right of exploiting a special committee. We are going to ask for more special committees again, and spend more money, when we already have standing committee staffs which can do the job, or the legislative counsel's office, or can receive aid from the Library of Congress so the standing committees can do the job. We are going to transgress upon the jurisdiction of the standing committees." I suspect many people will think that the primary purpose of the present move, because it is contemplated for only a year, is not to get the job done, but to be able to use the instrument of the special committee perhaps to make political capital which could not be availed of through the instrumentality of the standing committee.

So, Mr. President, I say that the fundamental issue involved before the Senate is the integrity of the Reorganization Act. Are we going to emasculate it in its very youth and infancy or are we going to maintain it and support it and make it stronger as the days and the years pass by?

Mr. President, I have here the debate in the Senate when the reorganization bill was here under consideration. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked of the able chairman of the Reorganization Committee, of which I happened to have the honor to be a member—and this appears on page 6394 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6 of last year——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. PEPPER. Oh, do not bother. The absence of a quorum, Mr. President, emphasizes the point I have previously made.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THYE in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I cannot help but observe, as does the Senator from Illinois, the almost complete absence of Senators from the floor of the Senate. It is true it is during their lunch hour, and Senators must eat, which reminds me of a proposal heretofore made by the Senator from Florida. One of the things sought to be accomplished by the Reorganization Act was to enable Senators to be on the floor of the Senate when important debates were going on. The argument the Senator from Florida is making is important. To my mind, it is unanswerable. Regardless of his wishes, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I hope my distinguished friend will withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I simply wish to express my concurrence in what the Senator from New Mexico has said. Members should, to the limit of their time and opportunity, be present on the floor of the Senate when debate is going on. I share the views expressed by the Senator from New Mexico in that respect.

Mr. PEPPER. I am very grateful to the characteristically kind and generous and wise majority leader, and this gives me an opportunity to refer again to the suggestion I made, which the Senator from New Mexico has been kind enough to recall. Here it is 1:25 p. m. We know that it is the general practice of Senators to wait around on the floor until around 1 o'clock and then go downstairs to eat in the dining room. Much of the time we all do it when we are not occupied on the floor. We must eat at sometime. There will be some Senators speaking from now until the Senate recesses at the end of the day. I would not want to interrupt a single Senator and cause him to jump up from his table, come running up to the Senate Chamber, stick his head in the door, wave to the clerk, wait until his name is called, and then go downstairs and finish his lunch. So a calling of the roll would not accomplish anything at this time except to interrupt Senators who are eating their lunch. When the roll call has been completed they will return to the dining room because maybe they have guests eating with them in the dining room, the meals may be on the table, they must eat at sometime, and this is the ordinary time when Senators eat their lunch. But the situation emphasizes the point I ventured to suggest the other day of carrying out the spirit of the Reorganization Act in having sessions of the Senate on days when there are no committee meetings; and also there ought to be a time when Senators could go to lunch while the Senate was not in session, and come back to the floor before the Senate reconvenes. What is a Senator who has the floor going to do? Either speak to a few kind Senators who are good enough to remain, or say, "Well, there are no Senators present; perhaps I might as well conclude my remarks." I certainly have no feeling that anything I can say is as good as anything absent Senators can eat in the Senate dining room. So I hope that my kind friend the Senator from New Mexico will withdraw his suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. The matter under discussion, absence from the Chamber of Senators, and the necessity that we all eat—I myself have just returned from lunch, so I cannot complain—is important, so much so that the majority leader has just now reminded me that this matter of the possibility of having a recess for a lunch hour received consideration by the joint committee when we were discussing the Reorganization Act. I am sorry that the suggestion was not adopted or a plan in some form worked out. But Mr. President, in the light of what the Senator from Florida has said, against my will I am overly persuaded not to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator from New Mexico very much.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I merely want to express myself on the same subject as has the Senator from New Mexico. The Reorganization Act has certainly not brought about all the reforms in connection with reorganization that are necessary and which I hope some time it will be possible be bring about. I hope we may be able to begin the session of the Senate at a time after the lunch hour or a sufficient time before so that a recess may be taken for the lunch hour, and there may be full attendance of Senators on the floor which debate always deserves.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much. I want my friend the Senator from New Mexico to know that I appreciate what he has said.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may make a statement respecting the same matter?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. It was pointed out that we might if we wished violate our American custom and consider following the British practice of holding evening sessions. That is a matter which also should be brought into consideration, I believe.

Mr. PEPPER. I thoroughly agree. I have noticed, and I am sure it has been the observation of the Senator from Maine, that evening sessions are usually the best attended sessions we have.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Has the Senator from Florida put his suggestion for earlier sessions of the Senate, with noon recess, into any resolution calling for a change in the rules?

Mr. PEPPER. I made it only as a suggestion on the floor; but probably it would be well to incorporate it in the form of a formal resolution.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest that if the Senator expects any action he should put it in the form of a resolution; and if he decides to do so and the language is appropriate, the Senator from Oregon will be very happy to join in the support of such a resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. I am very grateful to the Senator from Oregon. The Senator from Oregon is always an effective force on any side. I should be honored to have his support. I think I shall try to reduce the suggestion to the form of a resolution.

Mr. President, I was about to read the colloquy which took place in the Senate between the able chairman of the Special Committee on the Organization of Congress and the present distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, the

Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. On page 6394 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 6, 1946, I find the following:

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question with reference to section 126 of the bill which reads:

"No bill or resolution, and no amendment to any bill or resolution, to establish or to continue a special or select committee, including a joint committee, shall be received or considered in either the Senate or the House of Representatives."

My first question to the Senator is this: If that were the present law, would it have been impossible for the Senate to have set up, for example, a special committee to deal with the subject of atomic energy?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; except as the Senate has suspended the rules for that purpose. While the Senator was at lunch today at the White House, I discussed this matter with other persons. It does not, of course, affect any joint committees which may now be in existence, such as, for example, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. It would not affect the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. However, if we were confronted today with this rule, and the subject of atomic energy suddenly loomed on the horizon, and it was felt to be necessary to create a select or a special committee of either the Senate or of the other House, or a joint committee of both Houses to consider that highly important subject, it would be necessary for the Senate and the House, if the committee were to be a joint committee, to suspend their rules or, if the committee were to be a special committee of either House, it would be necessary for the House concerned to suspend its rules.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the purpose of section 126 is to frown, so far as it can, upon that method of approach to legislation?

I invite attention to the following words of Senator La Follette:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The committee came to the conclusion that if we could reorganize the committees, and staff them adequately, it would be in the interest of orderly and efficient legislative procedure to have the standing committees or subcommittees thereof conduct studies and investigations, because, after all, if legislation is to flow from these activities, normally the select or joint committees do not have legislative power, and it is often necessary for the standing committee to thrash over much of the straw and the wheat that has been thrashed over by a special or select joint committee, as the case may be.

However, I express it as my opinion, for whatever it may be worth, that at any time when a matter of great consequence, such as atomic energy was when it first became a subject for consideration, and still is, for that matter, I have no doubt that the Senate and the House would suspend the rules to meet a situation of that kind.

The reason why we have drawn this tight ban is that we know full well, from long experience, that unless there is a ban, to obviate which very extraordinary action such as suspending the rules is required, we will not check the tendency to appoint select committees of both the House and Senate, and joint select committees, of which we now have a considerable number in both Houses, and I anticipate that as time goes on, unless the action here proposed is taken, they will multiply in geometric progression.

There are three things in that statement to which I wish to call attention. The first is the prohibition of special or select committees in the reorganization bill as it came to the Senate and the House from the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress. The second is the fact that the recommendation prohibiting special committees was adopted by the Senate; and, thereafter, had the House concurred—and I shall discuss that point—it would have been impossible to have had a special committee in the Senate, except by waiver of the rule, which requires a two-thirds vote.

Senator La Follette stated the reason for the ban, which would require a two-thirds vote instead of a majority vote to create a special committee. He stated that the danger was that if we did not require a two-thirds vote the Senate would yield to the temptation to establish special committees, and the first thing we knew they would multiply in geometric progression.

I have before me page after page of the hearings before the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress. Those who appeared before the committee stated their reasons for the suggestion to abolish special committees, except by a two-thirds vote of the Senate in case of a real emergency.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I invite the Senator's attention to the very obvious fact that the special committee which studied the situation and wrote the reorganization bill realized that the act itself would have defects which would appear after it went into operation. Apparently with that in mind they wrote into the law, as it relates to the duties of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the following provision:

Such committee shall have the duty * * * of evaluating the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

In other words, when they wrote the act they realized that it would prove to be imperfect, and perhaps inadequate. There are already indications that they were correct in that assumption. So they made provision for a study of the effect of the act itself upon our legislative work.

As chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I believe that this is an important part of the work which will devolve upon the committee. I think I am safe in saying that we will undertake a study of the effect of the Reorganization Act on the legislative branch. It will require some time. The defects in the act will not be apparent all at once. It already appears that certain committees are overwhelmed with the duties which have been placed upon them, and it may be that we have streamlined the Congress to an undue extent in reducing the number of committees to 15, although it was perfectly obvious to all of us that 33 committees were entirely too many.

What I wish to point out is that the act itself provides an orderly manner for the creation of new committees, for evaluating the effects of the act, and for making recommendations to the Congress for its revision. It is our purpose to comply with that part of our duties.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator. Everyone who is familiar with the distinguished record of the able Senator from Vermont must know that he will preside over his committee with integrity and distinction. I am glad to have him call attention to the point which he has mentioned.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. While the Senator is discussing this point, I wish to mention a matter with which I am sure he is entirely familiar, and which he probably intends to discuss. I hope he will amplify the discussion, because in my opinion the point is important. I refer to the difference between the method of handling the pending resolution and the cautious and careful method prescribed by the Reorganization Act.

The Senator will recall, I am sure, the provision in the new law that the Committee on Rules and Administration shall not consider any manner of substantive law unless it has been first considered by the standing committee having jurisdiction. I submit that the resolution extending the authority of the special committee is a substantive matter. It was not referred to any standing committee. I am not critical of the Presiding Officer, but as shown by the RECORD there was not even a unanimous-consent agreement that it go to the Committee on Rules and Administration. The Senator from Maine merely presented his resolution and the Chair referred it to the Committee on Rules and Administration. Thereafter, as the Senator recalls, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] ably explained, as a member of the committee, how the committee met one day without any notice that these resolutions were to be considered, and after a brief discussion voted to report them favorably, although the minority members of the committee were not notified that they were to be acted upon, and when they asked for time to give the matter consideration it was denied them.

Mr. PEPPER. That is my understanding of the facts, and I am very glad that the Senator has brought the situation to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the act is plain as regards the reference of bills and resolutions to the two committees, the Committee on Rules and Administration and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, because it states that the Committee on Rules and Administration shall have jurisdiction of matters relating to parliamentary rules and floor and gallery rules.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is charged with evaluating the effect of the entire law upon the work of the legislative branch of the Government. The Committee on Rules and Administration unquestionably has jurisdiction of the matter of parliamentary rules and floor and gallery rules as well as a great many other duties.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the Senator is correct. It is a very serious question as to whether it was appropriate for the Committee on Rules and Administration in this particular case to recommend a special committee without any consideration having been given to the subject by any standing committee of the Senate, especially in view of the fact that the jurisdiction of the special committee necessarily impinged upon and overlapped the jurisdiction of at least two standing committees of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. President, the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress clearly contemplated, when it made its recommendation, and the Senate clearly contemplated when it adopted the joint committee's recommendation banning special committees, that there should be no special committee except by a two-thirds vote of the Senate waiving the rule banning special committees.

Senator La Follette, the able chairman of the committee, made it clear in the debate between June 4 and June 10, when the reorganization bill passed the Senate, that if the Senate were confronted with the need for further committee study or jurisdiction it could do one of two things without a two-thirds vote, but only by a majority vote.

First, it could extend the jurisdiction of a standing committee. If there should be any question in the mind of the able Senator from Maine [Mr BREWSTER] or of any other Senator that any of the standing committees of the Senate, the Committee on Rules and Administration or some other committee, does not have adequate jurisdiction to investigate any aspect of the war, all he would have to do would be to submit a simple resolution to amend and enlarge the jurisdiction of a standing committee, have it go to the Committee on Rules and Administration, let that committee report it to the Senate by a majority vote, and let the Senate by a majority vote, if it cares to do so, adopt it, and the whole difficulty will be solved. The Senate still has its standing committees, with the same Senators, the same expert staffs of four, and the same expert groups of six clerks each. Incidentally, members of the staff are paid a base salary of $8,000 a year, which, in gross I suppose, would be at least $10,000.

Under the Reorganization Act, every standing committee of the Senate is authorized by majority vote to name four staff experts at $10,000 a year gross, and to name six clerks who may be paid up to $8,000 a year. I believe that would be about $10,000 a year gross. There is personnel available to every standing committee of the Senate without creating a special committee, hiring any more persons, or spending any more money.

So the first method, without any reference to a special committee, is to enlarge the jurisdiction of a standing committee if there is some problem that is not covered by the jurisdiction of the standing committees outlined in the Reorganization Act.

The second way that the Senate may meet the problem is to create a new standing committee. For example, if the Senate thinks there should be a standing committee to investigate the war, if that is the proposal of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] let it be a standing committee. All he has to do is to submit a resolution to add one more standing committee and have the resolution go to the Committee on Rules and Administration. If it is favorably reported and adopted by a majority of the Senate, the committee is created. Then the Republican side will have a majority on the committee and will have the chairmanship of it. I dare say that if it can show reason for such a new committee there will be no objection on this side of the aisle. There, again, the jurisdiction of the Senate is adequately expressed. But the Senator from Maine does not propose either of those courses in harmony with the Reorganization Act. He proposes starting again the old vicious practice of creating special committees. Yet the Senator from Maine himself, when he testified before the committee, made the following statement. I am reading from page 231 of the hearings before the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of Congress. I quote:

> I think Congress must function primarily through the responsible committees, and my emphasis would be upon that.

The Senator from Maine, I venture to suggest, was nearer right as a matter of public policy when he spoke before the committee sometime ago, when he placed his emphasis upon the standing committee, than he was when he offered the resolution to create a special committee. Someone may say, "If the Senate version of the Reorganization Act had been adopted by the House it would have required a two-thirds vote by the Senate to have created a special committee." But it is said that the House did not adopt the Senate version. It cut out the ban against the special committee.

The House did not do that. It was done in the parliamentary way that the matter was handled in the House. I understand that the Reorganization Act was not allowed a place on the calendar in the closing days of the Congress unless a substitute for the Senate version were offered from the floor leaving out this ban against the special committee. So the House of Representatives never voted on leaving out the ban against a special committee. By the parliamentary technique under which the measure was brought up in the other body the ban against the special committee was simply eliminated, and the House never voted on the question at all.

In the second place, the situation in the House with respect to standing committees has been and continues to be different from the situation with respect to standing committees in the Senate. In the Senate, as we all know, a standing committee has the power of subpena. In the House a standing committee does not have the power of subpena. The House has followed the practice of not allowing standing committees to subpena witnesses without the express authority of the House itself. It may be that that difference between the rule of the House and the rule of the Senate was responsible for the action of the House in seeking to strike out the ban against special committees for both Houses of Congress.

But, Mr. President, again I emphasize that the House never voted upon the question of the deletion of this prohibition, and the Senate itself never had the matter called to its attention—I believe I am correct about this—when the Senate actually voted upon the bill. It will be recalled that in the closing days of the last Congress, the able Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, was anxious to get the bill acted upon. The House struck out all after the enacting clause, and left out the section about banning special committees. There may have been some other minor changes, but that was one of the few changes made by the House. I was a member of the Joint Committee on Organization. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] also was a member of it. In the haste to have the matter concluded, Senator La Follette never even called a meeting of his committee. After talking to several representative members of the committee, and no doubt to the then majority leader and perhaps to other Senators, he simply thought the situation justified his moving that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House, without further discussion or further delay. The able Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], who was another distinguished member of that committee, I believe will concur in the statement that that is what happened. We never debated the matter, but we simply gave our concurrence to the action of the House, in order to get the bill passed at that time. But surely we did not change the view of the Senate, clearly expressed when the Senate debated the question. Able Senators such as the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the present President pro tempore, and the former distinguished Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, asked Senator La Follette about the effect of this ban, and the distinguished Senator from Michigan, if I correctly read the RECORD, indicated at one place in the RECORD that the answers made by Senator La Follette were satisfactory to him.

So that was the view of the Senate, although, of course, we are not bound by it now, because the provision was deleted in the sister body of Congress. But it raises a question of policy, namely, whether we wish to depart so soon from a provision which was viewed by almost everyone to be so salutary and to represent such sound views in regard to good policy in dealing with congressional committees.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the view of the Senator from Florida in regard to the manner in which the reorganization bill was acted upon by the House of Representatives is very interesting. I wonder whether the Senator has heard of any plan under way for the creation of special committees in the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEPPER. I am not informed on that subject, I may say to my able friend from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. In view of the action of the House, I think it would be interesting to learn whether there are under way any plans for the creation of special committees in the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me say that Representative Cochran, of Missouri, appeared before the Joint Committee on Organization. I shall read briefly from his statement:

> These investigation committees have gone so far it is a joke. In my opinion, they will soon have to name an investigating committee to investigate the investigating committees. I thought we were not going to have any in the House this year until you made your recommendation. Then, there were two postwar planning committees—

And so on. Next, he said this:

> I think we have passed resolutions up to now for 17, and I believe we have got about 30 resolutions pending before Mr. Cox's committee. Haven't we, Mr. Cox?
> Mr. Cox. About five, I think.
> Mr. COCHRAN. We have already about 17.

He understood that they had about 17 special committees, and it was his view that it was desirable to get rid of them.

Here in the Senate we had numerous special committees. It was the consensus of opinion of the Senate that we should get rid of them and that we should function through the standing committees.

Mr. AIKEN. So during the last Congress 17 special committees had been authorized by the House of Representatives, and 30 resolutions requesting the creation of additional special committees were before the House of Representatives at that time. I understand that those committees have not been continued during the present session of Congress, and are not to be, without further action on the part of the House.

I asked my previous question in order to find out whether any plans are under way for the continuation of other special committees on the part of the House of Representatives. I myself have heard of none.

Mr. PEPPER. I have heard of none.

Mr. AIKEN. I did not know whether the Senator from Florida had heard of any.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I have not.

Mr. President, I desire to conclude my remarks in a few moments. I have said that above every other issue involved in this controversy is the essential question of the integrity of the Act reorganizing Congress. I do not know of another piece of legislation which has received such widespread approval from the press and from the people of the country as has the Reorganization Act, which the Congress courageously enacted at the last session. Great business firms and engineers, whose fees undoubtedly run into very large figures when they are working for private clients, volunteered their information free of charge in order to help the Congress determine how to function more efficiently for the people, and the Congress likewise had the suggestion of the distinguished and lamented late Senator Maloney, of Connecticut, that in this day we should try to reorganize our own machinery so that it could function more efficiently in the public interest. Time after time we had heard doctors tell individual Senators that they were killing themselves by trying to carry a load of work which they could not carry physically and could not do well because they were thus required to do more than they could possibly do.

So, Mr. President, we made a great step forward. It was a bipartisan step. No one claims the credit for it. The bill was introduced by a Democrat. The chairman of the committee, chosen at a time when the Democrats were in the majority in the Senate, was a Republican, and as fine a man as ever sat in this or any other legislative body, the distinguished Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin. The work was bipartisan. We did not act as Democrats or as Republicans, but we tried to act as Senators and as Americans. I respect my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, and I wish to say to my Republican colleagues, with all respect, that it will not do the Republican Party credit in the eyes of the press and the people of the United States to be the first ones to break the dam which we built against the flood of special committees and irregular instrumentalities of that kind. The Members of Congress have been so noble and have acted so unselfishly and so patriotically in creating this new efficiency for the Congress, that I wonder whether the majority party now wishes to bear, in the eyes of the people of the country, the responsibility of being the first to break the dam and thus to loose the kind of flood which will then pour forth.

Mr. President, we know that today the issue is raised by a resolution calling for the creation of a Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, and we know that there happens to be a second resolution calling for the creation of a Special Committee on Small Business. Both subjects are important. But are we prepared to say that there will not be other subjects of great importance which may call for the creation of other special committees? If we create a Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program and if we create another Special Committee To Investigate and Study the Problems of Small Business, shall not we be called upon to create a special committee to investigate public health and other special committees to investigate other aspects of our national life? When and how can we stop, if once we break the rule which we deliberately laid down last year, namely, that special committees should not be authorized, except by means of a two-thirds vote of the Senate—by waiving the rule, so to speak—because of the emergency of the demand.

Mr. President, this is a difficult time for democracy in the world. Many persons are alarmed about the displacement of democracies in many areas of the earth by ideologies which are the antithesis of democracy. Mr. President, the only time when I am fearful about the survival of democracy anywhere on earth is when democracy fails to work effectively. We cannot point to a country on earth in which nazism or fascism or communism prevails, except where preceding such prevalence there was a failure of democracy, regardless of whether the country was Italy or Russia or Germany.

I have said on this floor repeatedly, and I am almost embarrassed to say it again, that I was in Germany in 1938. At that time I saw the scars on the walls from street fighting. The reason Hitler came to power was that there were 7,000,000 unemployed in Germany, because the struggling democracy was not able to carry the task against the obstacles it had to face; and because democracy failed in Germany, Hitler with his perfidy came into power, and was the monster that in the war he brought about devoured 50,000,000 men, women, and children on the face of the earth.

Then consider Russia. There never would have been a revolution in Russia in 1917 had it not been for the centuries of oppression, for the night that had been closed down over the minds and the bodies and the souls of the Russian people by the age-long absolutism of the czars. It was against that that the people rebelled. Or consider Italy. We find that when Mussolini marched to power it was because democracy had collapsed in Italy.

So, Mr. President, if we will make democracy strong we need not fear nazi-ism, we need not fear fascism, we need not fear any foreign ideology. But let democracy collapse, let democracy fail, and they will rush in as air flows into a vacuum, and it will be impossible by any direct attack to keep them out.

I believe that is true of all dangerous ideologies. The best way to keep them out of America is to make the example of democracy's working so strong and so persuasive that anybody who suggests anything other than American democracy is designing, he is fooled, or he is a fool, when he makes the suggestion.

Mr. President, what we have done by virtue of the Reorganization Act has a very direct relationship to making democracy work. I believe that at this critical time, when the eyes of men everywhere are looking for hope in the continued strength and efficiency of American democracy, we should not repudiate the forward step we have so recently taken.

NEWS FROM NEW COUNCIL OF AMERICAN BUSINESS, INC., WASHINGTON, D. C.

In a statement released to the press today, George C. Hatch, president of the New Council of American Business, announced that his organization favored discontinuance of the Senate Small Business Committee so that the established standing committees of the Senate could move immediately to consideration of bills to aid small business.

The New Council of American Business declared that a mere investigative committee which has no power to report out legislation will serve no useful purpose for small and independent businesses. Instead in a three-point proposal the council urged that the Banking and Currency Committee act on legislation to give credit aids to small business, that the Judiciary Committee act on anti-monopoly proposals, and that a permanent subcommittee be established in a standing Senate committee to prepare a comprehensive legislative program to protect competitive business.

The statement follows:

The New Council of American Business, representing independent businessmen throughout the country, is interested in the present discussion before the Senate on the resolution to continue the Small Business Committee.

On January 10, the New Council of American Business wired Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, who has performed a distinguished service for American business in his chairmanship of the committee, urging that the work of the Small Business Committee "be extended and enlarged in scope by the new Congress." The findings of this committee during the Seventy-ninth Congress demonstates that the problems affecting independent business are of such urgency and of such magnitude that it is imperative, if competitive enterprise is to survive, that the Senate move to immediate consideration of the legislative needs of independent business. Senator MURRAY has stated that he is prepared to offer now more than 50 major recommendations intended to arrest the growth of monopoly. We were surprised to learn, therefore, that instead of creating a committee with enlarged powers, the resolution to reconstitute the Senate Small Business Committee (S. Res. 20) extends the committee without greater power and for a period of only 8 months. Moreover, the debate in the Senate has disclosed that under the Congressional Reorganization Act, the standing committees of the Senate will be more effective for legislative purposes than will be any special committees.

The New Council of American Business does not believe that a special committee of such limited scope as is provided in Senate Resolution 20 will adequately serve the pressing needs of independent business.

The council proposes instead that standing committees with legislative powers give immediate consideration to all measures which are intended to protect the competitive position of small and independent business. In particular, we urge as a most urgent need that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee study and report to the Senate legislation to provide credit assistance to small business and that the Senate Judiciary Committee study and report to the Senate legislation to curb monopoly. The council urges further that a permanent subcommittee be created within the appropriate standing committee of the Senate to study the continuing problems of small business and report to the Senate comprehensive legislation to preserve competitive business in our country.

The deep concern of the Senate with the needs of independent and small business in the past makes us certain that the present session will continue that interest. We trust, however, that the Senate will recognize the urgency of the problem and because of that recognition will refuse to establish a mere investigative committee which, since it has no legislative power, will serve no useful purpose. Rather, the New Council of American Business urges that the Senate give its immediate attention to the legislative solutions for the problems of small and independent business.

JANUARY 17, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] has the floor.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator. I desired an opportunity to make a very brief statement in connection with the resolution seeking to continue the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that the Senator will not take more than 3 minutes.

Mr. GURNEY. I shall probably take less time than that.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I desire it clearly shown in the RECORD that the Armed Service Committee, feeling their responsibility for the proper functioning of the committee in connection with all matters appertaining to the operation of the Army and the Navy, immediately asked the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] to appear before the committee and state what his intentions were as to matters he would not investigate.

I desire stated in the RECORD my belief, and he so told the committee, that so far as concerns any future matters affecting the operations of the Army and the Navy, or any of the armed forces, his committee would in no way interfere with matters that he felt properly belong to the regular standing committee, the Armed Services Committee.

He also stated definitely that matters affecting the disposal of war surplus material, either here or abroad, would in no way be handled by his committee but would continue to be one of the subjects that the Armed Services Committee would handle.

Furthermore, inasmuch as there had been statements in the press in reference to the proper regulation of occupational forces both in Germany and in the Pacific, it was stated that if any matters such as that should need investigation it would be the proper function of the Armed Services Committee to conduct it, and that the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program would not in any way interfere.

In general, the Senator from Maine informed our committee that the activities of his special committee would be confined mostly to contract work, to transactions that occurred in the past, and from now on would in no way affect problems incident to the control and regulation of the Army and the Navy.

As chairman, I should like to say that in this formal committee meeting I am sure that a majority of those present were convinced that the operations of the special committee in the future, if it be retained, would in no way interfere with the responsibility of our committee.

I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, in connection with the enlightening statement made by the Senator from South Dakota, I think it should be mentioned at this point in the RECORD, especially if investigations are to be carried on in regard to contract settlements and military contracts, that the Contract Settlement Act itself contains a provision that the office which brings about the settlements shall make periodic reports to the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate and the Military Affairs Committee of the House; so that as far as that field is concerned, it has been completely taken care of by the very law which created the Office of Contract Settlement.

WRONGFUL DIVERSION OF CLOTHING

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota for 3 minutes.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, during 1946 there was set up an organization known as the Victory Clothing Drive, and under it a corporation known as the United Nations Clothing Collection, Incorporated. This committee was set up by the President to conduct the work, Henry Kaiser being appointed by the President to head that organization. For the most part the Victory Clothing Drive accomplished a great amount of good for the poor and destitute people of Europe. But one thing occurred which I think should be called to the attention of the Senate. Although small in scope it may have a tremendous effect in the West because what occurred represented fraud and corruption within this organization.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from the Cavalier County Republican, which explains this incident better than I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CAVALIER COUNTY REPUBLICAN,
Langdon, N. Dak., January 15, 1947.

Senator MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

FRIEND MILT: Last week while on my regular trips calling on the elevators and business places in our trade territory, I called on Lars Midjaas, of Clyde, who in the course of our talks told me about a letter his wife had gotten from a lady at Hazelton, N. Dak. It seems that this lady at Hazelton answered an ad that she saw in the Farmers Union Herald from a Chicago house advertising dresses for 100 at $18—in other words 18 cents apiece. She answered the ad and sent the $18 and received the dresses. All of which were used dresses and in the sleeve up near the shoulder inside was a note pinned which read as follows:

"This note is to wish you lots of good luck and I hope this garment will be of some real comfort and use to you. I would like to hear from you in return so that we can see what part of the country and friends this reaches overseas.

"Sincerely,

"Mrs. LARS MIDJAAS.

"FAIRDALE, N. DAK., U. S. A."

It so happens, Milt, that this dress was given to the clothing drive conducted last year in January under the sponsorship of the Federal Government and was the drive that was conducted with Kaiser at the head. She gave this dress to the preacher at Fairdale, Rev. O. J. Bilstad, and his wife was chairman of the drive in that town; they in turn took the clothing to the Kedney warehouse in Grand Forks, which was the collection depot for this territory, and from there I don't know where it went.

This lady at Hazelton, Miss Elizabeth Ohlhouser, described the dress to Mrs. Midjaas and it was the dress that was given to the drive.

The name of the Chicago house is: V. Portnoy Mail Order House, 567 West Roosevelt Road, Chicago, Ill.

I have the letters from Miss Ohlhouser to Mrs. Midjaas, and also have the letters that were written to Mrs. Midjaas the second time asking for more information by Mrs. Midjaas, and also have a circular from the mail-order house which shows the ad for 100 dresses for $18.

It looks like they evidently have overlooked taking this note out of the sleeve, because it was inserted so that it was not easy to find.

We are blasting this thing in our paper tomorrow, and I think that it would be a good thing to start investigating, as there will be a lot of people wondering if their clothing went to the same place.

I would appreciate hearing from you as to your findings in regard to this, as we will want to keep our public informed as to what has been done by the Government on this.

* * * * *

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

DICK FORKNER.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, if I may add just a word or two more, I believe the very fact that the clothing donated for charity finds its way to commercial channels represents fraud and corruption in probably its worst form, and just so soon as I find out and can determine what committees should investigate given subjects I intend to submit a resolution requesting a full investigation of the matter to which I have called the Senate's attention.

In connection with my remarks, Mr. President, I ask to have inserted at this point an editorial from the Cavalier County Republican.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To many people VE-day and VJ-day signified the end of the war. President Truman very recently proclaimed that hostilities have ceased.

However, suffering in many countries in Europe has not ended and an incident bared very recently indicates that war grafting has not yet ended.

There have always been doubts whether donations of money and materials have reached their destinations. Enough letters of appreciation have been received by people in Cavalier County and throughout the Nation to convince donors that a great deal of good has been done.

However, an occasional incident like the one recently disclosed makes a serious blot on all the good that has been done and makes each succeeding drive harder to conduct successfully.

It would not have required many stories like the one involving a dress from a Cavalier County woman to make it impossible to make future drives successful. Some might think that the story is unimportant because hostilities have ceased. The fact remains that people in many parts of Europe still need clothing badly, whether they are being shot at or bombed or not.

The story of a dress donated at Fairdale turning up in a mail order shipment of 100 dresses for $18 from a Chicago concern is one that deserves the strictest investigation and diligent prosecution.

Miss Elizabeth Ohlhouser, of Hazelton, in this State, ordered a bargain assortment of women's dresses for $18 from V. Portnoy Mail Order House, 547 West Roosevelt Road, Chicago. She had received catalogs and circulars from the concerr for several years, and the order she bought and received in November or December 1946 was not her first. She had the impression, probably from advertising previously received, that the merchandise had been traded in on new merchandise. The circular from which she ordered most recently did not state whether the 18-cent dresses were new or used.

In one of the dresses she received in the recent shipment she found a note pinned in an inconspicuous place inside the dress. It was from Mrs. Lars Midjaas, of Clyde. The note was dated January 12, 1946, at Fairdale, Mr. and Mrs. Midjaas having been living at Fairdale at the time.

In the note Mrs. Midjaas had written: "This note is to wish you lots of good luck, and I hope this garment will be of some real comfort and use to you. I would like to hear from you in return so that we can learn what part of the world and which friends this reaches overseas."

Miss Ohlhouser wrote to Mrs. Midjaas December 11, telling her about receiving the dress with the note in it, a wine-colored dress, size 16, still in very good condition. In her letter the Hazelton woman lamented that such a good dress, given for such a worthy cause, had fallen into the hands of racketeers.

Mrs. Midjaas acknowledged the letter and heard from Miss Ohlhouser again in a letter dated December 26.

Mrs. Midjaas donated the dress in the victory clothing drive which was sponsored early in 1946 throughout the country under the general chairmanship of Henry J. Kaiser, prominent wartime shipbuilder and contractor, now manufacturing automobiles, farm implements, and other items. The drive was headed in most counties by the county agents with ministers, homemaker clubs, and many other organizations and individuals cooperating.

Mrs. Midjaas gave her dress, among other items, in the drive at Fairdale, where Rev. O. J. Bilstad, Lutheran pastor, was local chairman. Contacted by the Republican Saturday, the Reverend Bilstad confirmed the fact that the Fairdale drive was a part of the victory clothing drive headed by Kaiser and reported that the Fairdale collection had been delivered in February to the Kedney warehouse in Grand Forks, as instructed.

How the dress got from the victory collection into the hands of the Chicago concern and who besides the Chicago mail order house might have profited will make interesting reading, interesting if rather discouraging to those who donated so much in the various drives and the many who worked so many days and weeks without thanks to manage the drives in the counties and towns all over the country.

The case of the 18-cent dress is being called to the attention of United States Senator MILTON R. YOUNG, and it is expected that a report may be made public in the future.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield so that I may ask the Senator from North Dakota a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I understood the Senator from North Dakota to say that when he found out what committee was going to do the investigating he would have a matter to submit for investigation. I was going to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that if he will vote against the resolutions which are being submitted for the creation of special committees, he can then take the Reorganization Act, read down the list of standing committees, and ascertain exactly what committee will have jurisdiction to investigate the matter he has spoken of.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois again yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes, I yield; but this will be the last time I will yield.

Mr. YOUNG. My answer to the Senator from Connecticut is that I think, in the Government of the United States, the work of investigation by committees is so important in order to keep people straight and to promote faith in democracy, that if I could have my way, I would create a permanent investigating committee to which would be referred all matters requiring investigation. In this particular case, the matter I just presented, I was wondering just what committee would have jurisdiction. I should like to consult with the chairman of the committee which would have jurisdiction over such a matter, but I have no way of knowing what that committee is.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to advise the Senator from North Dakota that under the law the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has full authority to receive the complaint of the Senator from North Dakota. That is my interpretation of the law, and I believe I am absolutely correct in it. If the Senator from North Dakota wishes to turn the complaint over to the Committee on the Expenditures in the Executive Departments the committee will be glad to take appropriate action on the matter, and we do not need any further resolution respecting it, so far as I know, in order to take action.

Mr. YOUNG. I appreciate the information. I have already spoken with several able and distinguished Members of the Senate, and no one seems to know what committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me say to the Senator that what he has just said represents the weakness of the present situation. Members of my own party do not know where the jurisdiction lies. They have not read the La Follette-Monroney measure. Jurisdiction in the case referred to lies with the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, headed by the stalwart Vermonter who sits beside me, GEORGE AIKEN. That committee has full power to act, to subpena witnesses, and examine into this matter and other kindred matters.

PLANNED AIR TRAFFIC

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress a bill introduced by me, the so-called All-American flag line bill, received considerable attention at the hands of the Committee on Commerce. I notice that the principle of that bill is now receiving the attention of the press. I have in my hand excerpts from Newsweek of January 13, 1947, in which, among other things, is the following:

Last week, after 2 years under the Chicago agreement, America was still far ahead in world aviation. But the Government-subsidized "planned-order" lines of other countries were beginning to cut in on traffic and the outlook was for further decline in American predominance.

Again the article said:

The growth of the foreign, government-operated, air-transport systems has dashed any hopes that the United States ever had for freedom of the air. At the same time it has strengthened the British call for planned order.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AIR: PLANNED TRAFFIC

Back in December 1944, United States negotiators entered an international air conference at Chicago seeking freedom of the air—the right for planes of any country to fly anywhere in international trade just as ships ply the seas. The British, at that time far behind in commercial aviation because of the war, insisted on a planned order in the air, with competition controlled and countries dividing up routes. The conference ended with a compromise. International air travel would be regulated by bilateral agreements between countries.

Last week, after 2 years under the Chicago agreement, America was still far ahead in world aviation. But the government-subsidized, planned-order lines of other countries were beginning to cut in on traffic and the outlook was for further decline in American predominance.

ENTERPRISE VERSUS MONOPOLY

At the start of the race the United States had all the advantage—the best transport planes, the crews, and the ground facilities built up by the Army in its global transport system. The State Department sent negotiators over the world to sign agreements for landing rights. To get them they traded landing facilities in the United States, knowing that what they gave was not as valuable as what they received because the other countries were not prepared to use our airports and won't be for several years.

There were some bad spots. The Russians refused even to talk about a possible air agreement and may call for a loan from the United States and perhaps a free hand in their satellite areas if negotiations ever reach a bargaining stage. But agreements in most areas were reached sooner than the airlines could take advantage of them, and some routes, although the Civil Aeronautics Board has granted certificates for air lines to operate, still are not being flown. Latin American and European agreements were signed quickly, and a recent one with India will permit Pan American, TWA, and Northwest Airlines to get their Far East routes started—around-the-world flights from New York to New York in 100 hours.

By last week agreements with 28 nations had been signed. Negotiations with 12 other nations were under way. No other country had done so well—in number of agreements.

The actual traffic picture was less encouraging. At the start, for example, the North Atlantic had been almost an American lake. Foreign competition began to be felt last summer. By September the British, French, Canadian, Scandinavian, and Dutch lines—all government-operated—were flying one-third of the passengers between New York and Europe. Currently the foreign lines have increased this proportion to about one-half.

The competition has become so stiff that passenger loads of American planes were down to between 60 and 70 percent of capacity. Travelers no longer have to wait for space to Europe, and the waiting list in Europe is expected to be down to the same basis by April or May.

Competition is also strengthening in Latin America. British planes are seen more and more on the airfields of Brazil and Argentina. Argentina itself is expanding its government-operated line, and governments in several countries are heavily backing their own air fleets.

SIGNIFICANCE

The growth of foreign, government-operated air-transport systems has dashed any hopes that the United States ever had for freedom of the air. At the same time, it has strengthened the British call for "planned order."

As a consequence, the British are expected to propose this year a new multilateral air pact which would bind signatory nations to allocate traffic between way points and with each other. Naturally those countries which operate their own air lines may be expected to back the British plan.

Whether American carriers can submit to planned traffic sharing overseas and still get enough business to make money remains to be answered. If they cannot, some kind of Government support appears to be the alternative. Such support will probably come through postal rates.

North Atlantic air-mail rates—the Government's payments to the carriers—are pending for 1946 and 1947. The CAB set $1.50 a ton-mile for 1945, despite an air-lines protest that it was too low. The temporary rate now in effect is much lower—75 cents. Under the Civil Aeronautics Act, the CAB may consider the needs of national defense in setting air-mail rates.

Thus, if foreign subsidized lines become too great a threat, American international air lines—lacking freedom of the air—have the potential backing of the Government Treasury.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

The Senate resumed consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 46) continuing the authority for the investigation of the national-defense program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I was tremendously interested in the statement a few moments ago made by the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services [Mr. GURNEY]. Every Senator well understands the original resolution which was submitted by the distinguished Senator from Main [Mr. BREWSTER], which clearly sought to continue for at least 1 year all the power that was delegated and lodged in the old Truman-Mead-Kilgore committee.

Then the Senator who submitted the resolution discovered that he would have trouble with the Committee on Armed Services because of the overlapping jurisdiction. With the full realization that if he had trouble with the Committee on Armed Services his resolution could not pass, he then began his retreat, and the resolution was completely changed by limiting the geographical boundaries of the investigation to the continental limits of the United States. In other words, the proponents of the resolution were willing to retreat when they realized they did not have the votes to pass the original resolution. They were willing to retreat to the point where they would encroach only on the duties of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as they had originally tried to encroach on the duties of the Committee on Armed Services. That is exactly the situation as I see it. They now believe that they have the votes to override the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and adopt the resolution. It is well understood that if they had continued to press the original resolution there would have been trouble. However, the original resolution is what they really wanted because the real investigation which this committee wanted to make dealt with the occupation forces in Europe, as everyone knows from the reading of the questionnaires which were submitted here the other day by the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. That was the primary reason for the continuation of the committee; and when the Committee on Armed Services said, "No; you cannot go that far," they knew they did not have the votes, so they retreated. Now they are attempting to do the same thing to the committee headed by the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] that they tried to do to the Committee on Armed Services headed by the able Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]. And they make this second attempt because they feel that they have the votes to run over the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in this fight. That is all there is to it. Every Senator knows that if we follow the spirit and the letter of the Reorganization Act there is no place for this particular special committee to continue its investigation.

I wish to discuss somewhat the background of the Reorganization Act and some of the things which were said on the floor of the Senate last year, to show how far reaching the act is, if we can believe some of the statements made by the proponents of this all-important piece of congressional reform.

The winning of the global war by the Allies was the greatest military and naval victory in all history. That these United States played the dominant role in this victory no one will challenge. No greater tribute has ever been paid to democracy than in the victories achieved.

Out of this war came complex and intricate problems—problems which in this reconversion period are being daily presented to the legislative and executive branches of this Government.

As a result of this, a serious situation has developed—a situation which challenges all America as to how domestic and foreign difficulties presented to the legislative arm of government can be solved in such a way that government will still remain close to the people. As an example, when one thinks in budget terms of thirty to thirty-seven billions of dollars to operate Government for 1 year in times of peace, that alone staggers the imagination. It is alarming and thought-provoking.

Mr. President, I have no crystal ball which tells me what the future holds for my country. However, it takes no clairvoyant to suggest that in the years that lie ahead the legislative branch of this Government will be confronted with domestic and foreign problems which will tax the mental and physical strength of the best men this Nation has produced, if we are to remain a free government and leaders in the affairs of mankind throughout the world.

Mr. President, I am certain that the Senate of the United States in the Seventy-ninth Congress recognized these growing pains when it voted so overwhelmingly to pass the Reorganization Act last year. I shall never forget the statement of our former colleague, the Honorable Robert La Follette, the man who was more responsible than any other for bringing to the Congress of the United States this fine piece of legislation dealing with congressional reform. When debating this bill he said:

> I think the fate of democracy is bound up in the reorganization and modernization of our National Legislature.

That, Mr. President, is important to me; I do not know whether it means anything to other Senators. I do not know whether politics means more than the statement which I have quoted or not. Sometimes I think perhaps it does, when I see some of the maneuvering with some of the new Senate Members who are wholly unfamiliar with the rules and wholly unfamiliar with the spirit and the letter of the act, and I recognize the reasons behind this maneuvering. I do not make that statement in any spirit of reflection upon any of those Senators.

But, Mr. President, I know what it is to come to the Congress of the United States for the first time. All of us who have had experience either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate know that it takes some time for a new Member to get his feet upon the ground. In the House of Representatives it required a couple of months before I learned what the rules were in that legislative body.

The first vote which I cast in the United States Senate was against the administration. I have been fairly independent all my life, and I propose to continue to be so, so long as I remain in politics. The first important vote I cast was on an item increasing by half a billion dollars the appropriation for the WPA. There was a great deal of pressure put on me, just as pressure has been put on Senators on the other side of the aisle. But the more pressure that was put on me the more I was inclined to go the other way. In the beginning I had an open mind on the half-billion-dollar appropriation, but I decided that if I were to remain in the Senate and permit pressure to be brought on me from the beginning until the close of my career, I never could do justice to my constituency in Illinois and to the people of the Nation. I thought it was a good time then and there to keep people off my back, to keep those in the various departments of Government and Members of the Senate from telling me what I could or could not do upon important legislative matters.

From that time on, in the 8 years during which I have been in the United States Senate, no one has ever attempted to influence me unduly with reference to a single vote.

Mr. President, I have quoted what Senator La Follette said. It is an important statement, and that is one of the reasons why I am so much interested in the Reorganization Act. If Senator La Follette was right—and I think he was—the question ought to be considered upon a high plane. It ought to be considered in the light of the spirit and the letter of the Reorganization Act and not for any political advantage of either party. I read again what Senator La Follette said:

> I think the fate of democracy is bound up in the reorganization and modernization of our National Legislature.

He further said:

> The fate of democracy will depend upon whether we make the legislative arm of the Government efficient and responsive to the will of the people.

Mr. President, those are strong statements. I dare say that few persons have thought anything about the fate of our democracy being bound up in this legislative reform, and whether the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette, was right in that conclusion.

I remember well how that experienced and brilliant legislator stood on this floor debating and answering all questions in a way that brought to him high praise and overwhelming success in accomplishing this great legislative reform. After he had finished, the bill passed the Senate by a vote of 49 to 16, with only 3 Republicans voting against it. The only issue is whether or not Republican Senators meant what they said last June when only three Republicans voted against the reorganization bill. Did they mean what they said then, when they were in the minority and thought that the legislative branch of the Government ought to be reformed to the point where special committees should fall by the wayside?

Mr. President, I distinctly remember what my good friend the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said in the Senate at that time, after he had listened to the then Senator from Wisconsin and had a very interesting and educational colloquy with him upon this question. After the Senator from Wisconsin had convinced the able Senator from Michigan that special committees should go, this is what the Senator from Michigan said—one of the most profound statements I have read in a long time, and which could come only from a man like the Senator from Michigan.

Listen to this, Mr. President:

> I take my seat, but before I do so I should like to say to my able friend from Wisconsin that while in his long career as a Senator he has often rendered spectacular and distinguished service, I doubt whether he has ever put the Senate and the country under greater obligation to him than in the amazing, constructive, and able way in which he has led his special committee in the presentation of the legislation now proposed.

And the Senator from Michigan voted for that bill.

Mr. President, those were beautiful words, words of a statesman at his best, words which have the ring of intellectual integrity and honesty of purpose, words of firmness and sincerity, typical of the kind of utterance which vanquished many a foe and which impressed world leaders in the recent efforts of the Senator from Michigan with other Americans in search of an everlasting peace.

If this reform is as important as Senator La Follette said it was on the floor of the Senate, it is wrapped up in the peace in which the Senator from Michigan has been so interested.

We shall soon see, and the country will see, whether or not the Senator from Michigan meant what he said on the fateful day of June 6, 1946.

I turn to another statement, made by none other than the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. After the Senator from Ohio had asked some pertinent and material questions of the Senator from Wisconsin, he too became enthusiastic about the reorganization bill. He was not going to be outdone by the Senator from Michigan in the generous praise which he gave to the Senator from Wisconsin. This is what the leader of the Republican Party on the other side of the aisle said at that time:

> Mr. President, I very highly commend the work of the committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. I thoroughly approve the bill and intend to vote for it.

He did not simply approve it; he thoroughly approved it. When the Senator from Ohio thoroughly approves a thing, it is thoroughly approved. He further said:

> I believe we must begin on a complete reorganization of Congress if Congress is to operate under modern conditions.

The Senator from Ohio is now the leading advocate of breaking down and sabotaging this congressional reform in the third week of the Eightieth Congress.

He further said:

> I may disagree with one or two provisions. No Members of Congress having intimate contact with the matters which are related here can possibly agree on every detail, and I think it is perfectly proper to offer amendments on any such details.

Amendments were offered on details. I recall that the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] offered several amendments on details which were agreed to by the Senator from Wisconsin. But the Senator from Ohio said:

> However, I feel strongly that the bill as a whole is an important step forward and I certainly intend to vote for it.

I may say that when the Senator from Ohio made that persuasive and far-reaching statement about the reorganization bill, the question of continuing special committees had been voted on; indeed a provision had been written into the bill eliminating special committees, and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio did not touch the section dealing with the abandonment of special committees.

So, Mr. President, we find one of the great leaders of the Republican Party, here on the floor of the United States Senate, making a strong, persuasive statement in favor of the enactment of the reorganization bill, telling the country it was time for Congress to reorganize and reform, and yet today he is taking the lead in attempting to drive the Senators on the other side of the aisle into his camp and compelling them to do his bidding on this particularly important matter which Senator La Follette said may affect the fate of democracy in this country.

Mr. President, references used to be made to the "New Dealers" as the "rubber-stamp crowd." It was said that we followed the whims of the late President Roosevelt, and that some Democrats did whatever he wanted to have done. It will be interesting to find out, on the approaching vote, who will be "rubber stamps" in repudiating the Reorganization Act. I know what has been going on. I know about the many conferences which have been held. I know the committee assignments which have been made by those on the other side of the aisle. I know what has been done, and the country will know, too: How they have taken up onto the mountaintop some Senators who have recently come into the Senate, and have sold them an orange grove below, although there is no orange grove there.

Mr. President, the words I read above were spoken by an outstanding Republican, a man who is referred to, perhaps, as much as any other man in the United States for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1948. If the Senator from Ohio were not a good lawyer, I could understand how he might think that it would be all right to depart from the Reorganization Act, as an ordinary layman might think. But the Senator from Ohio is too able a lawyer not to know what he is doing here. The step which is proposed is a regressive step, rather than a progressive one, in connection with the reorganization of the legislative branch of government.

Mr. President, what were the basic objectives of this progressive and forward-looking piece of legislation which so stirred the feelings of practically all Republican Senators at that particular time? What was there in the reorganization proposals which caused such men as the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] to make such persuasive speeches on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. President, there have been major and minor reorganizations of the congressional committee structure over the years, since the Republic was founded, the last one having taken place in 1921. That modern conditions made necessary another complete overhauling, few people will deny. So the Seventy-ninth Congress was delegated to do the job. Under the bill that was passed, we reduced standing committees from 33 to 15; and we provided, with few exceptions, that no Senator should serve on more than two committees. Every one of these committees is a major committee. All of them are important. The change which has been made is a real innovation in the committee structure and is a step in the right direction, certainly, because under the new arrangement every Senator will confine his work and study to the bills and resolutions coming to his own committees. I wish to say to the Senate that one of the reasons I supported the reorganization bill was the result of the experience I obtained as a Member of the House of Representatives. When I became a Member of the House of Representatives I was fortunate enough, after being there for 3 months, to be appointed to the Committee on Agriculture. I stayed on that one committee for 4 years. That was the only committee to which I was assigned and in which I had any interest, under the rules of the House of Representatives. I say to the Senate that in the 4 years I was a Member of the House of Representatives I learned more about basic problems dealing with agricultural legislation than I have learned since I have been in the Senate during the last 8 years, and during these 8 years I have been a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Why is that true? It is true because when I was a Member of the House of Representatives, all my time was spent in dealing with agricultural problems. That is why I am glad to be on only two committees now, the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Last year I was on nine Senate committees. I did not have time to do anything adequately; I neglected myself, I neglected my State, I neglected the problems of my State, I neglected the people of the Nation as a whole, attempting to keep up with the work of nine committees. I wish to say that I am very happy to be on only two committees at the present time, because I believe I can do them some justice, as a result of the passage of the Reorganization Act.

Mr. President, the reduction of the number of committees and limitation of membership on committees is an absolute necessity if the committee system is to work efficiently. The crux of the La Follette-Monroney Act is in those provisions limiting the number of committees and defining the jurisdiction of all the committees created under the Reorganization Act. Here is something that has never been tried before. It is the keystone in the arch of congressional reform. It is also the complete answer to those who seek to undermine the foundation stones of this legislative act by insisting that special committees be appointed. The very reason we spelled out in the Reorganization Act the jurisdiction of each and every committee was that special committees were being eliminated. Therefore, when an investigation was called for, we specified by which committee it should be conducted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The point the Senator from Illinois has just been discussing is one which has concerned me greatly, because I agree with everything the Senator has said about committee work and about how impossible it has been for us to attend to half a dozen different committees.

Regardless of whether the act contains any provision prohibiting special committees, nevertheless it is the plain intent of the act that, except in a few cases, no Member of the Senate shall serve upon more than two committees. That is the greatest reform of all. If now we begin to create new committees, regardless of whether they are called special committees or anything else, are not we in effect actually destroying the greatest reform brought about by the act?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from New Mexico is eminently correct. Anyone who says that by creating the special committee now proposed we shall not be violating the letter of the law, as well as its spirit, simply does not know what he is talking about, because in connection with each and every one of the standing committees established under the Reorganization Act the jurisdiction of each committee is clearly spelled out, word for word, and as a result of designating clearly the jurisdiction of the 15 standing committees, anything under God's high heaven can be investigated. In my opinion, if new committees are created, both the spirit and the letter of the Reorganization Act will be violated.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, on that very point let me say that it had been my purpose to discuss the question the Senator from Illinois has just mentioned, namely, that whenever we invade the jurisdiction conferred upon a standing committee, by creating a special committee, we violate the exact letter of the law.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there can be no question about that. I have talked to a number of lawyers about it. I am a lawyer, but obviously I do not practice much. However, I am of the opinion that what the Senator from New Mexico has said on that point cannot successfully be challenged.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I concur in the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Illinois about special committees and the danger inherent in creating them and continuing them, and in violating and vitiating the La Follette-Monroney Act if that is done. Let me point out that even today the line is forming on the right for more special committees. I know that to be so. The big parade is on. If we break down the La Follette-Monroney Act in spirit as well as letter by action such as that which is contemplated by Senators on this side of the aisle, then we shall have made a shambles of that act, which has received the wholehearted approval of the people of the United States.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire is manifestly correct. Already several resolutions calling for the creation of other special committees have been submitted.

I ask this question in the utmost good faith: Once we violate the Reorganization Act, and thus set a precedent, how can we deny requests for a special committee on petroleum or a special committee on small business or a special committee on wool, or any other special committees which might have merit? Once we set such a precedent, how can we deny such requests?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

I should like to point out one or two things; and, further, I request that subdivision (4) of section 102 of the act, as set out on page 10, may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, subdivision 4 states that each Senator shall serve on two standing committees, and no more.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the Senator to wait a moment. I have the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. What Senator has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor, and he has yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes, Mr. President; I have yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I was about to say that subdivision 4 of section 102 of the Reorganization Act provides that each Senator shall serve on two standing committees, and no more, except in the case of Senators of the majority party who are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia or the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, who may serve on three standing committees, and no more. The entire emphasis in the wording of the act is with respect to standing committees. If we come right down to the letter of the law, it does not say that a Senator shall not serve on a special committee or on a joint committee which may be created. It simply says that Senators shall serve on no more than two standing committees. I simply wish to point that out to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LUCAS. I agreed to yield to the Senator from New Mexico, because I know he has a complete answer to the comment which has just been made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely wish to answer the Senator from Nebraska by saying that when the reorganization bill was enacted, the only thing incorporated in it with respect to committees was the reference to standing committees of the Senate, with the exception of special committees which might be set up and authorized under the suspension of the rule, and for which a two-thirds majority vote would be required. So long as those provisions are not complied with, so long as they are not followed, and so long as special committees are set up in violation of that rule, special committees will transgress and infringe upon the jurisdiction which has been given to the regular standing committees, and thus the letter of the law will be violated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield again to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not wish to argue with the Senator, because the law explains itself, and he can interpret it any way he cares, but I am satisfied the Senator from Illinois, who is making a very eloquent plea based on the statement of the former Senator from Wisconsin, will find that the Senator from Wisconsin explicitly stated, just before the quotation repeated today, that when a special committee was necessary—and he gave the illustration of the Atomic Bomb Committee, as well as others—it would not be a violation, and would not run counter to the intent or the letter of the law, for the Senate, if in its wisdom it so desired, to set up a joint committee or special committee for a very special purpose. I am sure the distinguished Senator knows that. The statement occurred before the quotation the Senator gave. I know he desires to be fair about the matter, and if he would include in his remarks the quotation from Senator La Follette to which I call attention it would give the complete story. In answering the query of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, the Senator from Wisconsin made it plain that there would be no violation of the law if the Senate in its wisdom decided by a majority vote that a special committee was necessary to handle any special question the Senate might consider it wanted investigated.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am familiar with the record, and I know exactly what the Senator from Wisconsin said. He said that the Senate could violate the Reorganization Act the very next day after it passed it, if it desired so to do. That is the very thing I argue against. The Senator does not think Senator La Follette would be upholding the Senator's side of the question if he were here, does he?

Mr. WHERRY. If he were here and had a chance to interpret the act, he would say now exactly what he said when the debate was taking place at the time the bill was passed, that whenever the Senate in its wisdom decided that a special committee should be set up, such as the Atomic Bomb Committee, or the War Investigating Committee, and the Senate voted it, it would not be a violation of the spirit of the act or the letter of the law. That is exactly what he would say.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not agree with the Senator on that at all. The Senator from Wisconsin said we could violate the rule. Of course we could have done so on the following day had we wished. He discussed a two-thirds vote as being necessary to a suspension of the rule, but he also said that if the Senate wanted to violate the Reorganization Act by a majority vote, of course it could do so, and that is exactly what we are asked to do now, when Senators on the majority side ask for this special committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to call attention to the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska that because Senators are prohibited from serving on more than two standing committees, or three under special circumstances, therefore by implication special committees were sanctioned. There is no such implication whatever in the Reorganization Act. It starts out by saying "The following standing committees shall be created." That has been one of the customs. Committees are always referred to as standing committees shall be created." that it mentions them as standing committees, and says no Senator shall serve on more than a certain number, carries with it no implication of any kind that by the use of the word "standing" special committees were sanctioned by implication or otherwise. That is merely the habitual way by which we have referred to the committees of the Senate, and the same thing is true of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not think anyone can read the debates of last June and reach any other conclusion than that the Senate, notwithstanding the action of the House to the contrary, voted to ban special committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. There can be no question about it, and there was not any serious debate over it in the Senate. The bill passed the Senate by a vote, as I recall, of 46 to 18 or 19.

Mr. LUCAS. Forty-nine to sixteen.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was passed by a vote of 49 to 16 with that provision in it. There was not any serious objection to it, because we had all recognized for a long time the vice of growing, expanding special committees. No one contended then, and no one contends now, that the Reorganization Act nullified that provision of the Constitution of the United States which provides that each House may adopt its own rules. There is no controversy about that. The question is whether we desire now, on the very threshold of the administration of the Reorganization Act, to break down the barrier which we tried to set up in the Reorganization Act against special committees, and which I have no doubt would have been kept in the law if it had not been for the fact that we were about to adjourn the Congress, there was not time for cool conference and deliberation at the time, and the Senator from Wisconsin stated that if there was any delay even in accepting the House amendments the whole bill would be in danger, and it might be a quarter of a century before we got another.

Mr. LUCAS. The mere fact that the House struck out the provision did not take away the intent of the United States Senate when it debated this matter so conclusively and thoroughly for 3 days.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The able Senator from Illinois referred to my record on the Reorganization Act with great kindness and hopefulness. He indicated, however, that, on the basis of the record, unless I declined to approve an extension of this special committee, I would not be in harmony with my original position.

I know the Senator would not wish to do the record any injustice and, therefore, with his permission, I should like to call his attention to the remainder of my colloquy with the able former Senator from Wisconsin, on the prior page of the RECORD from which he read.

Mr. LUCAS. What page is that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Page 6394 of the RECORD for June 6, 1946. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that after I had interrogated the Senator from Wisconsin about my belief that there were sometimes situations which could better be served by special or select committees than by regular committees, and he had made his reply substantially conceding that such a situation could arise, I said—and I read from the RECORD:

I think this is one of the few places in the bill where I am not sure I agree with the philosophy of my able friend from Wisconsin.

Then I call the able Senator's attention to the additional statement in the following colloquy, when I again said:

However, I would not want section 126—

The section proscribing special committees—

I would not want section 126 to be read as meaning that we do not recognize that there may be extraordinary situations, of which the best illustration at the moment is the control of atomic energy, which are better served by special and select committees, and perhaps by joint committees.

To which the able Senator from Wisconsin, the author of the bill, replied:

I grant that point, and have conceded it in the brief time we have been able to devote to the consideration of the bill today.

I am not entering this controversy on the pending resolution. I am merely indicating to my able friend from Illinois that I think a fair interpretation of the RECORD will show that my position with respect to special committees, as indicated in the debate from which the Senator quoted, is that if there is a situation which in my judgment recommends a special committee as the more useful approach to a successful conclusion, it is my interpretation, and was at the time, that I would be free so to vote; and I think the Senator from Wisconsin concurred that I would enjoy that freedom.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Just one moment; I am sorry.

I do not want to prolong the debate too long with respect to our good friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I remember the Senator from Michigan was talking about special and select committees and joint committees, and the Atomic Committee. But now that he has quoted that particular part of the debate that he had with Senator La Follette, I think the RECORD should show that Senator La Follette, on June 6, 1946, at page 6395, spoke as follows:

I grant that point, and have conceded in the brief time we have been able to devote to the consideration of the bill today. I have conceded the point several times, but I have also contended that when ar issue or a problem of similar magnitude arises, it will not be difficult to get the respective House which may be concerned, or both Houses, to suspend the rules.

Furthermore, section 122 is designed, by giving blanket authority for joint action, to eliminate the necessity for special action to bring the opposite number of committees of the two Houses together, and it is our hope that that practice will grow—

It is my hope, Mr. President, that joint committees will grow upon important matters of this kind, as a matter of efficiency and good government, the practice of having joint committees will grow—and, as a result, that it may save the time of witnesses and administrative officials, and may help to bring into better coordination the relationship of legislative activities in the fields of joint committees as they may come to collaborate.

The Senator from Michigan and I have seen perhaps the best example of that in the work of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

And here is the reply of the able Senator from Michigan, now President pro tempore of the Senate:

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his statement, and I think our statements are in substantial agreement.

I take my seat—

And so forth. I read into the RECORD a moment ago what the able Senator from Michigan said at that point, but there is another remark the Senator from Michigan made I wish to read.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Just one moment, if I may.

Mr. VANDENBERG. While the Senator is inquiring further into the RECORD, I should like to remind him that the Atomic Energy Committee, which we were then discussing, was not a joint committee; it was a select Senate committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; but it ultimately became a joint committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was unable to obtain authorization for a joint committee, which I originally sought, and we had to develop the legislation in a special select Senate committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Be that as it may, it became a joint committee, and in discussing this very question, on page 6440, after Senator La Follette explained to the Senator from Michigan that a two-thirds vote of the Senate would be necessary, since section 126 was in effect the rule of the Senate, subject to suspension, the Senator from Michigan said:

I thank the Senator for his statement. I think it conclusively answers any objection I could have had to section 126.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I might agree that the quotation by the Senator from Illinois is correct. The Senator is always very fair, and I am sure he will agree that I entered a reservation on the question of select committees, and that the Senator from Wisconsin and I found ourselves in agreement that under the Reorganization Act, if a subject mounted to the dignity which the Senate thought required a special committee, it would not be in violation of the spirit of the act, if the Senate was prepared to proceed by a two-thirds vote to establish it.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The difference in the situations is that we are proposing to establish it by a majority vote instead of by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, that is the point I wished to emphasize. I am afraid the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] did not make that as clear in his remarks as no doubt he intended to do. It is absolutely correct that if it had remained in the bill, the Senate by a two-thirds vote, if it had thought proper, could have abrogated the rule and set up a special committee, but the only other way that a special committee could have been created by a majority vote would have been to have abrogated the rule entirely by a change in the Senate rules, after which there would have been no prohibition.

If any matter were of such urgency that two-thirds of the Senate would say that a special committee should be created, it was never intended by the Reorganization Committee, that such action should be outlawed, made impossible, but it was intended to prevent special committees being created without a two-thirds vote of the Senate, and now we are asked to create a special committee by only a majority vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If there is a point of difference between "one-half" and "two-thirds," I respectfully submit the point is canceled by the fact that section 126 went out of the bill entirely and is not in the law at all.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not disagree with the last point that the able Senator has made; I think definitely a majority vote is all that is necessary. It is unnecessary to have a two-thirds vote. But when section 126 was stricken it did not take away what we did by our previous vote on the floor of the United States Senate.

If anyone can convince me that the committee which the Senator from Michigan is talking about, is one of those committees necessary to handle an extraordinary situation that no standing committee can handle, then I might believe there is merit in his argument.

Here is a committee, Mr. President, that a year ago had hardly sufficient material to carry on. I have made this statement before. The then Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, came to me and cut down the appropriation that he desired. As I recall, he wanted originally $125,000, and he finally cut it down to $85,000, and his committee had a difficult time giving to the Committee on Audit and Control an agenda that would justify that amount. What is the agenda today that places this committee in the extraordinary class to which the Senator from Michigan refers? Is there anything so gigantic, colossal, and important in the continuation of this special committee? Not at all, Mr. President.

The Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, last year came to our committee for money, almost begging, and said definitely, "We will close up shop on January 1, 1947."

What great development has taken place that has caused this committee to come within the category described even by the Senator from Michigan? It just is not there. It is a political illusion and nothing more.

It is an affront to the able Senator from Vermont, head of the Committee on Expenditures. It was an affront to the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the able Senator from South Dakota, and because he did not take the affront it became necessary to revise the resolution depriving the Brewster committee of a trip to Europe to investigate matters under the control of the State Department and the War Department.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I am not yielding. They could not go to Europe. The plan, a well-laid plan, as everyone knows, was to go into the zone of Army occupation. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] objected. The proponents of the Brewster resolution did not have the votes, and they retreated to the continental limits of the United States.

They are now doing the same thing to the committee headed by the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] that they attempted to do to the committee of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]. The only reason they are proceeding now is because they think they have the votes; that is all. They knew they did not have the votes to take over-all jurisdiction. I hope no one will believe they retreated voluntarily. They wanted jurisdiction over the whole universe. That is exactly what they wanted in this special committee—jurisdiction of the world.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. They have visited all parts of the world. I think they relinquished the wrong jurisdiction. If anybody is going to investigate things on the outside of the United States, the so-called Brewster committee would be experts because they have been traveling throughout the universe.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Now I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator state to whom he was referring when he said the statement was made that the committee would be closed at the end of the last session.

Mr. LUCAS. I was referring to the former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, when he came to our committee and said what I have repeated. I do not know whether the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was there at the time; at least Senator Mead made the statement in my presence.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. The statement was made in my presence, and in the presence of the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], that the special committee, the Mead committee, would ask for not one penny after January 1, 1947. At the meeting we recommended for the committee an appropriation of $100,000. I was there.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The question was not what statement was made, but who made it. It sounded on this side as though the distinguished Senator from Illinois said it was the distinguished Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, no.

Mr. FERGUSON. I desire the RECORD to be made clear as to who said it.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not wish the RECORD to show that the Senator from Michigan said he would close up anything by January 1, 1947.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I desired to have made clear.

Mr. LUCAS. I had much experience with my good friend from Michigan in the Pearl Harbor investigation. I know that he is a very methodical investigator, and that it takes him a long time to do things. He just could not close up an investigation in that length of time. I am sorry; I apologize to the Senator if I indicated that he was attempting to hurry anything along in the course of his investigation, because he just does not work in that way.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I thank the Senator from Illinois for all his courteous acts. I find a copy of what is apparently the statement of the former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, in presenting the budget of the committee, under date of March 28, 1946, which I assume is the date to which the Senator refers. This I hold in my hand, and shall be happy to present it, if the Senator desires, for the RECORD. In this statement former Senator Mead simply refers to the carrying on of the work of the committee for the remaining 9 months of the year from April 1, 1946, to December 31, 1946. There is no language in the statement which indicates anything one way or another as to the future of the committee. Senator Mead was simply asking the committee for the money necessary to carry on the work of his committee to that date.

Subsequent to that time, on July 24, 1946, when the Congress was nearing the conclusion of its work, there is a further statement, which I have in my hand, presented by the former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, the then chairman of the committee, to the Senator from Illinois as chairman of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reciting as follows:

> If the committee is to carry out what it conceives to be the wishes of the Senate and the public to conduct an intensive investigation of war profiteering at this time, involving the holding of committee hearings during recess and the preparation and development of facts for public hearing, not only will the reduction of the staff be impossible, but additional investigative and clerical personnel must be obtained and the existing staff will be unable to take the extensive vacations planned. Furthermore, such an investigation will involve higher expenditures for the travel of investigators and witnesses, witnesses' fees, the reporting of conferences and executive hearings, and higher general administrative expenses.
> Therefore the committee—

After assigning some of these projects which were under way at that time—> requests an additional appropriation of $65,000 for the last 6 months of the present session of the Congress.

Giving the details on which that request was based. Those are the two statements, so far as I know, dealing with these matters.

I thank the Senator from Illinois for yielding to me.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I recall very well the last appropriation that was given to the special committee, which was sometime in the middle of the summer during the investigation of the Erie Basin case, when the committee requested the additional $65,000. Let me tell the Senate what former Senator Mead said on the floor of the Senate in June of last year, at the time when the committee was investigating the Erie Basin case. In a colloquy with Senator La Follette, Senator Mead made this statement:

> Let me say to the able Senator that I wish to commend him for this splendid report which he has presented to the Senate, and the able manner in which he has presented his views. I am in agreement with him in regard to most of the provisions of this bill. We usually have quite a number of special committees. Although I am a member of several special committees, I am not concerned with continuing to be a member of them. I feel that all of them should be eliminated.

That was on the floor of the United States Senate, a statement made by the then Senator James Mead, chairman of the Mead committee, which is the committee that is sought to be continued at the present time. In other words, in the midst of the sensational Garsson case, the chairman of the committee told the Senate of the United States and the country that he thought all special committees should be abandoned, and it is in line with the statement he gave to the Senator from Illinois, who at that time was chairman of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to the effect that when January 1 came along this particular committee should be discontinued.

Mr. President, the able Senator from Maine has discussed the budget which was submitted to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in April of last year. It is a very interesting document. I shall discuss another budget some day when a request with respect to another special committee comes up. Under a resolution offered by the able Senator from Nebraska every committee seeking money had to submit a budget dealing with the amount of money requested and showing how the committee was to spend the money, if the resolution called for more than $5,000. I noticed that the Senator from Nebraska was the first Senator to violate the rule in the Eightieth Congress when, in a resolution submitted by him, he asked for a cool $50,000, and the request went to the Committee on Rules and Administration without any explanation, without any budget. That committee reported the resolution, and it is now pending on the calendar, ready to be acted upon when we conclude the business which is now before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to take the Senator from Illinois off the floor, but I wish to present an amendment to the pending amendment. It would not be in order as an amendment to the amendment unless the author of the amendment is willing to accept it. The amendment not being in the nature of a substitute but in the form of an amendment. I wish to add to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland the following:

Provided further, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is specifically authorized to obtain from the Treasury Department or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the income-tax returns or any information indicated therein of any individual, person, copartnership, association, trust or corporation deemed by said committee to be useful or necessary to it for the proper discharge of its duties under this (S. Res. 46) resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be very glad to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and I ask that the suggestion he has just read be sent to the desk and incorporated in my original amendment, and that the whole amendment, with the added part just read, be reprinted, so it will be available for Senators at the next regular session of the Senate.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I wish to say a word in regard to the matter now under discussion. I realize that the statute provides for such action as the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Maryland have requested. I also realize that the authority of the present Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program to have access to some income-tax returns stems from a Presidential order. In view of the possibility that the functions of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program may be transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I called the President a few minutes ago and was assured by him that the same courtesy in permitting the examination of income-tax returns which I believe has been granted to the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program during its existence would also be granted to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should the function of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, with the files, staff, records, and so forth, be turned over to it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wish to address an inquiry to the Senator from Vermont, who has just spoken to the President. Am I to understand that the President has indicated that he would give his consent to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to look into income-tax returns if the committee did not get the files of the Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, or only if the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments obtains the files of the special committee?

In other words, if the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, including the language now proposed by the Senator from Georgia, is adopted, then the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would be given permission to look at the income-tax returns; is that correct? I think it is a very valuable privilege and power.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me add that the amendment which I am now suggesting could not be offered under the rule, it being an amendment in the third degree. If the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, with the amendment which I am now suggesting, should be agreed to in the form proposed, the whole controversy would be beyond the realm of dispute.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan, with the permission of the Senator from Illinois, that I think he will recall that the Executive order signed by the President conferring this authority on the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program was a limited power, to be exerted only under certain circumstances, whereas the proposal made by the able Senator from Georgia is all-encompassing, so that hereafter no special case would have to be made. Hereafter the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would have direct authority to go to the Treasury and obtain any returns the committee desired, without having to ask the permission of anyone. So the net result of the amendment as now proposed to be amended by the Senator from Georgia would be to give to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments unimpeded and complete authority over the whole matter of income-tax returns and other returns, should that committee desire to have such authority in the case of any individual or corporation. In some respects this is stronger and broader and more definite power than that now enjoyed under an Executive order of the President.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for the purpose of clearing up one point?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I appreciate that if the able Senator from Maryland accepts the modification it will cover all cases. But if the amendment of the able Senator from Maryland were not agreed to, and if the original resolution were adopted, has the President indicated to the able Senator from Vermont that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments will possess the power to inspect income-tax returns notwithstanding the possible failure of the Senate to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. AIKEN. The President assured me that the same courtesy would be extended to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as has been extended to the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to have that statement, because it will be of great aid to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will further yield, it might be well to read into the RECORD the authority for the amendment which has been accepted by the Senator from Maryland, and which was suggested by the Senator from Georgia. That authority is found on page 30, volume 53, part 1, of the Internal Revenue Code. I read from section 55:

(D) INSPECTION BY COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS

(1) Committees on Ways and Means and Finance.

(A) The Secretary and any officer or employee of the Treasury Department, upon request from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or a select committee of the Senate or House specially authorized to investigate returns by a resolution of the Senate or House, or a joint committee so authorized by concurrent resolution, shall furnish such committee sitting in executive session with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return.

(B) Any such committee shall have the right, acting directly as a committee, or by or through such examiners or agents as it may designate or appoint, to inspect any or all of the returns at such times and in such manner as it may determine.

(C) Any relevant or useful information thus obtained may be submitted by the committee obtaining it to the Senate or the House, or to both the Senate and the House, as the case may be.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the statute.

Mr. AIKEN. It seems to me that with the statutory authority, with the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, and with the assurance of the President that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would be granted the same courtesy as has been granted the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would be clothed with ample authority to examine any income-tax returns in connection with its duties.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is entirely correct. I have framed this amendment within the meaning and spirit of section 55 of the Internal Revenue Code. It takes the whole question out of the realm of controversy.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. The proceeding is upon the assumption that the standing Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments is a select committee.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senate by resolution selects a committee to do a particular work, it is a select committee.

Mr. BREWSTER. What is the parliamentary significance of the word "select"? Does it usually refer to a standing committee or a special committee?

Mr. GEORGE. It refers to any committee charged with a specific duty; and under section 55 of the Internal Revenue Code the same authority may be given to even a joint committee of the House and Senate.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is true.

Mr. GEORGE. Or to any standing committee which is charged with a specific duty. That is my understanding.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to have this point cleared up. From my experience I had the impression that a select committee referred to a special committee. The language of the act further would imply that. It says:

> A select committee of the Senate or House specially authorized to investigate returns by a resolution of the Senate or House.

That would seem to be the significance of it. I do not think this is now a matter of great consequence, since the statement of the President to which the Senator from Vermont has referred, and the assurance of continuing under section 55. In any event, when the President is given full authority to authorize such a proceeding, that would clarify it beyond doubt. However, there is the question as to whether or not the Senate would have authority to take action independently of joint action.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say to the Senator from Maine that this particular section 55, with the several amendments which have been made to it from time to time, was a compromise with the old section at one time included in our revenue acts, making individual income-tax returns completely public, making public records of them. The committee finally decided—and the Senate sustained the viewpoint—that income-tax returns ought not to be made public willy-nilly, without any restrictions. So the decision as to the conditions under which they might be made public was placed in the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States. Furthermore, the committee was unwilling to cut itself off from the power to examine all returns, and the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives therefore wrote this particular section. We were also willing that any other committee which was specifically authorized by resolution of either House should have the same privilege of examination of the returns and use of the returns. The use of the word "select" in the statute undoubtedly means any committee on which had been imposed a specific duty or a specific work.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I was very happy to yield for the purpose of having the able Senator from Georgia suggest this modification of the amendment offered by the able Senator from Maryland. It seems to me that as a result of what has been accomplished here, or will be accomplished when this amendment is adopted, there can be no reason under the shining sun why the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should not make the investigation contemplated in this amendment.

Mr. President, if the Brewster amendment should be adopted, the Senate of the United States would make a most serious mistake. We would depart from the reorganization bill on almost the opening day of Congress. For the life of me I cannot understand why it is that Senators on the other side of the aisle continue to fight for the committee which is headed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]; and that is especially true in view of the fact that the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I know that the Senator from Maine has served on a great many investigating committees. I happened to serve on one with him, and I know who did the work on that particular committee, so far as the minority at that time was concerned. I take off my hat to the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] for his constant, vigilant work. The able Senator from Maine was on that committee, but he was in and out. He would come in for about 30 minutes, ask a few questions, get the "headlines," and away he would go. The Senator from Michigan was there every day. I know that, because I, too, was there every day. I was there to watch him.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator asked the question as to why those on the other side of the aisle were exerting such great efforts to bring about the continuation of the special committee. Does the Senator suppose that the story in the Star last Friday had anything to do with it, with the promise of a sensation a day?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know about that. I can hardly believe that that would have anything to do with it. I think it is something that is closer to the people than that, if the Senator knows what I mean.

Mr. McMAHON. I could guess.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator can guess I shall not speculate further.

The more I read the debates upon the reorganization bill last year the more firmly am I convinced that those who were responsible for this congressional reform believed the statement of Senator La Follette that the fate of democracy was wrapped up in that reorganization bill. Yet we find Republicans fighting day after day to destroy the basic and fundamental structure of the Reorganization Act. Once that is done, the creation of other special committees cannot be prevented.

I do not know what the Democrats will do about special committees once the bar is down; the chances are that if the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] wants an oil-investigating committee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] wants a wool committee, and some other Senator wants another committee their wishes will prevail. Once the door is opened and they get their feet in, the whole body will eventually enter, and the Reorganization Act will be broken down to the point where it will be completely ineffective.

By reason of being chairman of the old Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I know exactly what special committees will do. I was opposed to most of them. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was usually trying to help me get rid of special committees then. But not today. The picture is a little different today, Mr. President, from what it was at that time. I have a list of special committees which went out of existence, or which were supposed to have gone out of existence with the passage of the reorganization bill. There are approximately nine of them. I do not know how many million dollars have been spent on special committees, but, as an example, for the past 25 years there has been a Special Committee on Wildlife, which spent more than $125,000. What they have really accomplished is subject to debate.

Mr. President, once the camel gets its nose under the tent—or it may be an elephant this time—it means good-by to the Reorganization Act.

I return to the budget which the Senator from Maine was talking about a while ago. I asked the counsel of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program to write me a letter as to what had happened to the five propositions laid down in the budget under the caption "Future work of the committee." This is what they said they would investigate: First, Inter-American Highway; second, aircraft; third, disposal of movable domestic surpluses; fourth, disposal of surplus industrial plants; and fifth, review of national-defense activities in World War II.

I asked the counsel of the committee to tell me what had happened to those five different activities submitted to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in March 1946. Listen to his reply:

> You asked me telephonically about the status of the five subjects referred to in the proposed budget of the Mead committee dated March 28, 1946.

His letter is dated January 11, 1947.

The subjects were as follows:

1. Inter-American Highway.
2. Aircraft.
3. Disposal of movable domestic surpluses.
4. Disposal of surplus industrial plants.
5. Review of national defense activities in World War II.

Briefly, the status of these matters at the present moment is as follows:

Inter-American Highway: A field investigation trip along the route of the highway in Central America was taken in August and September of 1946 and hearings were held in Los Angeles and in Washington. A preliminary memorandum has been prepared, but has not received the approval of the committee, and there has been some discussion that further public hearings in Washington should be held. This investigation is nearly complete and a report should be filed with the Senate in a very short time.

I doubt that they would have any jurisdiction in that matter under the new resolution. This letter is dated January 11, 1947, and the matter involved is beyond the continental limits of the United States. I think they are out under this resolution if it is adopted. Under any theory, the counsel says that the report is about ready to be filed.

Reading further:

Aircraft: This report was filed with the Senate by a subcommittee, of which Senator Mitchell was chairman, on June 7, 1946, being Report No. 110, part 6. This is attached as an appendix on page 125 of the fifth annual report to the committee, a copy of which is enclosed.

So there is nothing left as to the subject of aircraft. That is No. 2.

No. 3 is disposal of movable domestic surpluses. I quote further from the letter:

Subsequent to the date of the budget you referred to, a number of congressional committees held hearings on surplus property, some of them being subcommittees of standing legislative committees. Although our committee did hold a few hearings and continued to handle routine matters referred to it, it did not emphasize this aspect of its work because of the attention this subject was receiving by the other committees.

That relates to other committees investigating surplus property. Yet this was one of the subjects the Mead committee said it wanted to investigate when it asked for $85,000. That committee did not investigate that subject, because other committees were investigating it.

It would be interesting to know how many committees in Congress have been investigating surplus property in the past year.

Quoting further from the letter:

The committee has not filed a report on domestic surpluses since report No. 110, part 1, filed with the Senate on March 22, 1945. A copy of this report is also enclosed.

Disposal of surplus industrial plants: The committee held a hearing on November 21, 1946, which related to the disposal of the Chicago Dodge plant, as well as the controversy between the Tucker Corp. and the Lustron Corp., and Mr. Wilson Wyatt (National Housing Administrator) and Mr. George Allen (Director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation). However, the hearing was held principally because of the housing aspects of the matter, rather than the disposal of the plant. The committee had understood that Senator O'MAHONEY'S subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee was concentrating on the disposal of Government surplus real estate, and although routine complaints were handled by our committee, no report was issued.

So there is nothing in that for the committee to investigate.

I read further from the letter:

Review of national defense activities in World War II: The fifth annual report discussed lessons as to future national defense which could be gained from the committee's experience during World War II. It cannot be considered a complete review or a detailed discussion of the entire work of the committee since its creation on March 1, 1941.

Subsequent to the budget request filed with your committee on March 28, 1946, the committee commenced its war-profiteering investigation and appeared again before your committee on July 24, 1946, and requested an additional allowance of $65,000, which was granted and which contemplated in the estimated budget submitted an addition to the staff to handle the increased work involved in this investigation. Personnel was borrowed, with a provision for reimbursement, from the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the General Accounting Office.

This investigation, which consumed a great deal of the committee's time, both of the members and the staff, resulted in three public hearings—the Erie Basin Metal Products case, the case of Congressman John M. Coffee, and the case of Senator THEODORE G. BILBO.

The work involved in the war-profiteering investigation is also responsible for the slackening of the committee's efforts in the field of surplus property, as well as the fact that several other congressional committees were active in the surplus-property field.

I hope the foregoing will supply the information in which you are interested, but in case it does not, please advise me.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE MEADER,
Chief Counsel.

Mr. President, the point I make is very simple. It is that under the rule which was laid down in connection with the functioning of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Fund of the Senate, some kind of a budget, some kind of an explanation, should have been submitted to the Rules and Administration Committee, as well as to the Senate, in regard to what the special committee proposed to do. So far as anything in the 1945 agenda of the special committee is concerned, today there is nothing left for that committee to do, Mr. President.

Assuming that the able Senator from Michigan was correct, I say that the situation in regard to the special committee falls far short of being in that extraordinary class which falls upon one like the atomic bomb fell on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. So much for that, Mr. President. I wish to hurry along now, for I have talked longer than I anticipated.

Let me say that when the Senate adopted section 126, it abolished all special committees. Therefore, all jurisdiction in those committees, which overlapped the jurisdiction of standing committees, was automatically transferred to standing committees; hence the meticulous care with which jurisdiction was spelled out for each standing committee under the Reorganization Act.

The argument is being made that because the House struck out section 126 of the bill and the Senate concurred therein, the Senate is not bound by the original provision which it voted on for the abandonment of special committees.

Mr. President, if the rule-making power of the Senate and the House had not been reserved, under the Constitution, to each House, I would immediately concur in that line of argument; but I respectfully point out that the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, under paragraph (b) of section 101, had this to say:

With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change rules (so far as are related to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.

The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] recognized this in the debates; and, after quoting the above section, he said:

In other words, the Senate, having full power over its own rules, reserves that power unto itself, even though it agrees with the provisions of this measure.

The Senator was eminently correct when he was talking for this measure. Little did I think that one so lofty in thought and so pure of heart, one who tells the country he is continually searching for the truth, could change his mind on this important question since June 6 of last year. The point I make, Mr. President, is that the mere fact that the House struck this out of an act which was in reality not binding legislation at all, in no wise affects the vote, the debates, the argument, and the almost unanimous agreement with respect to the abolishment of special committees when the matter was directly before the Senate. No good lawyer will contend otherwise.

Senator La Follette said:

Let me say that the day after this bill becomes law, every rule pertaining to the Senate could be changed or modified by a majority of the Senate, and the House could take similar action in respect to its rules.

Mr. President, that is exactly what we propose to do today, unless the amendment offered by the able Senator from Maryland is adopted. Here in the third week of a new Congress, we are asking the majority to change the rules that were passed and agreed upon by the Senate of the United States in the Seventy-ninth Congress. If that should happen, the Republicans must assume the responsibility for taking a backward step, retreating, and moving toward the old archaic organization groove in which the Congress found itself almost helpless to transact the extraordinary amount of business which it is compelled to dispose of in each session. They are not even waiting to give reorganization a chance, to see whether it will work.

If those on the other side of the aisle are successful in defeating this counter-resolution, the ultimate result may be tragic for our representative form of government. Every individual who has made the slightest study of the decline and fall of democratic governments knows that one of the great contributing factors was the failure of the legislative branches of government to efficiently and expeditiously carry out the will of the people. As a result, representative government disappeared in those countries. I undertake to say that today representative government in this country is on trial, as a result of what is going on throughout the world.

Mr. President, from what occurred last year in the Seventy-ninth Congress, it is evident that the people of this country are vitally interested and concerned in having the Congress take a forward step in positive congressional reform. In the Seventy-ninth Congress the Senate of the United States carried out the wish of the people in regard to this matter. I am happy that I cast my vote in the affirmative. I did so in the belief that when we passed the Reorganization Act, we meant exactly what we said. So to me it is shocking and a strange coincidence that here, in the third week of the Eightieth Congress, we see positive steps taken by the Republicans in the direction of reaction and regression, as we witness this attempt to tear down the temple of congressional reform which we have constructed.

I want it understood by every Member of the Senate and every citizen of this country that the Senator from Illinois is in no way attempting to thwart or block any investigation that the majority here in the Senate believes advisable and necessary, insofar as the conduct of the war is concerned, or insofar as the problems dealing with the reconstruction period are concerned. Any insidious reference that Democrats upon this side of the aisle are opposed to the investigation for fear delinquencies of the administration might be disclosed, or that we are trying to block any investigation, is sheer balderdash, pure tommyrot, and worthless political poppycock.

Mr. President, I have been traveling down the highway of life for a great many years; I have met many people in my time, and have had intimate and close association with a great number of them, and I have discovered that those who are doing something they know they should not be doing never have any hesitancy in shifting the responsibility to the other fellow. They do it with clever words and deeds, in an insidious way.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, you can look behind the secret curtain, that deep, dark, mysterious curtain, although under the Democratic administration, under the then Senators Harry Truman and James Mead and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], we have been investigating war contracts, fraud, and corruption for quite a while. But you can continue to examine everything you wish, anything and everything your imagination leads you to think is shrouded in mystery; you can trace from the beginning to the end every dollar of the billions that were spent to save this Nation from military despots overseas. You can attack and attack and attack. You can investigate and investigate and investigate. You can fulminate and fumigate to your heart's content, with only your political conscience as your guide; you can smear, smell, fish, and hunt; and the Senator from Illinois will interpose no objection so long as it is done under the spirit and the letter of the Reorganization Act. Today I merely wish to know whether the present Members of the Senate who were in the Senate of the United States last June meant what they said when they were discussing that important question, or whether they were simply "kidding" the American people for political reasons.

Oh, Mr. President, what a reflection upon the various chairmen and members who have been selected to guide the destinies of these 15 committees. I prophesy now that, once the Congress of the United States lets down the flood gates of special committees, within a very short time nearly all the chairmen of these respective committees will be complaining to the high heavens about special committees cutting across and digging deeply into the jurisdiction which they will enjoy under the Reorganization Act.

Mr. President, no chairman of a committee under this Reorganization Act can retain his power, his prestige, and his respect, if we are to permit a rash of special committees to come to the Senate of the United States and run like wildfire over the jurisdiction of every other committee, and that is exactly what we are leading up to, because under no circumstances can this committee be justified. If it can it would be possible to justify a dozen special committees that I know will be proposed to this Senate in a very short while.

The Small Business Committee is of greater importance, from the standpoint of long-range determination of the future of our country, than is the particular special committee we are now discussing, and the Small Business Committee is the next thing we will have to consider. From an economic and social standpoint, even the wool committee and the petroleum committee, based upon the consideration of permanency and long-range performance, are of greater importance to the country than anything that would be done by the particular committee we are now considering.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator has just stated that the Small Business Committee has a long-range function. If it has, and it is to be performed by a special committee, should it not be a permanent committee?

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps so.

Mr. McFARLAND. It should be formed and made a permanent committee, in addition to the standing committees we already have.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator may be correct.

Mr. President, it is with deep regret that I find the leaders of the Republicans in the Senate of the United States, meeting almost daily, conferring and pledging their Members to vote for a resolution that is squarely in the teeth of congressional reform as passed in the Senate last June.

Mr. President, we are taking a step backward instead of going forward in the process of legislative reform if the counter resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland and modified by the Senator from Georgia shall not be agreed to. We will endorse a policy which will start to whittle away the foundation stones of the Reorganization Act—a program which will ultimately bring forward the meat ax for the purpose of destroying one of the most important pieces of legislation, looking toward the perpetuity of free Government which has ever been enacted since we became a republic.

I know my last plea will not be heeded; I know the votes are already lined up, and whatever one says in the Senate will have little effect, but it is necessary to make the record, a record which will some day rise up and strike a hard blow at those who support the Brewster resolution.

I make this final plea to independent Senators on both sides of the aisle, to throw off the cloak of partisanship which has been hurriedly thrown over your shoulders by some unusual legislative and partisan move. Remember, a vote for the Brewster resolution is a vote against good government.

EXHIBIT A

(From section 102, Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946)

(4) Each Senator shall serve on two standing committees and no more; except that Senators of the majority party who are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia or of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments may serve on three standing committees and no more.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER obtained the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, at the outset of the few observations I shall make on this subject I wish to say that not only as a Republican and a member of the minority up until the 3d day of January last but also as a member of the present majority and as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I am grateful beyond expression for the solicitude for the sanctity of the office of chairmen of the committees in their respective capacities expressed by the Members on the other side of the aisle in this sudden burst of anxiety for the Republicans and their responsibility.

I appreciate their solicitude now more especially. I have a memory going back at least 2 years, and I am certainly glad that we are now witnessing such a fine show of cooperation in the general overall conduct of the public business.

As a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments I am especially thankful for this solicitude, because it means that at long last there is united agreement upon both sides of the aisle that this committee, which has so long been dormant, shall become active in keeping with its obligations.

But Mr. President, it occurs to me to ask, Why all this solicitude now for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in connection with this particular matter, when for 2 years under Democratic control and Democratic leadership never once was a suggestion made by the then majority that the then existing Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should undertake any prying or investigatory work or examination into subjects which it is now proposed the special committee shall investigate and which in the past have been investigated by that committee?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator for yielding, but it occurs to me to suggest to the distinguished Senator from Iowa that apparently he has forgotten the fact that last July Congress passed the La Follette-Monroney reorganization bill, an act which changed the whole picture and placed the jurisdiction of all Senate business in standing committees, creating 15 instead of 45. That is the reason for the solicitude.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. At this point in the argument I think it might be worth while to interject that when the reorganization bill came before the Senate it contained a section prohibiting special committees. The bill went to the House, and that body refused to accept that provision and struck it out because they considered it most unwise. They knew there might be occasions when special committees would be needed, so they deleted the provision. It came back to the Senate, and the sponsors of the bill in the Senate, after discussing the matter with many Senators, considered it unwise to try to reinsert the provision in the bill. It was left out of the bill, which was accepted and approved by the Senate, without the prohibition in it.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me, so I may correct my friend from New Jersey, and give him a little more information which, apparently, he is lacking?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The House did not take it out, but that great concentration of power known as the Rules Committee of the House took it out. The House did not vote on it.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator means the Democratic power in the House?

Mr. TOBEY. I mean what I said—the House Rules Committee.

Mr. HAWKES. I am told an entirely different story. The House Rules Committee did not take it out. The story I got was that it was taken out through an agreement with the Speaker, because there was a realization of the impossibility of passing the reorganization bill in the House with that provision included in it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am sure that the Senator from New Hampshire, with his experience in the House, does not mean to imply that the Rules Committee could have controlled the action of the House, if the House in the final analysis should disagree. It was only with the approval of the House that the bill came back here to the Senate with that provision eliminated.

Mr. TOBEY. I point out to the Senator from Maine he and I both having served in the House, that the Rules Committee of the House is the most arbitrary body, with tremendous power and influence. It is almost a "thus saith the Lord!" which emanates from the Rules Committee when they take a position. I remember, and present it as exhibit A, the activities of the House Rules Committee in the olden days, the glorious days of 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, under the Republicans, when they would bring forth gag rules under which no amendment could be offered at all. That is the way they functioned. The Senator knows that to be so.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senators for their aid in interpreting the particular action referred to.

Mr. TOBEY. Aid and comfort—put it that way.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator, but as I read the RECORD, the reorganization bill has been passed, as it now reads, by both Houses of Congress. The brief triangular colloquy which occurred a little while ago reminds me somewhat of the old story of the Britisher who came to this country and was conducted on a tour of inspection of Boston and vicinity. The old fellow who was guiding him around Boston took him to Bunker Hill where the famous battle occurred. When the Britisher got there he adjusted his glasses and looked over the battlefield and said to the guide, "Is not this the place where we British gave you Yankees such a drubbing in '76?" The old fellow who was guiding him said, "I am not too familiar with the details of history, but who owns the ground now?"

Mr. President, it makes very little difference to me how the mechanics of the passage of the reorganization measure are interpreted. The fact is that it was passed as it now reads with the approval of both the House and the Senate, and it is the law, subject only to such modification as lies within the sovereign right of each body to change and amend its own rules. It does not prohibit the establishment of any special committee. That matter was considered in the bosom of the legislative branch of the Government, and the legislative branch in its sovereign authority saw fit not to include such a prohibition after an amendment looking to that end had been offered, debated, and put in the bill by at least one branch of the Congress.

Therefore the question of what went into the bill and what did not go into it does not necessarily inhere in the argument at this time. The fact is there is no prohibition, and there seems to be general agreement that there may be and there is a place for special committees to investigate special fields if in the opinion of each House such committees are essential to efficient examination into those fields.

I feel Mr. President, that here is a case perhaps above all others for the continuance—not for the establishment if you please, but for the continuance of a special committee, at least for a limited season, until the vast new congressional reorganization program under which none of the committees yet know the full extent of their authority or power, can begin to operate and the committees can take over as rapidly as possible their duties under the law.

Mr. President, I think I was as much for the reorganization bill as anyone could be. I have been in the Senate only 2 years. I think perhaps a new Member is more restive over what sometimes appear to be dilatory tactics and delays than is a Member who has been here for a more substantial period of time. Frankly, I am still restive under any procedure of this body that seems to be dilatory, that seems to involve unnecessary delay, that fails in the interest of public good to proceed expeditiously in the examination and disposition of the public business.

I now desire to call attention to one or two facts which seem to me to be significant. In the first place, I see two things that are very evident indeed. One is that for some reason a great effort is being exerted and tremendous resistance offered on the part of the present minority in this body to prevent further activity and work on the part of the special committee, and a vigorous attempt to shunt its activities, which have been well-started and well-coordinated, to a standing committee of the Senate that may or may not be fully authorized or fully equipped even under the Reorganization Act to take them over.

Secondly, there seems to be a great determination that the distinguished junior Senator from Maine shall not be permitted to use his fine powers of investigation and his tremendous vigor and zeal in behalf of the American people to take charge of all the future investigations in this field. I think both matters are very significant.

The junior Senator from Maine has established an enviable reputation for the determination with which he has sought to uncover and disclose corruption in these days of confusion, and I fear that he has been too successful in the past to suit some segments of our population and some people who may have vital interests in that field. I feel that there is a strong personal attack on the Senator from Maine, and I feel that it is unjust and unfounded. There is an attempt to stop the special committee, but further than that, there is a determination on the part of the minority, or at least some of the Members of the minority, to see that above all the Senator from Maine does not have the opportunity to dig into the things that yet need to be explored in our recent great war effort.

Mr. President, as I said, I am a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and I have been ever since I have been in the Senate. I may say, since the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] is present, that I know how restless he has been in the past as I have been, because of the inactivity of that committee. We felt, and both of us have so stated on the floor of the Senate, that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should exercise greater functions than it has in the past and should be active. I am not at all in favor of reducing or evading the responsibilities or the field of examination of the committee. On the other hand, I am for the committee exercising its full reasonable field of authority in the examination of public affairs.

Mr. President, let me read the field assigned by the Reorganization Act to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The first is:

(A) Budget and accounting measures, other than appropriations.

Section 138 of the Reorganization Act itself begins to chip away at the authority of the committee because it sets up a joint committee to examine the Budget and to report, and to that extent the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has been curtailed.

(B) Reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government.

Certainly the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program has nothing to do with reorganizations in the executive branch of the Government.

(2) Such committee shall have the duty of—

(A) Receiving and examining reports of the Comptroller General of the United States and of submitting such recommendations to the Senate as it deems necessary or desirable in connection with the subject matter of such reports.

I see nothing there which is in conflict with the activities of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

(B) Studying the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency.

If there is any effort on the part of this committee to go into this vast historic activity of Government in connection with the war effort and contracts, corruption if you please, if any be found, malfeasance or nonfeasance, it might come under subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2) in the provisions setting up that committee.

(C) evaluating the effects of laws enacted to reorganize the legislative and executive branches of the Government.

Certainly nothing under that provision takes in the province of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense program.

(D) studying intergovernmental relationships between the United States and the States and municipalities, and between the United States and international organizations of which the United States is a member.

That is the last field of authority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, all of this almost hysterical pleading for the preservation of the sanctity not only of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, but of the prerogatives of the chairman, seems to me to turn upon paragraph (B), and I wish to read that again:

Studying the operations of government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency.

It is very probable that as an affirmative field of action in the future—at the present time and from now on—that provision is ample to study the present activities and the future programs of government. Frankly, with all due respect to the province of this committee, I doubt that any strict interpretation of that authorization would widely permit general activities such as those of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, so far as past transactions in connection with the war effort are concerned.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not undertake to limit the jurisdiction of our committee by his interpretation of the act, because I certainly cannot construe it to mean that we cannot go into the past. We are charged with planning for the present and the future, and we certainly cannot judge the work of any department intelligently by simply investigating what it is going to do in the future. We must go into the past in order to know what recommendations we should make for improving the work of the departments in the future. So I cannot accept the statement of the Senator from Iowa, who is a valued member of my committee, that we are limited in any respect in the way in which he suggests.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator from Vermont. I am certain, as the result of visits I have had with him in the past, that we are not at all in disagreement that this committee has extensive powers. I am merely saying that, if it does have the power to go into past activities, then it derives such power from that particular provision, in my opinion, and none other. But I also say that the question is certainly open to argument. I think the power is very extensive.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senator is correct in that statement.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Senator and I have discussed this question with other Members of this body. It must be the province of the committee, as rapidly as possible, to define the limits and extent of its power, what it is going to take over, and where it is going to investigate, in order that a reliable pattern of committee conduct may be had. But in my opinion, for the immediate future, and for a limited time, until this and other committees can define their limits, there is an urgency for continuing the investigation deeper and deeper into the vast expenditures of money which have been made in the war effort, and uncovering, if they exist, instances of corruption or fraud. Such instances have been brought to the surface in the past, and we may reasonably assume that there are others in existence which have not been uncovered. The very urgency of such investigation indicates to me that for a limited period of time its continuity must not be interrupted. That is not in the interest of the Senator from Maine, nor in the interest of continuance of the special committee. It is in the interest of the rapid and continuous discovery and presentation of truth and fact to the American people about the conduct of their Government and its affairs.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Before the distinguished Senator from Iowa leaves the question of jurisdiction of the committee, I should like to ask if he can find anywhere within the provisions of the act the authority for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to examine into income-tax returns.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I find no such authority.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. All the powers now vested in the committee recently headed by the former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead—which committee was known as the Mead committee, and prior to that as the Truman committee—with respect to having access to income-tax returns, accrue under the Tydings amendment to the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which committee is headed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]. There can be no question about that. It is confirmed by the Parliamentarian. It is confirmed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], a member of the Committee on Finance; and it can be confirmed by the President himself if necessary. The Senate will lose nothing in powers by the transfer from the Mead committee to the Aiken committee, even including access to income-tax returns.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does that power arise by reason of the transfer of power from the Mead committee to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or is such power within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments?

Mr. TOBEY. It is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance to ask for income-tax returns at any time, and to turn them over to any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senators for their contribution. I was about to come to one phase of that particular subject. If the Senator from Maryland believes that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has the power and scope of authority necessary to go into this question, why does he consider it necessary, by a special resolution, to direct and empower the committee to do so?

Mr. TOBEY. If the Senator propounds the question to me, and if the Senator from Iowa will yield——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am happy to yield to the distinguished and affable Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I am a little long on zeal this afternoon, but my heart is in this thing, and my convictions as well. Let me say to the Senator that the reason is that we now have a standing committee headed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], which committee has full power to act under the terms of the La Follette Act. It is one of the 15 standing committees of the Senate, with power to subpoena, as well as the power to examine income-tax returns. That is the answer.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If that be the case, then there is no occasion for the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. Under that theory all that is necessary to do is to defeat the proposal to continue the special committee. The opposition feels that it is necessary, in order to create that jurisdiction in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to push through, if possible, an affirmative amendment lodging such powers in that committee.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I certainly welcome the inference of assurance from the Senator from Iowa that he will vote against the Brewster amendment.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That would certainly be a strained interpretation, and I do not so interpret my remarks.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. It appears to me that if the Brewster resolution were not here the Senate would not have the minority party urging upon it an investigation of fraud, corruption, and profiteering to be conducted by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and I am positive that the Senate would not have the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], today advocating that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should have full and complete authority to look into income tax returns to ascertain if there were corruption, fraud, and profiteering in connection with our war effort. It appears to me that that is done for only one purpose, and that is to destroy the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, which has done a fine job, in my humble judgment, because of its knowledge and because of the speed with which it has been able to act. Only for those reasons do I urge upon the Senate that the committee proceed for a limited time, that it may investigate and make a final overall report to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has suggested that it is strange that some of us now feel that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments should be given a status which it has not heretofore enjoyed. All of us who have been here for any length of time know that almost from time immemorial the Senate has made a stepchild of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive departments by the creation of special committees to do things which theoretically the standing committee had authority to do. The Byrd committee investigating the question of overemployment among the departments really in a sense impinged upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. It may be that the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, as originally conceived by the now President of the United States, in a sense impinged upon its theoretical authority. The Senate has for so long treated in that way the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments that it has given that committee an inferiority complex which it was never intended it should have.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It had almost a subterranean complex.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate was not wholly guiltless in connection with the stature and position of that committee, because it never paid much attention to it.

Under the new set-up the Senate has tried to place responsibility upon it. Whether it should be seeking to authorize affirmatively the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to make an investigation this soon after the beginning of Congress is a speculative matter, because if there had been no effort to take away from that committee the jurisdiction which it was intended to confer upon it, the occasion might not have arisen so soon to emphasize in an affirmative way the jurisdiction, the obligation, and the duty of that committee to make investigations of all kinds. This question has been brought to our attention specifically, but it does not thereby minimize the responsibilities of the committee, and it does not thereby minimize the duty and obligation of the Senate to fix the responsibility of and keep responsibility in that committee as we undertake to give it authority. I myself am unwilling that the Senate shall continue to regard the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments as an unworthy stepchild, incapable of carrying out or indisposed to carry out, the performance of its duties. I do not think it is material whether such authority might not have been sought. We have a specific situation before us.

Some of us feel that this is the proper way in which to proceed. But there is no implication to be drawn such as that which seems to have been conveyed by the statement of the Senator from Michigan, because senators are seeking now in an affirmative way to fasten on that committee the responsibility which I think Congress intended it should have.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Does the Senator agree that whatever power the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has with reference to the field of investigation of the Mead committee was derived from subparagraph (B) under paragraph (2) on page 6 of the Reorganization Act? That subparagraph reads as follows:

> Studying the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a part of the authority conferred upon it, but it is not all of it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I find no other specific field than that, and I personally believe that that definition is ample.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not necessary to consolidate it in an over-all broad way with other specific references, but I think when it says that a committee shall have authority at all levels, it means at the top, at the bottom, and everywhere in between.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Let me ask the Senator a further question. If this committee has authority, what would be the purpose or the need of the Tydings amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that all committees are servants of the Senate, and it is always proper for the Senate specifically to instruct any of its committees to do anything the Senate wishes such committees to do. It is sought by the Tydings amendment to instruct the committee, and to emphasize its responsibilities, its duties, its obligations, as well as its power.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I was glad to have the able Senator from Kentucky give us his views, and I think that at this point I should read into the RECORD the names of those who were members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The chairman of that committee was the whip of the then majority, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]. The second in rank was the then majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; the third was the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]; the fourth was the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], and the fifth was the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON].

I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that during the Seventy-ninth Congress there surely were some investigations which that committee could have conducted. It had as its chairman the able whip of the majority, and had as second in rank the able majority leader. The able Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the junior Senator from Michigan at times urged that there be some action. The committee was inactive and refused to take any action when it had the authority to investigate. We now find——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FERGUSON. Just a moment. It is now urged that this very committee take over the entire investigation. If it does, it will not do as speedy a job as can be done if the Senate continues the special committee for a limited time in order to do this particular job. I say that even though I am a member of the standing committee only, I am not willing to surrender any jurisdiction, because I see, not only at the present time but in the future, a great need for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, a committee that will be able to serve the people of the United States through its power to investigate.

But it is not going to do it under the leadership of the minority, because the people have seen fit to change the leadership in this Congress, and have placed the leadership of this committee under the jurisdiction of the Republicans, the present majority.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield to me, let me say that I presume the Senator from Michigan thinks he is making some political hay by referring to the fact that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Democratic whip, and the then majority leader were members of that committee. If he obtains any consolation from that, he is welcome to it. I knew I was hooking up with a stepchild when I consented to serve on that committee. But the present committee is entirely different from the one which existed before.

I may also console the Senator from Michigan by telling him now that we are in the minority that I am not even on that committee and therefore perhaps it is improved. Although it may be conceived that the Senate should not have continued the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, nevertheless it did continue it, and the Senate fastened certain responsibility upon that committee, by defining its duties, whereas heretofore no committee had its duties defined either by rule or by law.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Toward the end of the Seventy-ninth Congress, I obtained a list of the personnel of this committee, which was inactive and did no investigating. I learned that it had nine employees. However, it did not even have a room assigned to it. That is the committee which we are now told can do all the work. Yes, Mr. President; it will do the work from now on, because it has new leadership. But under the old leadership I found that it was not doing the work.

Mr. TOBEY. And it will have new duties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is trying to repudiate his own new leadership, of which he boasts.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I rose to answer a direct statement which was made by the Senator from Michigan before the Senators wandered so far afield. In that statement the Senator from Michigan took to task the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. He did so because he said it had not made investigations during its former life. I simply wish to remind the Senator from Michigan of a fact of which I am sure he must be well informed, but which undoubtedly he had forgotten, namely, that under the Senate rule which existed before the Reorganization Act was passed, the standing committees of the Senate only had jurisdiction and authority over the matters which were referred to them by the Senate. They had no inherent powers of their own. If the Senator will examine the resolutions which were submitted at the beginning of each Congress, he will find it to be true that no general power was given, even by those resolutions.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Maine, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wish to associate myself with the position of the Senator from Vermont as to the powers of the committee of which he is chairman, inasmuch as it seems to me that, under a fair construction of the language, not only has that committee the power to investigate every cent of expenditure made hereafter but also every cent of expenditure made heretofore, not only in the conduct of the war but in the conduct of the Federal Government from 1790, when it began, in making a study of the efficiency of governmental operations. So far as I am concerned, the suggestion which has been made here concerns itself with only this one small segment of the matter, covering a certain specific period and relating to war expenditures, with which our committee has been concerned. If this resolution is adopted, I think that matter will be continued within the committee's purview, but in that respect the committee will in no way be circumscribed or limited, for it seems to me that could not possibly be done. I have discussed this matter somewhat with the Senator from Vermont, and I think that his problem is how he is going to digest this enormous field of powers, and also how he is going to accommodate his explorations to those of the 14 other standing committees which have jurisdiction of their own—for instance, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and so forth.

I have no doubt that in the evolution of the Reorganization Act, this whole matter will be worked out with the spirit and harmony which are always so noticeable on this side of the aisle, and that these questions will be adjusted. But the fact that temporarily there are some problems, the growing pains incident to the evolution of the act, is not to be wondered at.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. First, I should like to thank the Senator from Maine for his interpretation of the act, which coincides with my own interpretation of it.

The reason I rose a few minutes ago to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa was that I did not wish to have read into the record anything which might later on be construed as delimiting the powers of the committee. I fully realize the purpose of the Senator from Iowa in making those remarks, and I realize that they were not intended to delimit the powers of the committee in anyway.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I merely wished to lead up eventually, as I did in a rather disjointed way, I fear, to the fact that since these powers were undoubtedly derived under that section, there must be some doubt about them, because the Senator from Maryland saw fit to submit a resolution specifically outlining them and transferring them to this committee, and that if the committee does not need extra powers, then the resolution or amendment of the Senator from Maryland is completely unnecessary and, of course, should not be adopted, because it will delimit the powers of the committee if it is adopted.

Mr. AIKEN. I construe the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to mean that the files, the funds, and any other assets of the special committee, where they now repose, would be transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I think that either a Presidential order or the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia would be necessary in order to enable the committee to have access to any income-tax returns which we might need in the course of our investigations.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I wish to assure the Senator from Vermont, as I have privately and publicly done, that I do not wish to limit the activities of the committee of which he is the chairman and of which I am a member, and I am happy to belong to it. I do not wish to limit its activities. In the process of gradual evolution in regard to taking on new duties which the committee never previously took on, as the Senator well knows, and which it probably will have to get ready to assume over the course of a little time in order to exercise its powers efficiently, I want this committee as a standing committee eventually to take over activities in such fields as may belong to it and which the special committee may now be exercising.

But let me call the attention of the Senator to the following language of the Tydings amendment:

Provided, That on and after the date this resolution is agreed to, the authority contained in such Senate Resolution 71 shall be limited——

Mr. AIKEN. I see no reason for those words in the Tydings amendment. They add nothing to it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Let me begin to read the proviso again, Mr. President:

Provided, That on and after the date this resolution is agreed to, the authority contained in such Senate Resolution 71 shall be limited, with respect to the subject matter authorized to be studied and investigated therein, to excessive profits, fraud, corruption, waste, extravagance, mismanagement, incompetence, and inefficiency in expenditures, connected with the prosecution of the national defense program for World War II.

I sincerely fear that if the Tydings amendment is adopted, it will be the opening wedge for a future limitation of the investigating activities of the committee of which the Senator from Vermont and I are members. I say that I do not wish to see them limited in the future, when as a committee they begin their permanent activities. That is my position, and on that point I am entirely with the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, because for 2 years past, as he well knows, I have been interested in enlarging and expanding the duties of that committee, and in regard to the complete inactivity of the committee in the past, I have been just as restless as the present chairman of the committee has. As I recall, he and I and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] have talked about the matter a number of times. I agree with him, and I wish to go right along with him. But I feel sincerely and with great conviction that a special committee which in the past has been operating under three different chairmen, and which has been able to dig into new fields and produce evidence of corruption and mismanagement which, at least, no other Senate committee has been able to produce with such vigor and accurateness, should continue on a temporary basis until a permanent committee can reach its maturity, if you please, and can take over that field. However, for the sake of the continuity of the investigation and in order that the probing into the conduct of public affairs shall not suffer or be hampered by a hiatus during the time when these functions are taken over by the standing committee, I think it is absolutely essential that the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program be continued on a temporary basis. I have never urged anything else, and I shall not urge anything else.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Would the Senator feel the same way about the continuation of the Small Business Committee?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I have not as yet declared myself as to the Small Business Committee, but I will tell the Senator what I did. I did not vote on the issue when it came before the Rules and Administration Committee, of which I am a member. I shall meet the Small Business Committee issue when it arises, but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that I have refused to vote on that issue in the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. LUCAS. How about the petroleum committee and the wool committee?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Those issues never have come before the Committee on Rules and Administration. There has been no showing of the need or essentiality of continuing those committees.

Mr. LUCAS. It has been my definite understanding that the Small Business Committee and the War Investigating Committee resolutions were going through because those on the other side of the aisle have the votes, and I was wondering, if that be the situation, whether or not Senators on the other side felt that the Small Business Committee was as essential as the War Investigating Committee.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The resolution continuing the War Investigating Committee is not going through the Senate because we have the votes on this side to put it through; it is going through the Senate because adopting the resolution is a morally right thing to do in the interest of the public, and it is a morally demanded thing to continue these investigations, and not because we have the votes on this side of the aisle.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not believe that answer will stand the test of analysis. In the first place, it is not certain the resolution is going through. I make that qualification.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I was merely joining in the repeated statements on the other side of the aisle that it was going through.

Mr. TOBEY. I differ from them, that is all.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That, of course, is under the heading of a conclusion of an individual. I merely speak of my own belief and my own views.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if my ears heard aright the Senator's statement, he said "if it goes through," so he put a condition on it which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire merely emphasized.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If I used the word "if" I did not intend to, because I am firmly convinced that the righteousness of this proposal will cause it to be passed by the Senate in the interest of public justice and the future good of public business. So I withdraw the "if," if the Senator understood it, and say that I am firmly convinced the resolution will go through the Senate.

Mr. President, I now wish to complete what I have to say. I again assert that this sudden upsurge of resistance against the War Investigating Committee, which has lifted a few of the boards and smacked such a few of the rodents that have run out from under the boards, is more than passing strange. I wonder if there are not people in this country who would breathe easier if the activities of this temporary committee on a temporary basis were discontinued. I think so. I think I could imagine certain areas where there would be much more comfort if assurance went out that the Senate was at least stalemating for the moment the continued activities of this committee.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. As to that, I wish to say that if anyone thinks transferring the functions of the War Investigating Committee to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would result in making it easier for some of the culprits who have defrauded their Government in time of war, he is laboring under a delusion, a very great delusion, because it is my purpose, if the functions of the War Investigating Committee are transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to request the very able junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] to undertake to carry on this work. I am sure that he could carry it on just as vigorously in one place as he could in another. We know that the work he has done in running down some of these rodents, as the Senator from Iowa calls them, chasing them out from under the floor, has been very valuable indeed. So I do not want anyone to think that by a transfer of the work of the special committee to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments he is going to get out of anything. I do not think there is any more despicable crime in the whole category of crime than defrauding one's government in time of war, and, as I have said, I am sure that our committee will accept the responsibility if it is given to it, of ferreting out any frauds.

I repeat that I shall ask the able Senator from Michigan to head up the work, and Senators know the kind of work he has done. There is no hope for any more rats if these functions are transferred.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I thoroughly understand the distinguished Senator. I know his zeal, and I have no fear that he will not zealously pursue these duties. I am not talking about the pursuit of the duties eventually to be assumed by the committee, but I am talking about continuity, inasmuch as the activities of the committee are continuing, and I feel sincerely that for the next several months, during the transition, the special committee must, in the interest of continuity, go forward with whatever work has been started, and what they must complete in the interest of any kind of a decent investigation.

Mr. President, I assure the Senator from Vermont again that I believe his committee must eventually take over these activities. I believe it must have, and in my opinion it will need, some enlarged definition of its field of action in the future, but I think it is the proper committee eventually to take over, and I feel it must. I shall support as vigorously as I can the eventual and orderly transfer of the responsibilities of the special committee to the Senator's standing committee, and I shall rest assured that there will be no one in the Senate who will then more vigorously take over the duties of the committee and look after the responsibilities of public government than he. If he appoints the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan eventually to head up those activities, on a subcommittee or otherwise, I again say that the public's affairs will receive the most meticulous and thorough attention, and that the public will know that honest investigation and honest disclosure will be made in the public interest.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he yield for a question?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As I understood the Senator's argument—and I want to be sure about it, because I expect to comment on it later—the Senator has stated to the Senate as his opinion that, under the Reorganization Act, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments does have full and complete jurisdiction over all expenditures, and can make all investigations the special committee could make.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I call the Senator's attention again to subdivision (B) under subdivision (2) of the law setting up the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. In my judgment, whatever authority that committee has is derived from that subdivision. It reads as follows:

> Studying the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency.

I believe that eventually that particular provision will be either large enough, or enlarged to sufficient capacity, to cover almost any field of governmental activity. But it is under that provision, if any, that the committee gets its power.

Mr. BRICKER obtained the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HATCH. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio was recognized.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to say, in connection with what the Senator from Iowa has said, that the investigatory powers of the committee are found on page 23, section 134 (a), where, after some preliminary words, it is stated:

> Each such committee may make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, may report such hearings as may be had by it, and may employ stenographic assistance at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words.

Then there is some other language which anyone can read. Inasmuch as the operations of Government activities at all levels are within our scope, and we are authorized to make investigations into any matter within our jurisdiction, I am satisfied that the investigatory powers are in the law.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Let me say to the Senator from Vermont that I think there is almost unlimited investigatory power in the standing committees, in whatever field a committee has jurisdiction. My argument was directed to the rather nebulous or generalized language in the particular section under which I believe the eventual power of our committee to go into these things will be found. If we determine that it has the power, then of course the investigating activities are virtually unlimited in whatever field and to whatever extent the committee may determine.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I rise to speak at this time on the pending resolution, because of the fact that the newly elected Members of the Senate have been called into the debate by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] this afternoon.

I also happen to be a member of the Rules and Administration Committee, which passed favorably on the resolution continuing the War Investigating Committee. I likewise have the privilege of being on the standing Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

If I were to speak selfishly or politically, no doubt I should oppose the resolution continuing the special committee. I may not be so familiar with the rules of the Senate, as suggested a while ago by the distinguished whip of the minority [Mr. LUCAS], as those who have been here longer, but because I have so recently come and have been in such close contact with the people of my State, I think I do understand and am thoroughly familiar with their feelings in regard to the investigation of war contracts and of profiteering at the expense of the Nation. I am convinced that the people of the country, and I know the people of my State desire a complete and thorough investigation of war contracts and war expenditures and any profiteering that might be found in connection therewith.

I know also that they desire to have the findings revealed to the public, and they demand that any who are guilty shall be thoroughly exposed and prosecuted, that justice may be done, that the protection of the Republic in the future may be more secure.

I voted in the Rules and Administration Committee for a continuance of the special committee, believing it to be a continuing committee, which I am convinced now that it is, by the arguments which have taken place upon the floor of the Senate, and not a new committee.

There is a continuing personnel; there is an accumulation of records in the hands of the special committee, thoroughly understood by the members who are on the committee. There are the employees who no doubt will be to a large degree continued, who are familiar with the records and who understand the duties of the committee and its methods of investigation.

All of that would have to be gone over anew by a standing committee of the Senate. They would have to acquaint themselves thoroughly with the proceedings of the past, with the records which have accumulated. That would mean a delay of many months, no doubt, until the adjournment of the Congress. In view of the fact that the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program is a continuing committee, I supported it in the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I shall support it in the Senate.

I have been amazed during the course of the debate by some of the predictions made in opposition to the continuance of the special committee, especially by those who referred to the Republic as being in danger if the standing committee should not be given the obligation of making the investigation and if the special committee should be continued.

Our Republic has endured a long time. We have just prosecuted successfully a great and terrible war and the Republic still endures. The Republic, I think, will endure the continuance of the special committee, and perhaps the creation of many more committees, if it be in the public interest, as I judge the continuation of this committee to be.

After hearing that kind of argument, I discount to a considerable degree the opposition that is being made on the floor of the Senate to the continuance of the special committee.

I want the La Follette reorganization law to be accepted, perfected, and made thoroughly workable, because I believe it to be in the public interest. I followed the debates here as they were recorded in the public press. I believe it was a step forward in efficiency, in the proper operation of this body, and yet I do not, as a new Member of the Senate, wish to be chained to the La Follette reorganization law. If there is a public job to be done, I desire that it shall be done, whether by a standing committee or by a special committee or any other kind of committee.

I think there is here a job to be done which the public expects us to do, and I do not wish any delay in the carrying out of the obligation of the Senate in the investigation of war contracts.

I might have been more impressed by the opposition, too, had it not been for the suggestion of the distinguished minority whip [Mr. LUCAS], when he said that the new Members had been led up on the mountaintop and shown the orange groves down below. He is not only confused in his geography; he is drawing heavily upon an exaggerated imagination.

No member of any committee, on this side or the other side, has asked me to vote for or against the continuance of the special committee. If I had been asked, Mr. President, I should not be controlled by my stubbornness, as the Senator suggested he was in the first vote he cast after he became a Member of Congress; nor should I be controlled by a sense of servility. I shall cast my vote because I think it a public duty to continue this special committee.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I am definitely in favor of Senate Resolution 46 which would continue the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. I have given the speeches made for and against it my careful thought and consideration. There have been some good arguments against having any special committees, if the arguments are taken all by themselves and without regard to the activities of the committee in question, which has already been established and without regard to the fact that time in these investigations is of the very essence of success in serving the best interests of the American people.

I might say that, in my opinion, if the committee, headed by the distinguished Senator from Vermont, should require 2 or 3 months to get into action, that length of time might represent the difference between allowing the rats to escape, if we are to call them "rats," and catching them before they leave the rat holes.

The reorganization of the Congress was a tremendous undertaking, and no one expected it to be a perfect job in the first effort.

I not only voted for but spoke in favor of the passage of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 because I believed it was a step forward in up-to-date organization. I realized it was not a perfect bill. I recognized the fact that the body which passed the law likewise had the right to amend or change it if and when it found such amendment necessary to the effort to serve the people of the United States more efficiently and more effectively.

When the Reorganization Act was voted on by the Senate, it contained a provision against the appointment of further special committees. I did not like that provision, and that was one of the things that made me realize it was not a perfect bill, but the value of making some progress outweighed the objections to that provision at the moment. However, there were others in the Congress who felt differently. The bill was passed by the Senate and sent to the House. After consultation in the House, the provision banning the appointment of further special committees was removed, and the House voted on the bill without that prohibition against special committees. Then the bill came back to the Senate for its approval, and even though there were some in the Senate, probably on both sides of the aisle, who felt that the standing committees should be able to do the complete job, nevertheless there was such strong opposition in the House, where the objection was raised, to the banning provision that those sponsoring the reorganization bill in the Senate decided to accept the House version. I believe this is very strong evidence of the fact that the reorganization bill in itself, as passed by the Congress, did not in any way preclude the adoption of Senate Resolution 46. In fact, even the earlier prohibition did not apply to any of the then existing committees.

Rules in any organization should be changed when it is wise to change them, and wise men change their minds when facts and conditions justify it.

I personally would never have voted for the Reorganization Act had it specifically provided that there would and could be no special committees established for special purposes where time might be the essence of the question.

The Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program is a going committee. I cannot believe that its continuance under the conditions facing this Congress is a reflection on the abilities of any member of any standing committee. I would not so consider it in relation to any of the committees on which I serve, and I do not happen to be a member or a prospective member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

One thing alone would cause me to vote for the continuance of the special committee, and that is my knowledge of the fact that time is of the essence of the work it is doing. My experience in life, which has been along the lines of organization and to avoid duplication of power and activity, tells me likewise that regardless of the mental qualifications and capacities of any of the members of the newly formed standing committees, it would be next to impossible for them to take up and carry forward the work now being done by the special committee without the loss of considerable time and some confusion in the minds of the new members that might be appointed by any standing committee to serve the purpose the Congress had in mind when it created the special committee.

The distinguished junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] happens to be an active member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, and I might say a very able member and he has been in the past a very successful prosecutor. He is likewise a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, with respect to which my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], offers an amendment for reference of the subjects which have been pursued by the special committee. The Senator from Maryland makes a good argument were it not for the fact that the people are looking for quick action and full information on any improper expenditures or wrongdoing on the part of Government departments or agencies or private citizens in connection with the prosecution of the war. The Senator from Maryland contends that no time would be lost by transferring the activities of the special committee to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I cannot feel that this contention could possibly be sustained.

Mr. President, much has been said on the floor of the Senate about the confidence that the various Members have in the ability of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] successfully to carry on the work of the special investigating committee, even though that work be transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

I call attention to the fact that the able junior Senator from Michigan has spoken at great length on the floor of the Senate urging the continuance of the special committee to January 31, 1948.

The Senator from Michigan has no selfish interest to serve in this matter.

If the work of the special committee were transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, it is more than likely that the Senator from Michigan would become the chairman of a subcommittee of that standing committee to carry on this work.

Since I wrote that language, Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, has notified the Senate this afternoon that if this subject matter is turned over to his committee he intends to appoint the distinguished Senator from Michigan as chairman of that subcommittee.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. HAWKES. If it is a short question I will, but I do not want it to interrupt my speech.

Mr. LUCAS. It will be a short question. What makes the Senator from New Jersey think that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would be better qualified and more ready to take over on January 1, 1948, than they are today?

Mr. HAWKES. I would leave that question to the Senator from Illinois himself to answer, because if he does not think the new committee, after it has had a year to become organized and opportunity has been afforded the members to understand each other, will be better able to take over any subject, then I cannot explain it to him.

In view of these facts, which are apparent to all, the recommendations of the Senator from Michigan must be accepted by me as important recommendations from a man who knows what the special committee has been doing and what effect the past knowledge of that committee will have upon the future work to be performed by it if the resolution continuing it is adopted by the Senate.

I am in favor of continuing the special committee for a year as provided in the resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. There are many new faces in the Senate this year. As we go along, we will have an opportunity to determine whether we should amend the Reorganization Act itself so as to make a committee of the type of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program a permanent committee, cloaked with certain powers and authorities. I would not wish to say now whether I would be in favor of continuing the special committee longer than the prescribed time; namely, January 31, 1948, but I should like to have a look at what it does and how the new standing committees function and then reach my conclusion before we reach January 31, 1948.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAWKES. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. In view of what the Senate has said regarding the committee and its past record I should like to have a statement placed in the RECORD at the end of the Senator's remarks. There has been compiled a record of the length of service of the various members of the special committee throughout its history, and I ask unanimous consent that the compilation be inserted in the RECORD at the end of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I do not believe there is a Member of the Senate who does not realize that the Reorganization Act passed by the Congress last year may have many flaws in it. The fact that we are willing to and do make changes is why we are a going body. If we never change anything we become stagnant. The Constitution of the United States has been amended many times, and it probably will be amended many more times, though it is the greatest document in the world.

Again I say, I cannot believe merely because we passed the Reorganization Act last year and are trying to make it function, that the activities of this important special committee should be abruptly terminated and transferred to any standing committee with the consequent loss of time incident to such committee becoming sufficiently organized to enable it to proceed.

We had an election on November 5 last, and I am wondering if my fine friends on the other side of the aisle would be as assiduous in trying to eliminate this committee had they remained in the majority rather than finding themselves in the minority.

Since November 5, the complexion of the Congress has changed. I am advised from reliable sources that certain people in the Government employ who have been very unwilling to talk about things which happened but should not have happened, now find themselves with a little more confidence in assisting to correct the evils that creep into Government and Government operations, not only in peacetime but particularly in wartime.

The time to catch wrongdoers and correct mistakes is before the wrongdoers leave the jurisdiction or have had time to cover up or destroy their records. Therefore, I repeat that time is of the essence in the work that the Senate and the people of the United States expect this committee to do in the interest of the people. The American people want restored faith in the activities of their representatives and they want action on time or as nearly on time as we can give it to them. I ask, Do we wish to lose the valuable opportunity to get the facts that may be available to us simply for the purpose of complying with a technicality of organization? I, for one, do not. Under the circumstances, I find myself strongly in favor of Senate Resolution 46 and strongly in favor of the recommendations made to this body by Senators who have served most actively on the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. I need not go into detail here regarding the fact that the President of the United States, when he was chairman of the committee, had a feeling that no other committee could serve the purpose of that special committee. Senator Mead, who followed Mr. Truman, apparently felt the same way and expressed the same opinions very strongly. The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], who succeeded Senator Mead, had a very strong feeling up to November 5 that the work of the committee should continue.

I urge my colleagues to remember that one of the best rules in life is that rules of any organization should be changed and amended or added to as necessity demands. Furthermore, I would have them remember that the American people are more interested in the accomplishments that we make as their representatives than they are in the particular type of organization that we follow for the purpose.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I had assumed that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] desired to speak this afternoon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate this afternoon, perhaps at some length. It is now 5:35 o'clock. I hardly feel inclined to proceed now, and I am sure that other Senators are not inclined to listen at this hour of the day.

Mr. WHITE. Let me say to the Senator that I know of no other Senator who desires to speak at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several other names on the list.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I think it should be clear in the RECORD that during the 4 days this matter has been under discussion the floor has been held for approximately 75 percent of the time by those who are opposing the resolution. I say that in order that it may not appear that there has been any undue claiming of time on this side. I am sure that we would all welcome the contribution of the Senator from New Mexico, who has participated in the discussions to some extent. I should be happy to remain and listen, as I am sure other Senators would be.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is no way by which I can force the Senator from New Mexico to speak at this time if he does not choose to do so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would not require too much persuasion. I rose merely to say to the Senator from Maine, in answer to the statement which he made, that I had made no implication that Senators on the other side had taken too much time.

Mr. BREWSTER. I quite understand.

Mr. HATCH. Nothing of the kind was in my mind. The Presiding Officer stated that there were other names on the list. If other Senators desire to speak, I am willing to remain. However, I shall forego my own right, if I have any.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. Is it not a fact that by unanimous consent this question is to be voted on at 2 o'clock on Wednesday, and that on that day the 2 hours from 12 o'clock until 2 are to be equally divided between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has correctly stated the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. AIKEN. That being the case, any Senator who desires to speak at length would probably be well advised to speak today, or else be restricted to 10 minutes, or whatever time may be allotted to him.

Mr. WHITE. That was my thought. I do not know how long the Senator from New Mexico may desire to speak.

Mr. HATCH. I may not even speak at all; but whatever remarks I make on Wednesday will be so arranged as to meet the convenience of the Senator who has the division of time on our side.

HEARINGS BEFORE SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. HICKENLOOPER submitted a resolution (S. Res. 63), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy appointed by the President of the Senate as provided in Public Law 585, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved August 1, 1946, be and they are hereby designated the committee to which shall be referred all appointments under said Public Law 585 that require the advice and consent of the Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That said committee shall have the same power and authority, in connection with the holding of hearings and the conduct of investigations and reporting to the Senate thereon, with reference to such matters, as are possessed by the standing committees of the Senate in other matters requiring the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution which I have just submitted, I desire to propound a unanimous-consent request. The resolution deals with the question of hearings before the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I intend to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. I have submitted the resolution to the majority leader, the minority leader, and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], who was formerly chairman of the committee. I think the first half of the resolution as it was prepared may well be eliminated. I believe perhaps there is some reason for the adoption of the second half, properly altered. Perhaps the first part of the resolution can now be eliminated. The Chair has ruled—and I think very properly under the Atomic Energy Act—that questions of confirmation should be referred to the Senate members of the joint committee. However, the second part of the resolution may be a clarifying statement as to the ability of Senate members to hold regular hearings. I should be pleased to hear the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], who has considered this resolution, express his opinion, because certainly I do not wish to make a unanimous-consent request which is not fully understood.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has shown me the resolution, and I can see no harm in adopting it. I will say, for the sake of the legislative history involved, that I do not believe that it is strictly necessary. I believe that under the act as it is written the power which the Senator wishes to confer on the committee is already vested in it, but I certainly have no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what has been said to me by Senators indicates to me that this resolution might provoke a somewhat extended discussion. Would there be any harm in letting it go over until after the disposition of the matter which is now the unfinished business?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. None whatever, Mr. President. I merely bring it up at this time because the nominations have already been referred. It was only a matter of clearing up the question of the right of Senate members to employ stenographic help, as provided in the second half of the resolution. But I shall not urge it at this time.

REDEMPTION IN CASH OF TERMINAL-LEAVE BONDS FOR BENEFIT OF VETERANS

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce a bill and request that it be referred to the appropriate committee. I realize that the hour is late, and that it is desired to take a recess.

I merely wish to say that the bill calls for the payment of terminal-leave allowances in cash to veterans of the war who are not officers. We all favor economy. I believe that the Budget should be reduced, but I believe that any surplus accruing from a Budget reduction should go first to the soldiers, the sailors, the marines, and the merchantmen who helped win the war.

I hope that the Chair will refer the bill to a committee which will immediately report it to the Senate, because the Treasury at this time is printing bonds to be given as terminal-leave pay to young men who have served their country gallantly and heroically. The officers were all paid in cash. The bill merely provides for redemption of so many of the unmatured bonds issued under the Armed Forces Leave Act of 1946 as can be redeemed by the surplus of Federal receipts over Federal expenditures. With that money the Government will cash the bonds which it has issued. It will not cost the Government a cent. The only effect will be to redeem the bonds which the Government has issued.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 304) to provide for the redemption of terminal-leave bonds by the use of any surplus of Federal receipts over Federal expenditures, introduced by Mr. MAYBANK, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Douglas W. McGregor, of Texas, to be the assistant to the Attorney General;

Richmond B. Keech, of the District of Columbia, to be an associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia;

James R. Wright, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Texas; and

M. Frank Hammond, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Texas.

INTER-AMERICAN COFFEE AGREEMENT—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Executive B, Eightieth Congress, first session, a protocol to extend for 1 year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the Inter-American Coffee Agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the protocol, and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The protocol is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
January 20, 1947.

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith, in certified form, a protocol to extend for 1 year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the Inter-American Coffee Agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940. The protocol was open for signature at the Pan American Union in Washington from September 3, 1946, until November 1, 1946, and during that period was signed for the United States of America, "subject to ratification," and for the fourteen other American Republics which became parties to the Inter-American Coffee Agreement.

I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, a report on the protocol made to me by the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that the previous extension of the agreement expired on October 1, 1946, and in as much as the present protocol will extend the agreement for only one year from that date, I should be grateful for early consideration of the protocol by the Senate.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State; 2. Protocol extending the Inter-American Coffee Agreement—certified copies in the English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French languages.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 17, 1947.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a certified copy of a protocol to extend for one year from October 1, 1946, subject to certain conditions, the Inter-American Coffee Agreement signed in Washington on November 28, 1940. The protocol, in accordance with the provisions of Article 4 thereof, was open for signature at the Pan American Union in Washington from September 3, 1946, until November 1, 1946, and during that period was signed for the United States of America, "subject to ratification", and for the fourteen other American Republics which became parties to the Inter-American Coffee Agreement.

The protocol retains the framework of the Inter-American Coffee Agreement for a one-year period but suspends the provisions of Articles I to VIII, inclusive, of that agreement, which relate to coffee quotas, with the exception that, under emergency conditions, such Articles of the agreement shall again become effective upon a motion approved by at least 95 percent of the total vote of the Inter-American Coffee Board.

Article 3 of the protocol provides that the Inter-American Coffee Board shall undertake to complete by March 31, 1947, a thorough analysis of the world coffee situation and shall formulate recommendations for the consideration of the governments now participating in the agreement and of other governments that might be interested in participating in a revised agreement regarding the type of international cooperation that appears most likely to contribute to the development of sound, prosperous conditions in international trade in coffee equitable for both producers and consumers.

The one-year extension provided for by the protocol has been recommended by an interdepartmental committee consisting of representatives of the interested agencies of the United States Government, and that recommendation approved by the Executive Committee on Economic Foreign Policy. The domestic coffee trade has indicated that it considers the extension of the agreement for one year under the terms set forth in the protocol to be a desirable measure.

Information on the background and purposes of the coffee agreement is set forth in the report of January 8, 1941, by the Secretary of State to the President (Senate Exec. A, 77th Cong., 1st sess.).

Advice and consent to ratification of the coffee agreement was given by the Senate on February 3, 1941. The agreement was ratified by the President on February 12, 1941, and the instrument of ratification by the United States deposited with the Pan American Union on April 14, 1941. On April 15, 1941, a protocol was signed at Washington, bringing the agreement into force on April 16, 1941, among the governments which had at that time deposited ratifications or approvals of the agreement. The Congress of the United States, by joint resolution approved April 11, 1941, provided for the carrying out of the obligations of the United States under the agreement on and after the entry into force of the agreement and during the continuation in force of the obligations of the United States thereunder (55 Stat. 133).

The agreement, which was to expire on October 1, 1943, was twice extended without modification for one-year periods by unanimous approval of the signatory countries. That action was taken pursuant to the provisions of Article XXIV of the agreement, which authorize the continuation of the agreement upon acceptance by all participating governments of a recommendation by the Inter-American Coffee Board that the duration of the agreement be extended. By a protocol open for signature at the Pan American Union from September 1, 1945, until November 1, 1945, the agreement was extended, with certain modifications, for a further one-year period from October 1, 1945. Those extensions also were approved by the domestic coffee trade.

In as much as the previous extension of the agreement expired on October 1, 1946, and in view of the fact that the present protocol will extend the agreement for only one year from that date, the Department of State recommends its early approval by the Government of the United States of America.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES F. BYRNES.

PROTOCOL FOR THE EXTENSION OF THE INTER-AMERICAN COFFEE AGREEMENT FOR ONE YEAR FROM OCTOBER 1, 1946

Whereas an Inter-American Coffee Agreement (hereinafter referred to as "the Agreement") was signed in Washington on November 28, 1940; and

Whereas by a Protocol signed in Washington April 15, 1941, the Agreement was brought into force on April 16, 1941, in respect of the Governments on behalf of which the Protocol was signed on April 15, 1941; and

Whereas Article XXIV of the said Agreement provides that it should continue in force until October 1, 1943; and

Whereas by unanimous consent the Governments signatory to the Agreement twice extended the said Agreement unchanged for one-year periods, these extensions being duly attested by two certified and signed Declarations passed by the Inter-American Coffee Board on May 12, 1943 and July 25, 1944, respectively, which were duly deposited in the Pan American Union on June 11, 1943, and September 11, 1944, respectively, in accordance with the provisions of Article XXIV of the Agreement; and

Whereas by a Protocol signed and deposited with the Pan American Union under date of October 1, 1945, the said Agreement was extended for one year from October 1, 1945, with certain changes recommended by the Inter-American Coffee Board.

Now, therefore, in support of a recommendation made by the Inter-American Coffee Board on August 16, 1946, the Governments signatory to the present Protocol, considering that it is expedient that the Agreement should be prolonged for a further term, subject to the conditions stated below, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE 1

Subject to the provisions of Article 2 hereof, the Agreement shall continue in force between the Governments signatory to the present Protocol for a period of one year from October 1, 1946.

ARTICLE 2

During the period specified in Article 1 above, the Governments signatory to the present Protocol agree that the provisions of Article 1 through and including VIII of the Agreement shall be inoperative, except that, under emergency conditions, such articles of the Agreement shall again become effective upon a motion approved by at least 95% of the total vote of the Inter-American Coffee Board.

ARTICLE 3

a. During the period specified in Article 1 above, the Inter-American Coffee Board shall undertake to complete by March 31, 1947, a thorough analysis of the world coffee situation and shall formulate recommendations for the consideration of the governments now participating in the Agreement and of other governments that might be interested in participating in a revised agreement regarding the type of international cooperation that appears most likely to contribute to the development of sound, prosperous conditions in international trade in coffee equitable for both producers and consumers.

b. Such recommendations shall take due account of any general principles of commodity policy embodied in any agreement which may be concluded under the auspices of the United Nations prior to the submission of such recommendations.

ARTICLE 4

The present Protocol shall be open for signature at the Pan American Union from September 3, 1946, until November 1, 1946, provided, however, that all signatures shall be deemed to have been affixed under date of October 1, 1946, and the Protocol shall be considered as having entered into force on that date with respect to the governments on behalf of which it is signed.

In witness whereof the undersigned, being duly authorized thereto by their respective Governments, have signed the present Protocol.

Done at the City of Washington in the English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French languages. The original instrument in each language shall be deposited in the Pan American Union which shall furnish certified copies to the Governments signatory to this Protocol.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

HEARINGS BEFORE SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

The Senate resumed consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. HICKENLOOPER (S. Res. 63) relating to hearings before Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa will have to be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration unless the rules are suspended.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the purposes of the resolution on the part of the Senator from Iowa. I have an inherent dislike for acting upon resolutions that have not been printed and which are called up at the last minute to be acted on by 8 or 10 Members who happen to be present. I do not know that there is anything wrong with the resolution. I do not have any idea that there is; but I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in view of the lateness of the hour and the doubt of the Senator from Vermont, I join with him in decrying the sudden and precipitous presentation of resolutions of this kind. I thought that this matter had been fully covered by referring it to various Members on the other side, including the minority leader and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], who has been as vitally interested as anyone in atomic-energy matters. However, in deference to the opinion of any Senator on this matter, I ask leave to submit the resolution so that it can be printed.

Mr. AIKEN. I was not objecting to acting upon it; I was simply asking for an explanation of it. I would like to know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to make a statement to the Senator from Vermont, because in the Chair's opinion there is some imminent importance to the request made by the Senator from Iowa. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that when the nominations were received for the Atomic Energy Commission the Chair referred them to the Senate members of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, because Public Law 585, in section 15 (b), provides that "all bills, resolutions, and other matters in the Senate," and so forth, "relating primarily to the Commission," and so forth, shall be referred to the joint committee and to the Senate side of the joint committee.

The Chair's understanding of the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa is that the Senator is simply now requesting that the rules be suspended so that the resolution may be adopted, permitting the Senate members of the committee to proceed immediately with hearings, with authority to finance hearings upon these nominations.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Chair for the explanation, and with that explanation I have no objection to proceeding with the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator from Iowa if the statement of the Chair is correct?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Chair's statement is correct, and I will say, further, that under a fair interpretation of the provisions of the public law just cited by the Chair the Senate members of the joint committee probably have the authority to employ stenographers and reporters and to subpena and pay witnesses. That probably could be worked out. Yet it is not clear, although the responsibility of interrogating the appointees and recommending the confirmation of appointments in connection with the Atomic Energy Commission is clearly placed upon the Senate members by the law itself. Therefore in order to clarify the matter and have no question about the payment of employees who are specially operating in behalf of the Senate members in connection with appointments requiring confirmation, we think it is desirable that the resolution be adopted in the interest of efficiency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] asks unanimous consent that the rules be suspended for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 63), as modified, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, appointed by the President of the Senate as provided in Public Law 585, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved August 1, 1946, shall have the same power and authority, in connection with the holding of hearings and the conduct of investigations and reporting to the Senate thereon, with reference to appointments under said Public Law 585 that require the advice and consent of the Senate, as are possessed by the standing committees of the Senate in other matters requiring the advice and consent of the Senate.

RECESS TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Wednesday, January 22, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 20, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O wondrous God, Thou who knowest all and seest all, we lift our mental and spiritual eyes to Thee. How manifold are Thy works, O Lord; in wisdom Thou hast made them all.

Out of the abundance of tranquil minds and warm hearts, grant that we may sweep away errors and fortify our weaknesses with a wholesome sense of our responsibilities. As we breathe the air of the upper world, warmed by Thy sun, awed by Thy glory, we beseech Thy guidance in all our deliberations.

We pray Thee, dear Lord, for our soldier-statesman who has been exalted to a high place in the counsels of our Nation. Do Thou crown him with good courage and good health; sustain him and lead him through all the exactions which are perplexing the minds of men. We pray in Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 16, 1947, was read and approved.

STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS STOCK PILING ACT

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a joint resolution to strengthen the common defense by maintaining an adequate domestic rubber-producing industry. The resolution recites that crude rubber, which includes all forms and types of tree, vine, and shrub rubber, is a highly strategic and critical material deficient and incapable, as the result of climatic conditions in the United States, of sufficient development as a natural resource of the United States in quantities adequate to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country for the common defense.

The resolution further provides that Congress in the enactment of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act—Public Law 520, Seventy-ninth Congress—has heretofore declared it the policy of the United States to provide for the acquisition and retention of stocks of strategic and critical materials, including crude rubber, so as to prevent as far as possible a dangerous and costly dependence of the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of these materials in times of national emergency. My resolution provides a program with respect to crude rubber shall be devised which will supplement that heretofore adopted in the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act and declares it to be the policy of the United States that there shall be maintained at all times in the interest of national security and common defense, in addition to stock piles of crude rubber to be acquired, a technologically advanced and rapidly expandible domestic rubber-producing industry of sufficient productive capacity to assure the availability in times of national emergency of adequate supplies of domestically produced rubber to meet the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country.

The joint resolution directs that Congress shall make a thorough study and investigation of means of accomplishing such policy through the enactment of permanent legislation, the study and investigation to be completed within such time as will permit the legislation to be enacted if possible during the first session of the Eightieth Congress. Pending the enactment of such permanent legislation, the United States shall be continued temporarily as the sole purchaser and seller of crude rubber to be used in the United States, and the authority of the United States to allocate crude rubber and control the uses to which allocations may be put, and the authority of the United States to manufacture and sell synthetic rubber shall be temporarily continued.

To effectuate these purposes temporary retention of certain emergency powers with respect to rubber are continued under the terms of the resolution.

World War II forcefully demonstrated the absolute necessity of having an adequate supply of rubber within the territorial borders of the United States. Never again must the United States be dependent on sources on the other side of the world for its entire rubber supply.

In the next emergency there may not be the time, and there probably will not be the time—as was the case in World War II—to develop the "know-how" and to construct facilities for the production of man-made rubber and for acquiring the skills necessary to the utilization of it.

The national security and the success of our armed forces in any subsequent conflict with a foreign enemy require that appropriate action be taken now to assure that the facilities for the production of man-made rubber of the highest quality are continued in operation and the skills necessary to utilize it in the manufacture of rubber products of maximum serviceability are preserved and are improved with the passing of the years and are not lost because of disuse.

A stock piling of crude rubber within the borders of the United States is desirable and necessary to supplement in an emergency the supplies of American-made rubber. However, it is generally recognized that no reasonable stock pile of crude rubber could supply the needs for a war of more than several months' duration. Further, a few years will be required to accumulate even a modest stock pile of crude rubber.

Entirely apart from the long-range demands of national security above discussed, the country in the year 1947 faces an extremely critical national situation in rubber which requires immediate action and which arises because of the following factors:

First. The rubber requirements of the United States during 1947 are estimated by the Civilian Production Administration to be in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 long tons, to satisfy which only about 500,000 long tons of crude rubber will be available after a reasonable allocation for stock pile. This means that nearly 50 percent of the rubber used in the United States during 1947 will, of necessity, be American-made rubber. Assuming approximately 100,000 long tons of special-purpose rubbers may be used during the year, this leaves close to 400,000 long tons of Government general-purpose rubber to be produced and used by the rubber industry in the manufacture of rubber products.

Second. During the war and continuing thereafter up to this time, appropriate Government agencies have been exercising the sole power to purchase and to import crude rubber for use in this country. They also have been determining the allocation to industry of such crude rubber, its use in the manufacture of products by directive order as to the maximum amounts that can be employed in any product, and by priorities, in order that the present short supply of imported crude rubber may be utilized to maximum advantage.

There is danger that these beneficial directive functions will be discontinued, since the Second War Powers Act, under which the allocation, specification control, and priorities with respect to the use of crude rubber is now being carried on, will expire on March 31, 1947, and since the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which is now exercising the sole power of purchase of crude rubber for import into the United States, ceases to exist under present law on June 30, 1947, and there is already pressure being placed on Government to discontinue its sole powers to purchase and to import crude rubber in order to restore a free crude-rubber market in the United States.

Third. The two factors above outlined, namely, the drastic shortage of crude rubber and the imminence of removal of beneficial regulations of its use, give rise to a crisis which might well have far-reaching disastrous effects on our national interests if suitable action is not taken.

A sound long-range American rubber program should be crystallized by adequate legislation before the Government relinquishes the power now exercised by it as the sole agency for the purchase and import of crude rubber for use in this country and before making any other basic change in the existing rubber program, such as the allocation, specification control, and priorities with respect to the use of crude rubber.

A sufficient tonnage of American-made rubber for the maintenance of national security should be made and used in this country each year.

The Government's present efficient facilities for the manufacture of American-made rubber should be maintained in stand-by condition or in condition ready to be run on short notice.

Beyond the above-enumerated provisions for security, America's long-range rubber program should be based on the principle of competitive enterprise for the reason that the free play of economic forces will do more than anything else to spur research, development, and production within the United States of all types of rubbers and of more and better rubber products at lower costs, thereby providing capacities and skills in this country invaluable in a time of national emergency.

But the free play of economic forces may not entirely solve the long-range problem of American rubber security.

The important point to realize is that now is the time for Congress to turn its attention to the project of making sure that our rubber insurance policy does not lapse—that in future years we shall not once more become a "have-not" Nation with respect to rubber.

Regardless of strictly economic factors, Congress should give early consideration to the adoption of a program assuring that—

First. The Government's efficient facilities for the manufacture of American-made rubber be maintained in stand-by condition, ready to be run on immediate notice; and that Second. A sufficient tonnage of American-made rubber for the maintenance of national security be made and used each year.

President George Washington, in his first annual address to Congress, January 8, 1790, said:

A free people * * * their safety and interest require, that they should promote such manufactories, as tend to render them independent on others for essential, particularly for military supplies.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON (at the request of Mr. ARENDS) was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks and include a brief statement from the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations headed by the new chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], deserves commendation for its efforts to economize and cut expenses wherever possible. It is, however, sometimes in the interest of economy that more and not less money be spent for some worthy undertaking. I refer to the terrible foot-and-mouth disease now raging among the livestock herds of the Republic of Mexico. The situation is alarming and if this dread disease should get into this country it would result in millions of dollars in loss to our livestock owners. I represent nearly 400 miles along the Mexican border. Some of the finest herds of whiteface cattle in America are in my district. I insist that every precaution be taken against this disease getting across the border. There are now more than 100,000 cattle in southern Mexico either infected or having been subjected to this highly contagious and fatal disease. The Bureau of Animal Industry of our Department of Agriculture is busy and cooperating with the Mexican authorities. I urge that our veterinarians be loaned to the Mexican Government and that a supplemental appropriation be passed to provide additional inspectors along the entire Mexican border. I have also insisted for years that a strong wire fence be built all along the border which would be of great value in solving many of our international problems, including the enforcement of our customs, immigration, and quarantine laws. I include as a part of my remarks a letter Dr. B. T. Simms, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, wrote Commissioner Lawson, of the International Boundary Commission and which appears in the last hearings of the Appropriations Committee:

Reference is made to your letter of January 29, 1946, advising that among the estimates of appropriations for the United States section of the International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, submitted to the Congress by the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1947, are two for carrying on fence construction along the Mexican boundary. One project contemplates fencing along the boundary west of El Paso and the other contemplates the construction of 415 miles of fence extending from Del Rio, Tex., to the Gulf of Mexico, along the Rio Grande border. You request a statement indicating the interest of the Bureau of Animal Industry in these projects and the benefits that might be expected from them.

The Bureau of Animal Industry is very much interested in the protection that would be furnished by the proposed fencing in both sections because of the assistance it would be to our livestock-disease control and eradication work in the United States and the protection it would furnish against the admission of animal diseases and parasites from Mexico. At the present time, however, this Bureau is particularly interested in the proposed section of fencing along the Rio Grande border from Del Rio, Tex., to the Gulf of Mexico for the reason that it is in this area the danger of diseased and fever-tick-infested animals entering the United States is greatest, and the cost to the Federal Government in an effort to prevent these illegal movements of livestock is largest.

For more than 10 years United States citizens and cattle owners in the lower Rio Grande Valley section of Texas have been conducting a fever-tick eradication campaign. The tick was repeatedly eradicated from the cattle and pastures on the United States side of the border only to have this work undone and sections of the area reinfested, time after time, by stray or smuggled tick-infested animals from Mexico. The proposed drift fence along this border seems to offer the only practical solution to this problem because, except when at flood stage, the river is not an effective barrier to the crossing of livestock. A Federal quarantine is maintained on a narrow strip extending through eight counties from Val Verde County, Tex., to the Gulf of Mexico, and this area is constantly patrolled by Bureau inspectors in a not wholly successful effort to prevent the spread of ticks to points in the interior of Texas.

The importance of the tick-eradication project to Texas, and the State's interest in protecting its cattle and ranges from reinfestation, will be realized when it is considered that the livestock interests and officials of that State have been nearly 40 years in forcing fever-tick infestation back to the Mexican border, and this at a cost to the counties, State, and Federal Government of approximately $16,150,000 to date. Most of the State has now been tick-free so long that Texas cattle no longer carry any immunity to tick fever and with the introduction of ticks from the infected area of Mexico there is danger of a serious death loss among the American cattle. Added to this danger is the cost of cleaning up that also falls on the American cattle owners. When fever-tick reinfestation occurs, dipping of all infested and exposed animals at 2-week intervals, over a period of 9 months, is necessary to insure eradication.

At the present time the Bureau of Animal Industry finds it necessary to maintain a force of about 44 men along this border at an annual cost to the Federal Government in excess of $100,000. With the completion of the proposed fence, it is believed that it will be possible to reduce this force and expense by one-half and still furnish much better protection than is at present possible.

CURE OF VARIOUS DISEASES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] in which he admonishes us to take care of the hoof-and-mouth disease in the neighboring country of Mexico, possibly build a fence between the State of Texas and Mexico in order to keep animals with that disease out of Texas. I appreciate very much the fact that we are doing a lot to prevent diseases in cattle. I would at the same time call your attention to the fact that we should do more to prevent diseases of the human race.

I therefore ask you to get behind the bill H. R. 977, which provides for research to find a cure for such degenerative diseases as cancer, polio, rheumatic fever, arthritis, hardening of the arteries, diabetes, and anemia.

Physicians, veterans, and representatives of women's clubs from coast to coast are writing me in favor of this bill, and expressing their confidence that the Congress will give favorable consideration to this humanitarian legislation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on Hawaii.

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech prepared for the annual convention of the Montana Wool Growers' Association, at Billings, Mont.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an exchange of correspondence between the President, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War, on the matter of the unification of the military services and, Mr. Speaker, if the rules permit, I ask unanimous consent that this extension may be made in the RECORD notwithstanding the fact it appears that the matter will exceed the allowable limit.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

Mr. KEARNEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to insert a statement made by himself under date of January 16 and January 20 at hearings before the Committee for Reciprocity Information.

Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Santa Monica Outlook in reference to Senator VANDENBERG's proposal for China.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on taxes by a former Congressman from Indiana, the Honorable Samuel B. Pettengill.

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter containing some comments on the tax-reduction bill and also two editorials on the same subject.

EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN COUNTRIES

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the exchange of students and professors between countries is one of the best ways at our disposal to create a happy world climate. One of the very eminent professors of Western Reserve University at Cleveland, Dr. E. E. Ecker, of the Institute of Pathology, is just returned from some months in Spain. I am inserting in the RECORD the pertinent part of a letter I have just received from him certain that the membership will be interested.

We came back enchanted with the Spanish people. They did everything possible to make our stay in their country a most pleasant one. We were free to come and go. Everyone appeared busy, the stores were full of goods, although food was too expensive for the average city laborer. Spain is an agricultural country so that the greater portion of the population appears well fed. The drought of the past 2 years has led to a serious lack of olive oil and other fats. Another difficulty arose when the sardine schools failed to return to their waters.

The Spanish people have a highly organized social system and excellent schools. The Minister of Education has been the driving force back of an enormous development of higher education and research. Their superior council of research has built several excellent research institutes, a special residence for visiting scientists, and other men of learning, and has sent numerous scholars for study abroad. These men receive a large stipend per month ($400) if they visit the United States. This allows them to travel freely and to live in comfort while in New York or other centers.

I gave many lectures at such centers as Santiago de Compostello, Madrid, Salamanca, and Valladolid. Received invitations from Sevilla, Granada, Valencia, and Barcelona, but our time was too short to accept the latter invitations. The Royal Academy of Medicine, which has a total membership of about 30, made me a corresponding member, and the clinical pathologists and bacteriologists made me honorary member of their respective organizations. While at Madrid I met British, Belgian, Dutch, Danish, and Swedish scientists who were also invited there to give lectures. My knowledge of Spanish proved to be a tremendous asset to me because the Spaniard is a poor linguist. All my lectures were given before crowded halls. I left Spain with the invitation to return whenever I find it possible to spend 2 months at the summer University of Santander.

Today I am convinced, Mrs. BOLTON, that exchange of scholars, including students, is one of our best means, if not the best, to obtain good will and understanding among the nations. One gets at the root of a people to an extent that no diplomat is able to reach by such a method. We should do everything possible to foster such exchanges with our neighboring republics. It is not enough to have their students visit us. Our scholars must be given the opportunity to teach for short periods of time in their schools, and these men or women must first acquire a thorough knowledge of Spanish or Portuguese as well as an appreciation of the mental make-up of these people.

While in Spain I have acquired some new ideas and techniques which may prove of value to us. * * *

Early this spring I expect two Spanish scientists here for a period of 6 months at the institute.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD] on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes on the sugar situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the announcement on unification last Thursday evening, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD my statement made in 1946.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

HOOF-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] on the hoof-and-mouth disease certainly should bring before this House the great danger to our food supply and the almost unlimited loss that it might entail if this disease is not controlled. The Committee on Agriculture has already appointed a subcommittee headed by a distinguished veterinarian of our body, the gentleman from Indiana, Dr. GILLIE, who helped handle the last great attack of this scourge in the U. S. A. some years ago, and we are proceeding to offer to cooperate with the Mexican authorities and with the legislative committee of this House whose business it is to look after the interests of agriculture and to protect the food supply of the Nation from disease and death.

It was with a great deal of misgivings and, I want to say, with some shock, that many of us learned last summer of the opening of the Mexican border to these unlimited importations and shipments of cattle at the very time that the Bureau of Animal Industry knew that these infected bulls had already been introduced into Mexico. We sow the wind and reap the whirlwind.

CANOL PROJECT

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, on about March 13, 1945, the War Department wrote off the Canol project, that fantastic excursion for oil up in the Canadian wilderness, which, I might say, would not have been undertaken by any man of experience and judgment in such matters.

Now, ex-Secretary of State Byrnes announces an agreement with Canada to liquidate the Canol project. Properties and equipment are to be sold to the highest bidder. Well, I doubt if there will be any bidders, and, as I predicted, the property would fall into disuse and ultimately be abandoned, and nature would take over.

Again I say, as I have said before, it is no great pleasure to me to see my early fears of complete failure confirmed. I brought this matter to the attention of the House on October 12 and 19, 1943, and again on March 13, 1945, when many millions of dollars remained unexpended. However, the War Department carried it to completion.

Economically, the Canol project was an absurdity of such high degree that anyone outside of Government who would propose such a subject would have been thought to be a fit subject for a psychiatrist. Militarily it failed equally flat. It did not yield as much gasoline and other products as was required on the project itself. All the steam was used to blow the whistle.

The War Department, of course, has not admitted making an error. With the tenacity and stubbornness which would be admirable on the battlefield, but is wholly inexcusable here, the War Department has sought to create the impression that Canol was, after all, a triumph.

I am of the opinion that the Appropriations Committee should scrutinize the budget of the War and Navy Departments so that we do not have another Canol on our hands. This entire project should be given an immediate investigation by the petroleum committee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or by the Armed Services Committee.

Certainly it must be agreed that the American people are entitled to a full explanation on this $135,000,000 project, which is now being unceremoniously junked to the highest bidder. I say "unceremoniously" because, if I remember correctly, the War Department held a ceremony when it was completed, announcing to the world that the great Canol was in operation.

REDS IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, the people of this Nation were rather startled last Saturday morning to read such headlines as appeared in the Washington Post regarding a former State Department employee, Carl Alde Marzani, to wit, "Ex-State Department man indicted as Red."

I wish to call attention to the fact that on November 29 and again on December 2, 1943, I made speeches on the floor of the House concerning some of these Reds in the various departments of our Government, and also how they bypassed the Civil Service Commission, after which the Committee on Un-American Activities voted unanimously to investigate the Civil Service Commission. I do not know who was responsible for purging this man in the State Department, but whoever got him out is deserving of a vote of thanks and commendation, not only of the House of Representatives, but the people of this Nation. The Civil Service Commission knew this man's record, declared him ineligible, and on the testimony of four men who worked with Marzani in OSS but never even knew him prior to his employment in OSS, the Civil Service Commission reversed its decision and declared him eligible for Federal employment. There are hundreds of other Communists in Federal employment we ought to get out as soon as possible.

Carl Marzani in 1943 was economic editor of OCI and was on the list of the Committee on Un-American Activities to be investigated through the United States Civil Service Commission. Unfortunately for the country, this investigation fizzled out, as did most of the investigations of this nature when the Democrats were in control of both branches of Congress. For approximately 5 years evidence has been in the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities to the effect that Carl Marzani was one of the signers of communistic petitions and that the New York police office had a record of him as an active member of the Communist Party under the name of Tony Whales. I know it was common practice for the Committee of the United States Civil Service Commission, when I was a Member of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to let men in various executive departments influence their decisions in declaring a man eligible for Federal employment, after they had found him ineligible. I had hoped in my absence that the Civil Service Commission had discontinued this practice, but much to my amazement, upon my return to the Eightieth Congress, I find it going on as usual.

Patrick Henry once said:

I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no other way to judge the future, but by the past.

Evidently no evidence of Marzani's past was either sought or considered by the Board of Appeals and Review of the Civil Service Commission, when they only considered evidence of fellow employees in the same department as Marzani. Conditions of this kind make the entire loyalty rating system, and particularly that of the Board of Appeals and Review, positively worthless in the way it is being handled. I seriously recommend to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service that they could do no better job in the Eightieth Congress than to make a complete investigation of the Civil Service Commission.

I also respectfully suggest to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee that they call for the entire files on this particular case as a starting point to learn the ineffectiveness of the present system within the Commission for handling loyalty cases. If they need additional names, I will be glad to supply them with a long list.

Carl Marzani's loyalty to this Government should have been judged entirely by the Commission on his record before his employment in the Office of Strategic Services, and not on what some of his coworkers thought of his particular assignment in that department.

STOP CRITICIZING MISSISSIPPI

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks and include some excerpts from a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] attacked the State of Mississippi about a couple of Negroes who had been convicted of murder, and called them "innocent children."

Some of these Red fronts raised $5,000 and sent it down to a Negro newspaper editor named A. W. High, of Jackson, to defend these Negroes with. He went down to Natchez and talked to them, and came back and said no, he was returning the check to the sender, because, he said, "They are guilty as h——."

He said also that one of them is at least 2 or 3 years older than he pretends to be. When he asked them if they were sorry for murdering this man, one of them said: "No; I am not sorry."

This editor goes on to say, "If outside people would go to Woodville and investigate, as he did, they would find out the same as he did, that the two defendants "have been treated fairly" and that outsiders "should quit criticizing the State of Mississippi."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, and in one to include a statement by Mr. Dean Acheson and Mr. Clayton, and in the other a speech delivered by Mr. James A. Farley.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WHITTEN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF JANUARY 20 AND WEEK OF JANUARY 27

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute in order to ask the gentleman from Indiana what we may expect for this week and the early part of next week, if he can give that information to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that we can meet tomorrow and then adjourn over Wednesday to Thursday, and adjourn from Thursday over to Monday. The committees are being organized this week and are getting under way with their work.

There is a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) from the Committee on Appropriations that I understand comes from that committee with a unanimous report. They would like to call it up tomorrow under unanimous consent. I have talked to the minority leader about it, and I can see no reason why it should not be called up tomorrow.

There is a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means which also is supported by the unanimous report of that committee. It would extend for 15 months the right of industrial alcohol producers to produce sugars and sirups, the extension dating from February 1. It is desirable, as I understand, to bring about this extension by reason of the necessities in the sugar and sirup fields.

There is also a bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, H. R. 1030, the excise tax bill.

My understanding is that the Committee on Ways and Means will make application Wednesday to the Committee on Rules for a rule which, if granted, could be filed on Thursday, so that the measure then could be taken up next week. It is the present intention to take it up on Wednesday of next week.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution passed by the City Council of Alameda.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Gould Lincoln.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a bill introduced by him, together with two editorials.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION LAW

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill to provide for the naming of someone to act as President in the event we should not have a person qualified to act on Inauguration Day. The chaos in Georgia certainly should be a warning to Congress to get its own house in order to prevent the havoc which would befall this Nation in the event this very real contingency of having no President should take place. There are two situations which could occur where we would not have a President or anyone named to act as President on Inauguration Day. The House passed a bill in 1941 which was introduced and sponsored by me which provided that the Speaker of the House of Representatives, if the Speaker had been elected, and, if not, the President pro tempore of the Senate should act as President in the event of the happening of such a contingency. The Senate did not act upon the bill. I have introduced it again this year and am having it printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, together with an explanation of the measure. I hope that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives will take early action on this very important matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Alton (Ill.) Evening Telegraph.

Mr. MURDOCK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Mississippi has seen fit to again bring up the racial issue. In introducing my resolution to amend the Constitution and abolish capital punishment I have been motivated by a sincere and humanitarian desire to end this primitive and barbaric custom.

I also resent the tie-up of communism. I am no more a Communist than the gentleman from Mississippi, and I have no more regard for the Communists than he has. I do not like the idea of his continual smearing of innocent people with the taint of communism. You can do or say anything you please about communism, but do not tie me up with it.

I resent the continual reference to the race of the children who are under sentence of death in Mississippi. I have never mentioned their race, and I am opposed to capital punishment, whether it is in Mississippi, Oregon, or any other State in the Union.

Bear in mind that a rich man has never been executed in the United States.

I sincerely hope that the Eightieth Congress will take steps to amend the Constitution and abolish capital punishment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PROGRAM FOR PRELIMINARY HEARINGS ON ALL LEGISLATION REFERRED TO COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to make an announcement upon behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which I think will meet with the universal approval of the membership of the House.

I refer to the action taken by the committee at its organization meeting. The action taken will enable every Member who introduces legislation referred to this committee to have an opportunity to present to the whole committee his views with respect to the legislation he has introduced, its purposes and the necessity for the same.

To accomplish this purpose, one day each week will be set aside for Members introducing legislation the preceding week to be heard by the committee. Thus, the Member can feel that every member of the committee is aware of his legislation, and the members of the committee can then better understand the purpose of the legislation and more intelligently determine, first, the necessity for a full hearing, and, second, if necessary, then its comparative importance with respect to other legislation pending before the committee, so that priority of hearings upon the bills pending before the committee can be more intelligently determined.

I have spoken generally of the benefits to be derived from the inauguration of this practice. I do not think it necessary to emphasize the personal value to the individual Member. This will be readily recognized in that it gives every Member the right within 1 week of the introduction of his legislation, the opportunity of a preliminary hearing at least before the whole committee. I am certain that every Member of this House will readily recognize the value of this opportunity and will appreciate it.

And, above all else, it is in accord with what I conceive to be one of the purposes and the intent of the Reorganization Act under which Congress is now operating.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a copy of a resolution and an editorial and comments on both.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor to comment on an editorial which appeared in yesterday's New York Times. That great paper did me the honor of commenting editorially on a resolution which I had introduced in the House of Representatives. This editorial is the lead editorial in Sunday's issue and is a full column in length. My resolution deals with the matter of reciprocal-trade agreements. This resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the President and all agencies of the Federal Government are hereby requested to postpone any action seeking the further adjustment of duties under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act), as amended, until sufficient time has elapsed to permit a scientific study of the necessity for further action under the reciprocal trade agreements policy. The United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to make such scientific study and report its findings to the Congress.

The purpose of this resolution is set forth clearly in the resolution. It might be well if I would give you a brief history of the activities of the State Department in its recent efforts to enter into a large number of additional trade agreements before the Congress will have time to take up the matter of the continuation of the present policy.

In 1945 the State Department announced that it would call a conference in London which would be attended by 18 of the other nations of the world and that that conference would convene in April of 1946. That conference did not convene in April 1946, and has not convened yet. Along in August or September of 1946 I wrote a letter to the State Department inquiring why this conference had not been held and suggested that the imminence of a general election was the principal reason. I think that was the principal reason. The administration knew that its policy, up to that time, had been in every agreement to reduce the duty on imports. It also knew that the manufacturers of a great number of commodities manufactured principally in the United States would be opposed to these rate reductions and if reductions were made before the election the administration would lose support. No doubt the administration expected to carry at least one branch of Congress. But now that the administration has lost both branches of Congress, it is speeding up and making preparations for this London conference. They want to make these agreements before Congress is ready to give consideration to the making of the reciprocal-trade agreement laws.

The writer of the editorial to which I have referred seems to think that this resolution is isolationist in its genesis and in its purpose. The resolution apparently raises a very important question. At least it is important enough so that one of the greatest newspapers in the country gives it a prominent place on its editorial page.

Anyone who will take the time to attend the hearings which are now being held here in Washington ostensibly by way of preparation for the London conference cannot help but see unmistakable evidence of great haste on the part of the State Department.

No person acquainted with the facts in this matter will say that the State Department has made or is making proper studies of this great undertaking. My information from many persons who are thoroughly advised with reference to this situation convinces me that Mr. Clayton and his cohorts are unduly active in their purpose to hold this London conference as soon as possible regardless of whether adequate preparations have been made. It has been suggested to me by men who are well posted with reference to these matters that it might be that certain of the 18 nations are quite well assured at this time as to what they may expect by way of concessions from the United States.

The reciprocal-trade agreements were intended to be reciprocal. As far as my study goes not one single agreement has been made that raised any duty on any commodity but that, on the contrary, every agreement that has been made has reduced the rates on all commodities included therein.

I therefore inquire, Where is the reciprocity?

The editor of this article suggests that this resolution that I have introduced suggests economic isolationism. I could with more propriety suggest that the editorial is international in its tendency.

At no place in this resolution is there any suggestion that I favor a complete abandonment of the reciprocal-trade-agreements program. I was a member of the Ways and Means Committee when this legislation was adopted. The editor refers to the able and patient efforts of Secretary of State Hull. I heard Secretary Hull before the Ways and Committee many times. His principal theme back in the thirties was that the reciprocal-trade agreements would guarantee peace. In spite of the fact that possibly some Congressmen believed his assertions in this respect, the truth is that soon after he made these statements we found ourselves in the worst war of all history.

The theme song now is that we must surrender up our home markets to foreign countries in order to appease them and to establish a good-neighbor policy. We are dealing with the very life of American industry when we carelessly and sentimentally throw our markets open to the products of cheap-labor countries of the world.

I shall expect to speak further on this subject at a later date.

In fairness to the writer of the editorial about which I refer, I am herewith extending my remarks to include this editorial:

OUR ECONOMIC POLICY

In ordinary times (if it is still possible to imagine what ordinary times are like) one might see only minor significance in such a resolution as that introduced in the House by Representative THOMAS A. JENKINS, of Ohio, to suspend further reciprocal-trade agreements until a scientific study has been made. But in January 1947 this proposal, advanced by a high-ranking Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee, with a record of 22 years' service behind him, cannot be ignored. The Republican Party has pretty well purged itself of political isolationism. We cannot yet be sure that it has also purged itself of economic isolationism. The Jenkins resolution, which is essentially isolationist, is a test case. No one who has followed the course of the reciprocal-trade agreements, so ably and patiently pushed by former Secretary of State Hull, can accept the pretense that a scientific study of them is now necessary. They have been based, from the beginning, on scientific studies. What Mr. JENKINS of Ohio actually proposes is to obstruct further progress.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, under amendments adopted in 1945, runs to June 1948. The agreements already made have reduced Hawley-Smoot rates by some 31 percent. Yet these reductions have been accomplished with such care and discretion that none of the wild cries of ruin that were made at the outset of the program has been justified. Representative JENKINS of Ohio, in presenting his resolution, asserts that those in charge of this program, if permitted to do so, would establish a complete free-trade system. This fear has been voiced since 1934. It has been denied by word and it has been denied by the facts of the agreements themselves.

The Government of the United States has taken the lead in seeking elimination of the mass of restrictions that obstruct the foreign trade so essential to our prosperity and to that of the whole world. It has won to this policy, by every weapon of diplomatic and economic pressure we could exert, the support of Great Britain. It is seeking to implement the policy by the negotiations with 18 nations soon to commence. It is leading the way in the establishment of the International Trade Organization, the creation of which would be an almost meaningless gesture if it was accompanied by obstruction of the reciprocal-trade-agreement program.

The whole foreign policy of the country is at issue here. The reciprocal-trade agreements, though they date from before the war, fit perfectly into the emerging picture of postwar conditions. The world has shrunk to a fraction of its former size. Economic situations thousands of miles away have their effect on economic situations in this country. If they deteriorate, we too suffer. If they grow desperate, they threaten the structure of peace. To support our political commitments for peace we must make economic commitments for peace. Foreign loans and credits, food exports to countries that need them, the stabilization of world currencies, agreements to promote the flow of goods among the nations—all are tied together and all are essential to our political foreign policy.

Senator VANDENBERG, who speaks for the Republicans with more authority than Representative JENKINS can, has gone on record with the opinion that peace and economics are inseparably akin, and in favor of the continuance of reciprocal-trade agreements, in one form or another. But he coupled these reassuring words, in his Cleveland speech, with the warning that the future of the present multilateral basis of the reciprocal treaties might depend somewhat upon the type of competition we confront from foreign state monopolies and from a growing habit of making bilateral trade agreements for political as well as economic purposes. We may need such warnings, but they must not constitute an alibi. The nations are gradually building a political peace. They can also build an economic peace. The Republicans cannot wipe out their isolationist taint unless they wholeheartedly work toward this end.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a recent radio address.

Mr. JUDD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and in each to include certain printed matter.

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on three different subjects.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative business and any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 10 minutes on an amendment proposed to the Fair Labor Standards Act by Lee Pressman, general counsel of the CIO. I want to support it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND TEACHERS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, no one will dispute the fact that this is the best country in all the world in which to live. Here the average man and woman—and do not forget that woman—has more freedom, prosperity, and happiness, than anywhere else in all the world. We are often told, and we heard it again today, that it would be a very good thing for us if we would exchange teachers and students with other countries. That might be good for them but I am not so sure that ideas from Hitler's land and from Stalin and their disciples are good for us and our youth. The argument made today in support of that move to trade teachers and students took me back to my boyhood days when I had a flock of White Leghorn hens that used to lay around 250 to 300 eggs per hen per year. They were good hens. It also led me to think of a herd of cows we had on the farm which produced each year five or six thousand pounds of milk. Then, into flocks like that somebody got the idea of bringing a scrub rooster or two, an old hen or two, from the neighbor's flock—anything that could crow or that could lay an egg even if but one a week—and mixing them in with the good ones. They let our cows get into the neighbor's yard, with a no-account bull, and as a result we had a lot of scrub cows that gave a quart of milk a day. To my notion, we will get along pretty well here in America if we will use what we have here at home to teach and give examples to our boys and girls and keep these Red teachers and pupils who come from countries where they quarrel and fight and gouge each other over on the other side until, figuratively speaking, they can lay as many eggs and produce as much milk and butterfat as can we under our system.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Because of the quantity of my mail on reciprocal-trade agreements, I hope you will pay some attention to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]. The great issue in the next campaign will be the old issue of protection. High wages for everybody and high costs; yet they are on the road to making lower rates in the tariff. I am more worried about that than perhaps anything else. Will not some of you who have real influence go down to those hearings that are now being held?

I simply rose to give you warning that 2 years from today protection will be the dominant question for the voters to decide. The Republicans will win on that issue.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

PROGRAM FOR THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, during the campaign last fall I told the folks in my district about certain legislation which I thought should be adopted. I wish today to inform you and the other Members of the Congress what I feel reflects their thinking on this subject.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent the Fourth Congressional District in Nebraska, which is made up of 38 counties and represents some 325,000 people. The folks in this large district live far enough away from the turmoil, pressure, and confusion of Washington, and close enough to the sun and soil, to have some very clear thoughts on national problems. For the most part, they are the descendants of pioneers and are steeped in the tradition of free enterprise that has made this country great.

LABOR

It is my considered judgment that an overwhelming majority of the people of my district feel that labor legislation should have early priority in the Eightieth Congress. With that thought in mind, I have introduced a bill which would outlaw closed shops. The citizens of Nebraska voted overwhelmingly for a constitutional amendment to outlaw the so-called closed or union shops in Nebraska.

I have introduced legislation to outlaw jurisdictional and sympathy strikes and secondary boycotts.

I have also introduced legislation to set up compulsory arbitration in industries involving the health, safety, and welfare of the citizens of the country, when all other means have failed. When individuals cannot settle their differences voluntarily, they must submit to compulsory arbitration in our courts. Is there any reason why labor unions and employers should have a different standard, particularly in those industries which so vitally affect the health and welfare of all the people?

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this Congress should give early consideration to legislation which has for its purpose bringing about peaceful relations between labor and industry. It is the duty of our Government to provide the necessary machinery and act as a referee in these disputes. Since VJ-day there has been almost complete chaos with a continual free-for-all tug-of-war between labor and industry. The public and our reconversion program has been thoroughly picketed. The public and the worker is the loser. They must have some protection from the unscrupulous labor leaders and industrialists who deliberately throw our economy into a tail-spin.

There seems to be no valid reason why our country should not have many years of prosperity if labor and capital can keep the wheels of industry moving. This country has the factories, the raw materials, the manpower, the know how, and the inventive genius to out-produce every other nation in the world. We did it during World War II and it should be continued in peacetime.

In considering labor measures, the Congress must not pass punitive or destructive measures. All legislation should be considered in the light of what is best for the public and not what is best for either labor or industry.

I do not claim that the passage of legislation I have introduced would be the final answer, but I am prepared to support any legislation which will correct some of the evils which presently exist.

TAXES

Yes, we would all like lower taxes and taxes are unduly high. There are several reasons why taxes are presently very high and why they will remain so. The public debt is now $260,000,000,000 and the interest on this debt is about $5,000,000,000 a year.

The war has increased our obligation to the veterans. It is estimated that this expense is now about $7,000,000,000 a year and may well exceed $10,000,000,000 in the next few years.

In the present unsettled world, it seems imperative that our military forces be given our support. The military budget for this year amounts to about 11 billion dollars. If and when a permanent agreement has been reached by the nations on disarmament, it seems likely that this part of the public expense could be greatly curtailed.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that before taxes can be greatly reduced, it is necessary that we balance the Budget. When this has been accomplished, perhaps we can have a 5 or 10 percent reduction in taxes. This can be done if the national income remains high and the present tax rates are not greatly reduced. It should be possible for this Congress to make a start on the reduction of our debt. Some means should be found whereby it can be amortized and five or six million dollars paid on its reduction each year. It should be remembered that our national income this past year has been the highest in our history. Should our national income ever drop below a hundred billion dollars, this Nation would face disaster.

FEDERAL SPENDING

Mr. Speaker, our tax bill as recommended by the President is four times that of 1939. Part of this is due to the increase in Federal activities, with its increased Federal pay roll, bureaus, and commissions.

In 1933, before the New Deal, we were able to handle Government business with about 533,000 Federal employees. This cost the taxpayers about a billion dollars a year. The Federal debt at that time was approximately $16,000,000,000. Six years later, in 1939, the number of Federal employees had increased to 933,000. The Federal debt then was $60,000,000,000. During the peak of World War II the number of Federal employees reached 3,600,000. Today, more than 18 months after the end of the war, we still have about 2,300,000 on the Federal pay roll, at a cost of $7,000,000,000.

In the past 20 years the number of bureaus and commissions have increased from 150 to 1,141. This Congress should give serious consideration to the combining of Federal agencies and bureaus, and eliminating those which are no longer necessary. Many of these Government agencies overlap in their functions. There is much waste, inefficiency, and outright extravagance which can and must be eliminated.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING

It is my judgment that the large majority of the people in my district are opposed to compulsory military training in peacetime. The military is now offering rather attractive advantages and it does seem that if the problem of getting recruits is properly pursued, that the needs of the armed forces can be met through voluntary methods. Again it is hoped that the nations of the world can agree upon some general disarmament plan which will make unnecessary large standing armies. In the meantime, it might be best to exert our greatest efforts upon new techniques and experimental work in our laboratories.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Foreign affairs in this Congress should be approached upon a bipartisan basis. The people all over the world are anxious for a permanent and a just peace. The Congress should bend every effort to work with the State Department to help complete the blueprints for peace which are now in the making. Naturally, this implies a willingness on the part of the President to cooperate with the proper committees in the Congress to this end.

AGRICULTURE

The wealth of this Nation comes from the soil and our natural resources. If agriculture is sick, then the entire world and all industry will be sick. I believe this Congress should make every effort to see that the products of agriculture are on a parity with the things the farmer must buy. Our agriculture should be protected from imports from other countries which undermine and cheapen the products which come from our land.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the people of my district in Nebraska want an end to Government controls, regimentation, and bureaucracy. I am reintroducing my bill to declare the war at an end and to end the emergency powers of the President. The people want an opportunity to live their lives as they see fit and not have all their comings and goings directed by the Federal Government. It seems to me that much of the regimentation and regulations of this day could be safely turned back to the States. That government is best which is kept closest to the people.

I am anxious, Mr. Speaker, to be of as much service as I possibly can to my district and to my country. I expect to be faithful in attendance at my committees and at the sessions of Congress. I do feel that our party is on trial. The time for talking is past. The time for action is now.

Many bills may be introduced into this Congress. A number will be passed, but it should be remembered that the country is never hurt by bills that are not passed.

Let us look after first things first and give our great country a chance to get back to private enterprise and away from a continued regimentation. Then the same spirit that has brought us to our high plane today will carry us on to even greater heights.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I had in mind, may I say to the gentleman from Nebraska, is this: I think the gentleman mentioned a $100,000,000,000 national income and the disastrous effects that might come to us should it drop to that level. Would the gentleman agree that we might have $100,000,000,000 national income on a much lower price level and still approximate, let us say, $140,000,000,000 national income on today's price level? I think we should draw a line of distinction with respect to price levels when we talk about national income, but would the gentleman go along with me on that?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes, I think the gentleman is correct. In relation to the $100,000,000,000 of which I spoke, if our national income drops below that figure, then we are in trouble, I think the gentleman will agree.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I agree with that. Would the gentleman go along with me on this, too, that using today's price level, would it not be a national disaster of the first order for our national income to drop as low as $130,000,000,000?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think the gentleman is correct. He has made a great study of economics and I respect his thoughts and opinions along that line.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I bring up this question is because our people, as the gentleman has pointed out, are deeply concerned about these matters which the gentleman has discussed.

On this matter of peacetime universal military training, I would like to say to the gentleman that 90 percent of the correspondence that I receive on that subject is against this Congress inaugurating peacetime compulsory military training. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Have we any reason to assume that the United Nations organization can effectuate its program and be in a position to tell us, as the leading member of that organization—I mean the United States the leading member of that organization—what our responsibilities will be with respect to an air force, army force, navy force, and the other forces that will be brought in by reason of scientific development under a period of anywhere from 18 months to 36 months away from today? How can the United Nations organization give us an answer to that question before then?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I do not believe they can find the answer to it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Neither do I.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I will say in that connection that Secretary of War Patterson will present to this Congress within the next week a program either for or against compulsory military training.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me that our people have got to be patient with Congress, as the Congress awaits what the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of War, and the President of the United States have to say to us on that important subject.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think the gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The thing that disturbs me is that the universal peace we usually hear about when they talk about building Towers of Babel seems to get more remote when the United Nations not only intervenes in the internal affairs of South Africa but attempts to stir up a Communist revolution in Spain.

It seems to me it is about time for the American Congress, which represents the American people, to give those forces to understand that they need not be trying to stir up wars for us to fight in the future.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think I understand the gentleman's disturbance. Personally, I have great hopes that the United Nations may work out a program whereby we can get some just and lasting peace. I think recently we have made some progress along that line.

Mr. RANKIN. One other proposition. The gentleman spoke about the consolidation of the Army and Navy. The one great advantage I see from that is that it gives us an independent Air Force. We know that the brass hats and the gold braids destroyed Billy Mitchell 20 years ago, and that Pearl Harbor was the result. So I am willing to take anything the President recommends, or that the Congress recommends, that will give us an independent Air Force or a coordinate Air Force, because that will be more important in the years to come than a standing Army or a big Navy.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. First, I wish to compliment the gentleman from Nebraska on his general interest in all matters of particular interest to the rural people of this country, because his district is pretty largely rural. In connection with this universal draft, I am sure there is a point the gentleman will not overlook. Last year when the draft bill was proposed, the House was very careful not to have one provision in it. That provision left an escape clause so that people who had enough of the world's goods and could send their children to higher educational institutions would not come under the draft. It passed the burden back to the groups that did not have this advantage. This provision was put in the bill in another body, but it was deleted in conference, as far as the House was concerned. I think the gentleman from Nebraska, representing a great agricultural district, and each of the rest of us from rural districts, should be very vigilant in watching what takes place and seeing who is going to be drafted in case they pass a draft bill, for the reason that the rural people are only 25 percent of the population but they have pretty nearly 50 percent of the children. In a little while all the Army would be composed of those from the low income groups in the cities and from the rural areas, because such a small percentage of the children in the rural areas ever even finish high school. We must guard against having a draft bill that will take the members of the armed forces from the rural districts primarily, and perhaps having the officers come from the other groups. The gentleman probably remembers the interest he took in that matter when it was up for consideration before.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Yes; I do. May I say, as I have said earlier, that the folks in my district are opposed to peacetime compulsory military training. I think they would accept some type of training whereby we have an extension of the ROTC in colleges or have training through the National Guard, some permissive legislation, but they do not want the compulsive part of it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask my friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] this question: When the gentleman from Mississippi spoke about an independent Air Force he was somewhat talking about the United States organization machinery, but he meant an independent Air Force insofar as our own Army and Air Force are concerned, did he not?

Mr. RANKIN. What I meant was this. I will say a coordinate Air Force. I wanted to put the Air Force on an equal footing with the Army and the Navy. I am not expecting the Tower of Babel to pull us out of the hole; I am expecting the American people to look after their own affairs. We know that about 20 years ago, when Frank Reid and a few of the rest of us here on the floor fought to protect Gen. Billy Mitchell when he was trying to get us to build an Air Force; we saw him crucified. As a result, we lost Pearl Harbor and untold thousands of men in this war. If we will keep what we have in the atomic bomb and build the strongest air force on earth, then the rest of the world may decide that they want peace a little later on.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can the United States under the terms of the United Nations organization charter build what might be termed the strongest air force on earth and maintain it? Are we not committed to go along with the United Nations organization?

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan, and I am sure he agrees with this statement, that the safety of America comes first. The American people have never had a vote on any of these foreign entanglements. If it is going to tie the hands of America to where we are going to be undermined at home and insulted abroad by the communistic elements of the world, then it is about time that Congress represented the American people and said, "We are going to see that America is protected while the rest of the world decides whether they want peace or not."

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time. I appreciate the interest of the gentlemen in this subject which I have tried to present to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. CANFIELD]. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

WE SHOULD CUT PERSONAL INCOME TAXES NOW

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the question, Is it wise to cut income taxes at this time? is being discussed today pro and con across the length and breadth of the land. Personally, I believe it is both wise and necessary to cut income taxes now. I therefore favor prompt action on the part of Congress to make a cut in our personal income tax rate of at least 20 percent, and offer the following arguments in support of my position in this matter.

First. Our Republican leaders during the campaign stated definitely and without any reservation that if the Republicans were given control of both Houses of Congress they would promptly:

(a) Balance the Federal Budget.

(b) Reduce personal income taxes 20 percent.

(c) Cut Federal expenditures 30 percent.

(d) Make substantial payments on the national debt.

The voters accepted that statement at face value. Nothing was said as to the order in which these four objectives were to be effected, but it was generally understood that all four should be accomplished, and could be accomplished, simultaneously. That statement was a definite campaign promise. It was not "platform oratory." I believe it both wise and necessary to carry out that campaign promise now.

Second. Treasury experts tell us that a straight across the board cut of 20 percent in our personal income taxes would amount to a rebate of $3,500,000,000 to the American taxpayers, and that the greater part of this $3,500,000,000 would go to taxpayers in the lower brackets. That means Uncle Sam would not dip his big hand quite so deeply into the pay envelopes of the working men of America; it means their take-home pay would be increased by that amount; and it means the housewives of America would have that much more to spend for necessary food, clothes, fuel, and rent. Such a tax reduction, therefore, would operate the same as a pay increase for the workers of America.

Today rumblings of industrial unrest fill the air. Threats of strikes and work stoppages that are to come are heard everywhere. An automatic increase in take-home pay for the workers of America at this time, brought about by a reduction in the amount Uncle Sam extracts from their pay envelopes, should act as an antidote for this industrial unrest and threatened strikes for higher pay. From this standpoint alone, in my opinion, it would be wise now, not later, to reduce Federal income taxes.

Third. Past history proves that a reduction in the Federal income tax brings beneficial results and is both wise and businesslike. After World War I, between 1921–29, on the advice of Andrew Mellon, the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, Congress passed four separate and distinct tax-reduction measures, reducing personal income-tax rates and increasing personal income-tax exemptions very materially. This was done in the face of a $26,000,000,000 war debt and an industrial unemployment situation that listed 6,000,000 workmen idle. What was the result of Mellon's tax-reduction program? Believe it or not, Treasury reports show that it resulted in—

First. A balanced budget.

Second. A $10,000,000,000 reduction in the Federal debt within a 10-year period.

Third. A decided increase in the revenue receipts of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, the reason for this unprecedented improvement in the financial condition of the Nation, under Mellon's tax reduction program, was—quoting the noted tax authority, Professor Seligman:

> The reduced tax rates encouraged business expansion, stimulated production, gave private initiative free play, and brought forth adequate venture capital.

If a tax reduction program did those things after World War I, then it should do those things now.

As a sample of the degree of prosperity attained during those years, Treasury reports show that capital net gains from sale of assets increased from $249,000,000 in 1922 to $2,347,000,000 in 1929, an increase in this one taxable item of almost 1,000 percent.

Mr. Speaker, most people believe that a reduction in excessive and oppressive individual income taxes will mean a loss in revenue. It has been proved time and again that the exact opposite happens—one gets an increase in revenue receipts instead of a decrease. This illustrates the fact that the total yield from an income tax depends more upon the amount of taxable income than it does upon the rate of taxation applied. Excessive tax rates always tend to dry up the sources from which the revenue comes; always encourage tax evasion; and always make the tax less productive.

Why talk today about the advisability of reducing taxes? Present-day taxation is confiscatory. It is nationalizing the income of industry, and that must inevitably end in the nationalization of industry itself. When rates of taxation reach the point of diminishing returns—as they undoubtedly have today—we must reduce those rates, and do it promptly.

In the light of past history, therefore, there are as many, if not more, reasons for cutting income taxes now as there were after World War I. What was done then can, and should, be repeated now. If it is done I am satisfied it will bring about the same beneficial results.

Under the heading "The spending goes on," David Lawrence has the following to say:

> Republicans have an opportunity to set up a fiscal system that will command the respect of the world.
> The prerequisites of such a plan are these:
> 1. A reexamination of the reason for every dollar spent in the Federal Government. This means a study of every existing statute which involves the spending of money, no matter how far back in our history that statute reaches.
> 2. A program that pledges the retirement of the public debt by at least $3,000,000,000 each year. It should aim at $5,000,000,000.
> 3. The reduction of taxes.
> The President has recommended a Budget of $37,500,000,000. It should be possible to reduce the Budget to $30,000,000,000 and apply half of the surplus of $7,500,000,000 to debt retirement and half of it to tax reduction.

I say "amen" to that statement.

Mr. Speaker, an early American philosopher said of Alexander Hamilton:

> He smote the rock of national resources and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth. He touched the dead corpse of public credit and it sprang upon its feet.

The financial miracles that Alexander Hamilton performed for this struggling Republic during its infancy were repeated by Andy Mellon during the dark and trying days immediately following World War I. Today a Republican Congress is pledged to repeat those same financial miracles for a financially sick nation. I see no reason for not doing so promptly. Therefore, I claim it is both wise and necessary to make a cut in our personal income taxes now.

MEMBERS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute in order to make a statement to clarify a situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, in determining seniority on the reorganized Public Lands Committee, into which were merged six previous standing committees of the House, we made an error in the determination of seniority between the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL] and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

In order to correct that error and to bring that assignment of seniority in line with other similar assignments adopted by the Committee on Committees, I ask unanimous consent to correct the list of members of the Committee on Public Lands by placing the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL] No. 4 thereon and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] No. 5 thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a poem.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

REPORT ON TRIP TO PALESTINE AND GREECE

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, just prior to the opening of the Congress, I sought information about certain critical world problems of primary interest to my constituents by a trip to Palestine, Greece, Rome and London in that order. The Department of State was extremely helpful in facilitating travel arrangements for me, but the trip was on my own.

I was rather careful, in the course of my trip, to reserve comment and conclusions for a report such as this to the House and to my constituents.

My visit to Rome was to seek enlightenment on the religious side. The audience which I was privileged to have with His Holiness Pope Pius XII had no political connotations and I therefore omit it from this report. The members of this House may be interested to know, however, of the terms of "love and esteem" in which His Holiness spoke of the people of the United States.

The problems presented by Greece and Palestine are of special interest. The time I spent abroad was necessarily brief—just under a month—but I tried very hard to interview men and women, representative of all shades of opinion, saw the countries, both of which are small, and tried to cover the ground as thoroughly as possible. I had given considerable study previously to the problems of these countries; and, though I do not pretend to have become an expert on them, certain facts and impressions of this experience stand out so markedly that I hope they may prove to be of value to this House.

PALESTINE

In Palestine I traveled the length and breadth of the country, literally from Dan to Bersheba; that is from the Huleh Marshes, in the northeastern part of the country, to the Negeb, in the southernmost part.

I talked not only with the man in the street—Jew and Arab alike—and with journalists but also with the heads of the Jewish Agency, with the representatives of our State Department, with the British High Commissioner and the Chief Secretary, with the British Commanding General at Haifa, where the immigration troubles with refugee ships have taken place, with the head of the Jewish community, with the president of the Hebrew University, with leading Arab intellectuals, with the chief rabbi of Palestine, with businessmen, industrialists and lawyers, and with managers and residents of Jewish agricultural settlements throughout the country. In London I checked and confirmed my impressions through the courtesy of the British Government by conferring with distinguished representatives of the foreign and colonial offices.

An interesting phase of life in Palestine is that the Jews have achieved an economic balance there not present among them anywhere else in the world. About 20 percent of the Jewish population are farmers, which is about the same as the over-all percentage for the United States population; but throughout the world only about 3 percent of Jews are estimated to be farmers. The Jewish population in Palestine is about 600,000 and the Arab is about 1,200,000. Most of the people are engaged in agriculture and agricultural processing, though small industry is growing rapidly and the whole civilization of the middle east could well be modernized by the potentiality of this new industrial development.

The types of Jewish agricultural settlement in Palestine are of three kinds: The first, and the most numerous, is the small town—just like our own country town; second, the agricultural settlement, where the land is privately owned but where both the selling of produce and the buying of supplies are controlled by cooperatives for all—farm cooperatives are also well known to us; and lastly, the much discussed communal settlements, where there is no private property but all is held and worked together. It is significant to note, however, that in this last group are found only about 20 percent of the aggregate Jewish population of Palestine who are settled on the land.

We have all heard of the work of soil utilization in Palestine. It is very inspiring to see what are truly these miracles. In the valley of the Jordan, great boulders have been moved away with United States bulldozers, and the fields have been made into waving gardens of green. The hills of Judea have been cleared of stones and rocks and the fertile terraces of ancient days restored to bear olive trees again.

The Negeb occupies almost one-half of Palestine's 10,000 square miles. It is a dust-bowl type of parched prairie—which could, with irrigation, be as rich as the Imperial Valley of California—in which an estimated 80,000 Bedouins normally lived until the Jews threw in a dozen settlements overnight recently.

The possibilities of agricultural development in the Negeb are shown at the experimental settlement of Beth Eshel, near Beersheba, where great fruitfulness in the land has resulted from irrigation and also from special farming methods. This Negeb is the main area to be benefited by the proposed Jordan Valley development project.

Given the necessary money—the will and inspiration shown by these existing settlements indicate that the Palestinian land can certainly take a great many additional families. The doubling of the Jewish population of Palestine, now about 600,000, within a proximate period of time, does not seem at all out of line. Of the 1,400,000 Jews left in Europe, outside of Russia, the best estimate I can get is, that certainly 600,000 at the least would want to go to Palestine.

I made some inquiries into the question of cost. The estimates varied. But the consensus seems to be that 100,000 additional families could be settled on the land with an investment of outside capital of one-half to one billion dollars—certainly an attainable figure—and that this number of families could be well settled within a few years.

Social tension does not appear to be a major factor at this time between the Arabs and Jews in Palestine who, at the grass roots level, appear to enjoy cordial neighborly relations. But among the Arab ruling and owning class there is a spirit of intense nationalism and coupled with it, religious fanaticism and fear of western ideas. This group finds it hard to recognize that the situation in Palestine with its large Jewish population, its background of Turkish rule and the solemn promise of the Jewish National Homeland to be established there makes comparison with the Arab countries inappropriate.

It is very significant to note the progress which western ideas introduced by the Jews have already made among the Arabs in Palestine. For example, in the last 15 years, the Arab life expectancy has been raised from 37 to 48 years and the infant mortality has been reduced almost 50 percent—the Arab birth rate is extremely high.

I was informed by a British representative at the highest levels, that there is a deep interest in Arab communities in education and that Arabs even in outlying villages constantly ask for better schools and are even interested in classes for girls—I gather quite a departure in that country. The Arab farmers and city dwellers have already realized some part of the higher living and educational standards for them of which a free and independent Palestine would be capable.

The social tensions present in Palestine are now largely between the Jews and the British. These are based on the restraints on immigration and land purchase enforced by the British—though we should not forget that Britain is continuing to admit 1,500 refugees every month, incidentally, without causing any Arab revolution—and on the anomaly of colonial control applied to a highly civilized people. For example, the municipal activities of the city of Tel Aviv, a modern, all-Jewish city of 250,000, require the prior authorization of a British district commissioner. Tel Aviv has its own mayor and a very competent municipal council. The status of such a British district commissioner in the civil service hierarchy of a city like Tel Aviv in our country, would put him at about a department head level.

The terroristic acts in Palestine which have caused such grave tension between the British and the Jews must be condemned in the strongest terms, and have already been so condemned within and outside of Palestine by all who desire justice and the realization of legitimate Jewish aspirations there.

In an interview with the correspondents in Jerusalem, I emphasized my belief that the terroristic acts had done more to alienate public opinion in the United States from Jewish aspirations in Palestine than any event in years; that the Republican majority of this House would have little patience with terror as an instrument of policy and that it would be very damaging to the interests of the Jewish refugees in Europe. We must recognize that this terror which ends in political crime begins in political frustration, and I am convinced that a policy of justice in Palestine is the necessary moral basis for ending the terror.

On the political side, it is easy to be puzzled, as many are, about the special diplomatic considerations involved in the Palestine situation. The British say that they seek only a just solution between Jews and Arabs. The Jews say justice cannot mean breaking the promise to encourage Jewish immigration and "close settlement" of Jews on the land of Palestine, implicit in the Balfour Declaration and in the League of Nations mandate to Great Britain.

The British say that restrictions against purchase by Jews of Arab land in Palestine are essential to protect the Arab against himself; yet land, if purchased in a free market under objective supervision, would make any Arab interested in selling rich enough to command his own estate in any other Arab country. Some argue that Britain's policy is dictated by a fear that the Arabs will turn to communism if aggrieved in a Palestinian settlement, but prosperity and education for the Arabs, both of which have been concomitants of Jewish settlement, are the greatest discouragers of communism. Arab sympathy for the Palestinian Arabs is said to be greatest in Iraq and Syria, the very points where Britain has the greatest stake in oil resources. It is said that British policy is dictated by fear of Arab retaliation against Britain's trade routes and oil resources. But fear of retaliation by the Arab world is unjustified if the settlement in Palestine be just to the Arabs—and there should be no design for other than a just settlement. For all the discussion of a Jewish Palestine, we must not forget that we are speaking only of a free state with a Jewish population which may be permitted to become equal to or greater than the Arab. No one has proposed to move out the Arabs or to treat them other than as equals, and any such proposal would, of course, be unthinkable. The Republican Party platform of 1944 makes this clear:

> In order to give refuge to millions of distressed Jewish men, women, and children driven from their homes by tyranny, we call for the opening of Palestine to their unrestricted immigration and land ownership so that in accordance with the full intent and purpose of the Balfour Declaration of 1917 and the resolution of a Republican Congress in 1922, Palestine may be constituted as a free and democratic commonwealth. We condemn the failure of the President to insist that the mandatory of Palestine carry out the provision of the mandate while he pretends to support them.

There is yet another conference assembling in London tomorrow to deal with Britain's place in Palestine. Of one thing the world may be certain—the situation of the Jews in Europe and in Palestine will grow worse on all counts the longer a solution is deferred and tension remains at a peak. The London Conference will not be realistic if it fails to recognize that the essentiality is land settlement, admission of refugees from Europe into Palestine, and the lifting of land-sale restrictions. Political agitation is easily advertised as a technique for bringing about land settlement, but so far it has been retarding land settlement. Most Jews I talked with in Palestine feel that partition is probably the only practicable answer. But partition will take time for agreement on boundaries, on new constitutions, on economic and political relations for the partitioned parts, and on the internationalization of the central area in which are located the shrines of Christendom. In the meantime Jewish land settlement is urgently needed and, with it, greater Jewish and Arab participation in internal administration.

The prestige of the United States is very high in Palestine. A plan by which the United States will join, through a special mission to Palestine for that purpose, in supervising increased immigration and land settlement, now, and the resumption of free land purchase is likely to ease the immediate political pressure considerably. As part of such a plan, in view of Arab interest, some financial and technical aid for Arab education should be considered as recommended by the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry in May 1946. Let us not suppose that new money is necessarily involved, for we are paying now for displaced-persons camps in the American zone to look after thousands who want to go to Palestine, without satisfying anyone.

In October 1945 our distinguished Speaker—among other Members—introduced House Joint Resolution 264 asking "that the United States shall use its good offices to the end that the doors of Palestine shall be opened for free entry of Jews into that country, and that there shall be full opportunity for colonization, so that they may reconstitute Palestine as a free and democratic commonwealth in which all men, regardless of race or creed, shall enjoy equal rights," which was followed, on December 19, 1945, by the adoption of Senate Concurrent Resolution 44. Taking those resolutions as excellent models, I urge that implementing legislation be passed at the very earliest convenience of the Congress.

Juridically, Britain is bound by a resolution adopted at the last session of the League of Nations in April 1946, providing that the Mandate continue to be administered until "other arrangements have been agreed between the United Nations and the Mandatory."

My own district which is about equally divided between Protestants, Catholics, and Jews indicated by a substantial majority a preference for a United Nations Trusteeship for Palestine with the United States as one of the trustees, in a survey of opinion by the Elmo Roper organization which I initiated to ascertain the district's views on major questions during last fall's campaign.

Any settlement on the Palestine issue would therefore ultimately come before the United Nations. Should the emphasis be placed now on a settlement which will open Palestine to renewed immigration and land settlement, consideration may well be given in parallel to an agreed partition or to a United Nations Trusteeship to see Palestine through its transitory phase before partition or independence—in such event the United States could consider acting as one of the trustees.

May I say, too, that we must not forget to savor the good we do? When Palestine was at peace in 1936, and refugees were escaping there freely from Hitler's Germany, the people of Tel Aviv were so happy they would spontaneously stop and dance in the streets. This induced a Hebrew poet to write of them, "They filled their bellies with water and thought they were drunk."

GREECE

The very land of Greece looks free and independent. From the air, the Lord seems to have thrown a handful of mountain and valley into an azure sea and made Greece.

Greece has suffered terribly during the war: Fourteen hundred villages razed, 400,000—almost one out of three—homes destroyed, the country stripped bare, the roads, railroads, and other means of communication ruined, rolling stock taken away, livestock taken off the farms—the Nazis even carted away much of the furniture out of the people's homes.

The heroic resistance of the Greek people to the Fascist and Nazi hordes in Albania, the Ruppel Pass, and on the Olympus Line, which made the Nazis' timetable a scrap of paper and gave the Russian armies a priceless breathing spell, earned for the Greeks this treatment. Battered and destroyed in its human and material resources, with its productive plant all but gone, Greece, already a poor country, faces despair. The drachma is at one-tenth of its stabilized value of but months ago, and the Greek price level is 40 percent greater than that of the United States or Britain.

UNRRA will have spent $350,000,000 in Greece in about 2 years—58 percent of it for food. The proceeds of UNRRA sales in Greece are included in the Greek Government budget, earmarked for internal relief, and when this flow ends early this year (but $22,000,000 of goods remain to be delivered in 1947) the Greek people believe their situation will be hopeless, indeed, unless we come to their aid.

During my visit to Greece, I conferred with the leaders of all shades of political opinion—those represented in the Chamber of Deputies as well as those who abstained in the last parliamentary elections—members of the Government, our own Ambassador, Mr. MacVeagh, who was most courteous and gracious, and his staff, the British Commanding General, and officials of UNRRA, and Greek-American War Relief.

Much has been said about communism in Greece, but the country is not designed for it and does not want it. Eighty-five percent of the Greek economy is agricultural and 90 percent of the land is in small holdings. Agrarian reform took place 30 years ago. Internal economic pressures in a people driven almost to despair, lead men to violence against a government which they think ought to do something about it. Such violence, of a leftist character, produces, in turn, the reaction of violence on the right. The presence of British troops now justified on grounds of internal security is another complicating element. Under the circumstances, it is not hard, and might even be attractive, for outside interests to fish in the troubled waters.

Greece, despite its desperate situation, is still trying to operate with a completely free enterprise economy. The Periclean tradition of law and human rights remains vigorous and alive. Certainly a country like that is not of a mind for communism.

The internal situation in Greece is made critical by an elementary food problem. Post-UNRRA Greece faces an annual wheat shortage of 375,000 tons at a minimum. The aid needed by Greece for elementary relief on a maintenance-of-life basis, was estimated to me at $15,000,000 per month for a year. The people of Greece hope for aid from the people of the United States. The confidence that it will be forthcoming sustains them in all their struggles. They hope, too, that a political settlement will not be sought through this aid, nor any Greek government be propped up by it.

The Greek internal economy demands drastic measures; for example, Greece with 7,000,000 poverty-stricken people, is carrying an army and civil service of 250,000—shades of Washington, D. C.—with an additional 250,000 refugees living in and around Athens dependent on the Government.

The most careful husbandry of foreign exchange and gold to provide the basic necessities of life is absolutely urgent for Greece, as are control of inflation and an equitable tax structure. It is important to remember that Greece does not have now the productive facilities to get going and deal with inflation by added production—and that these facilities have to be obtained first. Their problem in controlling inflation is much more like our own during the war period than like our own during the reconversion period.

Greece illustrates for us the basic principles which need to be observed in making a grant for urgent necessities of life to a country in need. First, such a grant should be from the people of the United States to the Greek people and should not be a diplomatic pawn. Second, it should be a grant for Greece, and should not be extended out of a fund for grants appropriated in a blanket way to the Executive. Third, it should require Greece to do as much as possible to help herself. We should, therefore, have a United States mission in Greece to supervise the use of our grant, with power to suspend or terminate payments if she is not doing enough to help herself.

In addition to its problem of basic food, Greece also has the problem of reconstruction, needing not only money but technical aid. When Greek resistance organizations were being urged by Allied radio broadcasts to sabotage the Nazis, they were promised restoration and reconstruction by the Allied Powers of all that was destroyed, even better than it had been before. Greece remembers that promise.

Greece received no lease-lend aid from us though she was so great a factor in the defeat of the Axis. She has had $25,000,000 from the Export-Import Bank to rehabilitate her roads and harbors, and $45,000,000 to buy our Army surplus. For the 10 years before 1939, the Greek economy just about broke even and that is an important factor in calculating her credit standing. Greece seems an ideal place for a reconstruction loan by the new International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, with supervision for the expenditure of the money.

CONCLUSION

Much has been said about our world responsibility. I conceive it as our desire neither to isolate others nor to be isolated ourselves. We must share—but with wisdom and prudence and the design to cooperate, not to squander.

I have tried in both the cases of Palestine and Greece to cover the facts and my direct impressions, and it is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Members will find these facts and impressions useful to them as the House deals with these problems or problems of similar pattern.

LABOR LEGISLATION WHICH WILL CONFRONT THE EIGHTIETH CONGRESS

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the Nation is looking to Capitol Hill to terminate labor strife. Everyone is interested in reestablishing labor-management peace and getting the Nation safely back on the reconversion road. Americans want no protracted interruption in our reconversion program. Their happiness and well-being are at stake. America wants full production and full employment.

American labor must produce the products, goods, and services in order to get full production which will give all citizens a reduction in prices. We must maintain a high national income in order to balance the Budget and pay off a portion of the national debt.

It is generally agreed that trade unions and corporations are here to stay. However, the American people want both restricted so that neither can place itself above the Government that represents all the people. No man or any unit of men are bigger than the Government. No segment of the population in position to control a vital industry should be permitted indefinitely to threaten the entire public economy and the public welfare.

Both industry and labor have responsibilities. Industry must win the confidence of its working organization. Every industry must improve their plan that provides a proper contact between management and the workers. Management must find a way to assure the workers of a just share of the wealth they help create without subjecting the country to domestic wars that can destroy all wealth. Management must be able to distinguish between American labor leaders and subversive labor leaders. Workers also have responsibilities. Too many workers consider a union as merely a grievance committee to secure all the wages it can squeeze out of the employer. Of course, workers will continue to strive for better pay and working conditions. Labor unions can be expected to take every possible step to hold members by getting them more benefits within the framework of the labor laws. A union must be a constructive organization designed to promote the mutual best interests of the employer and employees. They must adopt a policy to help management improve production and reduce costs. Union leadership, if worthy of its power, must accept responsibility for national well-being and national security.

As a member of the House Labor Committee for the past 8 years I believe it is the duty of Congress to set up guide posts and do everything possible to create better relations between management and labor. We must seize the great opportunity of the hour to bring about labor peace so devoutly desired by management, labor, and the public. Most of the labor bills that have been presented to the Eightieth Congress would practically destroy the labor movement or set it back to the "horse and buggy" days. Hurriedly drafted legislation to meet a particular crisis, and treating symptoms rather than causes has failed miserably. Congress has a responsibility to enact labor legislation that will be constructive and give first consideration to the welfare of the Nation. Care must be taken in shaping labor legislation, because you cannot make a man work under our republican form of government. It must be constitutional.

The right of labor to organize and bargain collectively with employers is one of the cornerstones of competitive enterprise. The process of such bargaining must be protected and strengthened if we are to have real jobs and prosperity for all. Almost everyone agrees in collective bargaining. However, it is a two-way street and both management and labor should be required to bargain collectively.

The most important labor problems which face the Eightieth Congress are: Industry-wide strikes which affect the public health and safety of our citizens, breach of contracts arrived at by collective bargaining, and strikes involving issues not relating to wages, hours and normal working conditions.

Many suggestions have been made and some bills have been introduced to prevent strikes in industries which affect the public health and safety of our citizens. These strikes include those against the Government, strikes in public utilities, coal, fuel, and steel. Some suggest we handle these strikes through compulsory arbitration by a selected arbitration board or a constitutional court. Some want to use the power of injunction, while others would use an act similar to the Railway Labor Act. Still others want to repeal our labor laws.

INDUSTRY-WIDE LABOR DISPUTES ACT OF 1947

My proposal relates to labor disputes affecting commerce and the national health, or safety; providing for the taking of possession of plants, mines, or facilities by the United States in certain cases.

The bill provides:

First. A new airtight definition of interstate commerce for the purposes of labor legislation.

Second. It establishes a board of arbitration and procedure.

Third. It provides penalties for strikes and lock-outs conducted with disregard for public interest.

(a) These penalties provide for temporary Government seizure which does not deny the right to strike nor does it destroy property rights in event of seizures.

(b) It provides penalties for failure to accept arbitration which in the case of employees loss of the Wagner Act protection and in the case of employer loss of operating profits.

My proposal is one which seeks to make arbitration more desirable than a strike by both employees and employers, and recognizes for the first time the preservation of peace, dignity, health, safety of the Nation when affected by interstate commerce as a function of the Presidency.

After collective bargaining fails in industries affecting commerce and the national health or safety, the representatives of the parties to the dispute shall, within 5 days, select an arbitration board. Representatives of the employers shall select two persons and the representatives of the employees shall select two persons to serve on the board from their respective organizations. The chairman of the board shall be selected by the representatives of the parties to the dispute from the five Federal arbitrators appointed by the President.

Before plant seizure the President and the Secretary of Labor or the President and the Governor of any affected State must proclaim that such labor dispute threatens to cause a substantial interruption of commerce and that such interruption of commerce will adversely affect the national health and safety of the citizens of the United States.

If the decision of the arbitration board is turned down by the labor representative it shall be submitted to the employees for a vote. If the employees or employers turn down the decision of the arbitration board the Government seizes the plant, provided there is a strike or lockout.

The purpose of the airtight definition of commerce in this bill is to express clearly what I believe was the original intent of the Congress with respect to labor legislation, rather than the broad effect, created by various Supreme Court decisions.

This new definition provides a screening process by which only important disputes may reach the arbiters.

The term "commerce" shall apply only to those businesses, industries, utilities, and activities conducted for private gain, whose productive effort, as distinguished from sales effort or purchases, lies within the jurisdiction of the police power of two or more States, or of the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or Territory, or of any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and those businesses, industries, utilities, and activities conducted for private gain, whose operations were or would have been, prior hereto, subject to Federal license, or to the regulation of the Federal Power Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

WAGNER ACT AMENDMENTS

There has been some talk of repealing the Wagner Act. However, most Members of Congress want to amend this act in order to get a better balance between labor and management.

Under the Wagner Act, in the past 10 years, the National Labor Relations Board has ordered the reinstatement of 300,000 who have been separated from their jobs and has ordered back pay of $9,000,000 to 30,000 workers. Six million employees have gone to the polls in 24,000 elections. Thirty-six thousand complaints of unfair labor practices have been filed of which 92 percent have been settled informally and over 600 decisions of the Board have been reviewed by the courts. Seventy-seven thousand two hundred and fifty cases have been filed, 74,000 cases closed, which leaves 3,250 cases pending. The NLRB has ordered the disestablishment of more than 2,000 inside unions found tainted with the influence of management.

Some of the changes that I have proposed in the Wagner Act are: deny workers the protection of the Wagner Act when they break a contract arrived at by collective bargaining, deny workers the protection of the Wagner Act when out on strike involving issues not relating to wages, hours, and normal working conditions; give employers the right of free speech, allow employers the right to petition the NLRB for an election when the majority representation is in doubt or where a union claims bargaining rights and threatens to strike and make collective bargaining a two-way street.

Much thought has been given to the question of legislation which would have as its aim the prevention of wildcat strikes or breaking a contract arrived at by collective bargaining. An employer is suable for a breach of contract. Unions should be liable, too, for violations of contracts if collective bargaining and the right to strike mean anything. There is a divided opinion in Congress as to the penalty which should be placed on unions for a breach of contract. Some propose that labor organizations be brought into courts and sued for breach of contract. Under such a proposal, labor objects because you penalize the funds of the entire union. Under my proposal, workers out on wildcat strikes lose their rights of collective bargaining under the Wagner Act, provided that such loss of status for such employee shall cease if and when he is reemployed by such employer.

Jurisdictional strikes should be punished by law because innocent employers should not be penalized because unions force a strike to settle difficulties between unions. The purpose of outlawing sympathy strikes or strikes to enforce secondary boycotts is to prevent interference in the industrial relations of factories which have no dispute with their own employees.

Many labor strikes and most of the rank and file of workers are opposed to wildcat strikes and jurisdictional disputes. They realize the labor movement is being criticized by the public for such tactics.

In order to give an employer a right to talk to his employees, the Wagner Act will have to be amended to define a statement of management's right of free speech. Under the present law, the NLRB has ruled that an employer cannot call workers together during working hours to give them their opinions on unionism.

Now, the NLRB permits an employer to petition for elections only when two unions are competing for a contract in his factory. Employers will be granted the right to petition the NLRB for bargaining elections when the majority representation is in doubt or where a union claims bargaining rights and threatens to strike.

The Wagner Act should be amended to make collective bargaining a two-way street.

Legislation is not the complete answer to our problems in labor relations. Much will depend upon the administration of labor laws. We need the right kind of machinery to settle labor disputes because both unions and industries have grown so big that a single strike can paralyze the Nation. The rank and file of labor believe agreements can be made without so many work stoppages. In case collective bargaining fails, the rank and file of labor favor arbitration if the arbitrators are chosen by labor and management.

I do contend that if my proposals are adopted we shall see a great reduction in the number of strikes and still preserve our rights under the Constitution.

OUR WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION NEEDS A THOROUGH INVESTIGATION

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, there have been repeated alterations in the operation of the Nation's War Assets Administration, but there has been no change. The more the faces have shifted, the more the whole business remains the same.

As of this date, there are literally thousands of items under the jurisdiction of WAA about which no official is ready to speak. Many of these are untagged, undescribed, and uncataloged. In fact, there is strong suspicion in some quarters that much of the material supposedly available for sale by War Assets is even unknown.

It is stored in warehouses scattered throughout the country, and when prospective purchasers find merchandise they want, they are all too often confronted with the absolute impossibility of finding out the terms of sale. When they do find out, there are so many discouragements attached to the application, the waiting period, and the processing of red tape that they give up in disgust.

If there was ever any excuse for these conditions, they have long ceased to exist. Hostilities have been over for a year and 5 months, and we have had enough time to organize our surplus properties and to dispose of them as well, if we had gone about it in a businesslike way.

There are too many people in the War Assets Administration who are not being properly employed. They could very well be used to get the merchandise out into the daylight where it could be seen, appraised, priced, and sold.

I am asking Congress for an immediate investigation of the entire War Assets Administration.

PALESTINE—JUSTICE—ENGLAND

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I note with considerable amazement that the British Government has recently filed a protest with the Government of the United States, in which complaint is made of certain voluntary organizations in this country which are collecting funds in the interest of the people of Palestine and the Hebrew people in Europe who want to go there.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that the British Government regards it as objectionable that American citizens are concerned with the plight of those who regard Palestine as their country and their home. It appears that the British Government complains particularly because certain groups of American citizens are sympathetic with those people in Palestine who are willing to risk their lives to save their countrymen in Europe seeking to escape what I regret to describe, Mr. Speaker, as continuing antisemitism in Europe. In this connection, the British call particular attention to certain advertisements which have appeared in American newspapers.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I, as an American citizen, find nothing whatever in these advertisements which would not have been expected as a natural and normal reaction from the American public. The advertisement merely points out in forceful language certain things which have happened recently with respect to Palestine and its citizens. In fact, Mr. Speaker, at this time I wish to add a few facts to those contained in this advertisement.

It has been now approximately a year and a half since the President of the United States, in response to overwhelming public opinion, requested the admission of 100,000 displaced European Hebrews to Palestine. After prolonged conversation, the British Government proposed the appointment of a joint committee to study the question.

What was the committee to investigate? The committee, Mr. Speaker, was to rediscover facts about the Palestine issue long since known both to the British and American Governments. It was to go to Europe to find out whether any Hebrews there wanted to go to Palestine. It was to go to Palestine to find out whether the Jews there wanted the European Hebrews to come. It was also to investigate whether Palestine could absorb any substantial number of such persons. Of course, all these things had been repeatedly investigated by competent authorities both official and unofficial. Nevertheless, the result of the British proposal was the appointment of the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry. After an extended and thorough investigation of 4 months, this joint committee unanimously affirmed President Truman's request and recommended the admission of 100,000 to Palestine at the earliest possible moment. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the committee anticipated their admission, or the admission of most of them, in 1946.

What did the British Government then do? I, for one, was astounded when that Government proposed the appointment of another committee to consider the recommendations of the first committee. Our long-suffering President, over the vigorous protests of large segments of the American public, finally agreed and appointed the so-called Cabinet Committee. After weeks of further consultation, this committee returned with a three-way partition proposal by the British which was acceptable to nobody. In the meantime, the 100,000 were languishing in European detention camps. The President, at this point, felt justified in publicly renewing his request for their admission to Palestine, but by this time, Mr. Speaker, the British Government had thought of another reason for delay. This time they called a conference in London for the Arabs and the Jews and themselves. Before any progress could be made, however, the conference was interrupted by the meeting of the United Nations in New York. The conference, accordingly, was recessed.

Now, quite naturally, a question of such widespread importance to so many peoples and nations was one appropriate for the agenda of the United Nations. This, of course, according to the British view, could not take place because, as you will understand, Mr. Speaker, the British were in the middle of the London Conference which was to be resumed after the meeting of the United Nations. And so it turned out, Mr. Speaker, that the Jews of Europe were unable even to get on the agenda—much less get to Palestine. The last of this month, therefore, the next installment of this tragic story is to be resumed.

I will admit that the procedure adopted by the British Government has had certain results. The problem becomes, in a sense, less pressing. If we have 18 months more of committees and conferences, the whole thing will be still less pressing for the reason that great numbers of these potential immigrants to Palestine will have no further interest in going there. Many of them are already dead and another winter will cause the deaths of thousands more.

At the same time it is entirely understandable that friends and relatives in Palestine should take matters into their own hands, and it is equally understandable that Americans should sympathize not only with the Hebrews in Europe but with their tragedy in Palestine.

I seem to recall a statement by the British Foreign Minister that he would stake his political future on solving the problem of Palestine. To date he has succeeded only in discourtesy to the President of the United States, irritation to the American people and the solidification of a determined resistance movement in Palestine. In these circumstances it is little wonder that the advertisements of which the British Government so bitterly complain appear in American newspapers.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, he that cometh unto Thee Thou wilt in no wise cast out. Out of the depths of our needs, out of the depths of our hopes, and out of the depths of our failures, we come to the mercy seat of prayer. Impress us that he who conforms to Thy holy laws deserves the blessing of Thy grace.

As the goal of Congress is the goal of all the people, we pray that we may come through these times not satisfied nor resting, but laboring and seeking the wise paths toward the frontiers of national security. Through faith, freedom will be won, and righteousness and judgment will be established. O Divine Spirit, flood all hearts, dispel all fret and anxious care, for we know that the best victory of human experience is won within the human breast. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OFFICE OF SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a check which was drawn on the Sergeant at Arms on December 27. It was to pay taxes on my farm property in one of my early home towns. It has been returned to me with this notation on it, "Closed for audit." It was not honored, of course. The tax collector draws the conclusion, however, from it, I assume, that my own personal account is being audited. I do not know as I care to have that type of propaganda spread around through my district. My account is good and always has been good down here, but, of course, I cannot draw on it. So I have sent another check.

But there is another point to this. I would like to take a deduction for the amount of this check for taxes on my 1946 income, but I can only take a deduction for a sum paid in taxes for the year in which it is paid. Of course, I only sent the second check out yesterday, so now I lose this deduction. I think we should take some action about it and also see if we cannot insist that matters be expedited so far as this audit is concerned.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I understand there is some hesitancy about reopening the bank for fear of starting a run.

Mr. REED of New York. If there is a run on it, I shall join it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. MASON) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a magazine article on rent control.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in three particulars: first, to include an address delivered by that distinguished New Yorker, James A. Farley, on the opening of the Salvation Army drive; second, to include a summary of the Federal Tort Claims Act; and third, to include a biography and the citation awarded the distinguished New Yorker and great industrialist, Sidney J. Weinberg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, of course, we all recognize the great inconvenience that has been caused the Members of the House by the necessary closing of the Sergeant at Arms office. It is not the fault of anyone here. No one now here in the House is to be charged with any blame for the situation that gave rise to the necessity for the action that was taken. I should like everyone to know that everything possible to be done has been done to expedite the coming of the day when an arrangement can be made by which our necessities can again be taken care of. There is another meeting this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the office of the Speaker. I am quite sure it is the hope of the Speaker and the Sergeant at Arms and all of us that very shortly the matter can be taken care of.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not want the Members who are interested to appear at that meeting, does he?

Mr. HALLECK. I had not thought we would make it quite an open meeting.

COMMUNISM MAKES NO REAL PROGRESS IN INDIA

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, John Foster Dulles, our distinguished representative at the United Nations Assembly, the other night made a statement in part as follows:

> In India Soviet communism exercises a strong influence through the interim Hindu government.

I think Mr. Dulles is quite in error. I say from my investigation that India is one of the Asiatic countries where communism happily has made very little inroad. I would say there are no more Communists in India than there are in our own country. The Indian culture, tradition, and religion repel rather than attract communism, and I am very happy to say that. Pandit Nehru said that the reported remarks of Mr. Dulles showed "a lack of knowledge of the facts." His very delightful sister, Mrs. Pandit, said that Mr. Dulles, unfortunately, was woefully in error when he said that communism had made any progress in India. I am happy to say that it has not made any appreciable progress.

Pandit Nehru also remarked, countering Mr. Dulles, that "our policy is to cultivate friendly and cooperative relations with all countries, notably the United States, and not to aline ourselves with any particular power group."

Pandit Nehru's sister, Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, who led the Indian delegation to the General Assembly, said that Mr. Dulles might have thought that because India and the Soviet Union collaborated on racial issues before the United Nations, the Government of India was acting under Communist influence. This, she said, would be a misapprehension.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALMOND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial on the life and character of Gen. Robert E. Lee.

Mr. HARTLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in connection with a bill introduced by him and include an editorial from today's Washington Post.

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "American Business Opportunity" by Oscar Vogel, and include a short comment by the editor.

TRANSFER SCHOOLHOUSES BUILT WITH LANHAM ACT FUNDS TO DISTRICTS WHERE LOCATED

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill, H. R. 668, which will be of great interest to many Members of the House representing widely separated districts. It is not a bill that is designed to save the Nation or one to bring us permanent peace, the kind of bills that are left for the great statesmen of the House. My bill will bring justice and considerable help to a great many small communities and school districts.

Briefly, this bill provides that buildings, equipment, and lands built or acquired with Lanham Act funds for educational or recreational purposes shall be transferred by the Government to the school districts where located, providing the districts agree to use these buildings or the equipment for the purposes for which they were built or acquired.

As you know, these buildings and facilities were required by virtue of the war effort. In fact and in common sense they are a war cost. They were required to teach and train the children of the great army of war workers, servicemen, and others who left their homes and migrated to California and elsewhere to work and serve in the war effort. There is no more reason why the cost of these buildings should not be written off as a war cost than the cost of numerous other things which were required for the war, such as ships, munitions, and so forth, which have been written off.

The Federal Works Agency is now holding these buildings and trying to sell them to school districts. In many cases these districts have neither the money nor the taxing power to buy these buildings or this equipment. The buildings are rapidly deteriorating, and it seems to me to be common sense and a progressive move to turn them back to the districts where they are located, so they may be used in solving the educational problems facing these various localities where many of the migrants have remained.

In the last Congress I introduced such a bill and the FWA objected to it. Within a few days after the bill had been dropped in the hopper one of their men from the San Francisco district office came back here for a conference. He told me they were not overcharging these districts, that they were trying to get from these districts what they were able to pay. In other words they were taking whatever the traffic would bear, but if the traffic could not bear any outlay, they were holding the buildings and administrative costs were gradually eating up any value which the Government might salvage.

An educator in another State than California, who is interested in the principle of my bill and who firmly believes that justice requires us to turn the buildings back to the poor school districts where they are located, made a survey of the matter, and he got some interesting revelations, which I am placing into this statement. One was that only 15 percent of the 113 school systems which answered the questionnaire had been approached about buying the buildings, 90 percent said they could not buy the buildings even though they had to give them up.

Here are the results of a survey by an educator:

First. I received answers from 113 school systems which have one or more of these buildings.

Second. None of the 113 systems had bought any of the Federal buildings.

Third. Only 15 percent had been approached about buying these buildings.

Fourth. Ninety percent said they could not possibly buy the buildings even if they had to give them up.

Fifth. Ninety percent were anxious to take steps to try to persuade Congress to give the buildings to the schools.

Sixth. About 20 percent said that a Government which could afford billions for Yugoslavia, Russia, et al., could afford to give the American school children a few buildings.

Seventh. Five percent said that the taxpayers had paid for these buildings once, so why make taxpayers pay for them again?

Eighth. Four percent said the Federal Government was taking out of their States so much of the tax money that they could not possibly get any more tax money with which to buy the buildings.

Ninth. One superintendent said:

> It is enough to astonish the civilized world to know that the richest Nation in the history of the world is even considering squeezing from the local school systems the pitifully inadequate amount of money they now have to educate America's own children while millions are rushed to every other nation which can drum up the flimsiest excuse.

THE LATE HONORABLE ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday there passed away at his home in Minnesota a former colleague who served in this body with unusual distinction from 1903 to 1923. I refer to the Honorable A. J. Volstead, the author of the Volstead Act and also of the farmers' cooperative law. Mr. Volstead, as the older Members will recall, was a man of splendid ability. He was the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary during the later years of his service here. I know that all of you who served in this body with him learned of his passing with keen regret. He was a man of strong convictions and a hard worker, conscientious, and in all respects an admirable American.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield briefly to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. As one of the Members who served with Mr. Volstead, I was extremely sorry this morning to read of his passing. We were, of course, members of opposite parties. But I can truthfully say I never knew a man who labored harder for the moral upbuilding of America than Andrew J. Volstead.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad to have the gentleman's observation because it is true.

Mr. Speaker, in the passing of Andrew J. Volstead we have lost a great American. Regardless of how the American people may have felt about the Volstead Act, no one can ever say that Andrew J. Volstead ever was inspired by any but the highest motives and the desire to promote the general welfare of the people of this great country, of which he was so illustrious a son.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], who served in the House from 1917 to 1922 with the late Congressman Volstead, has paid Mr. Volstead a wonderful tribute, with which I heartily concur.

I should like to add at this time my personal tribute to Mr. Volstead for the great service which he has performed for agriculture as one of the authors of the famous Capper-Volstead Act. Under that act agricultural producers received the right to act together in associations, collectively advancing their cause in handling and marketing agricultural products. As a result of the Capper-Volstead Act, the vast farm cooperative structure in America has been much encouraged and strengthened.

The late Andrew Volstead will go down in history as one of the benefactors of agriculture, and the farmers of the Seventh Congressional District of Minnesota, and of the Nation, have lost one of the best friends they have ever had in Congress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances—in one to include a resolution recently adopted by the State Senate of California, and in the other a statement of the veteran population of California.

EXTENDING THE TIME TO PERMIT SUGAR OR SIRUPS TO BE MANUFACTURED SIMULTANEOUSLY WITH THE PRODUCTION OF ALCOHOL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 57, extending for 7 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make a brief explanation of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today extends for a period of 15 months a temporary arrangement that has already been approved by the Congress on two prior occasions. For many years our revenue laws have provided that a plant manufacturing alcohol could not produce any other product during the same period. The purpose of that was to facilitate the collection of Federal taxes on alcohol. We have found, however, that the industrial alcohol plants built during the war can be used to make a sirup with a high sugar content. Those plants have been doing it for the last 2 or 3 years. They use wet grains, soft potatoes, and many other surplus crops. These products are made into a sirup. The sirup, in turn, is used by manufacturers in place of sugar, thereby releasing more sugar for household use.

On two prior occasions we passed a resolution permitting those plants to make sirup during the same period that they make alcohol. When we adopt the committee amendment this resolution will extend the time for 15 months. It is the sincere hope of the committee that, before the 15 months have passed, permanent legislation can be presented to the House to take care of this situation so that you will not be called upon to act upon it so often.

I might say that with the present-day tax-collecting facilities of the Treasury, there is no need for this old provision prohibiting these alcohol plants from making other products.

The Treasury Department has no objection to this measure. The Secretary of Agriculture not only approves it but the Department of Agriculture finds it highly desirable and wants the legislation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. A continuance of the manufacture of sirups at these industrial alcohol plants will also help very materially in relieving the sugar shortage all over the country?

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. And it gives us a market for soft corn, which is very important out in the Mississippi Valley?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; and in many instances it relieves the Commodity Credit Corporation of a loss on those products.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. As I understand it, this resolution comes from the Ways and Means Committee with a unanimous report?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, will not my colleague agree that while the Treasury Department had no objection to this extension it has reserved its right as to what it will say if we want to make it permanent legislation?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3126 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to emergency production of sugars and sirups in industrial-alcohol plants) is amended by striking out "February 1, 1947," and inserting in lieu thereof "April 30, 1948,".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution extending for 15 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EMPLOYEES OF SENATORS AND SENATE STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 3, relating to employees of Senators and Senate standing committees.

The Clerk read the title of the Joint resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of the bill? I should like to have it read; I should like to know what is in it. I am not taking everything for granted that is said these days without investigating it.

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is merely a housekeeping bill presented originally as an amendment to the First Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1947, relative to certain Senate employees.

Mr. TABER. It was originally presented for the purpose of straightening out some situation that resulted from the reorganization of committees in the Senate, and for the repeal of a provision which was placed in an appropriation bill last August for the benefit of certain of those employees.

Mr. CANNON. It terminates, as of January 31, the employment of certain employees who otherwise would remain on the rolls without duties until the close of March.

Mr. TABER. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. In the form in which the bill stands at present, with proposed House amendments, it makes immediately available in lump sum funds which have been previously appropriated for purposes authorized by law, such funds to be expended in accordance with the Reorganization Act and until such time as further provisions shall be made.

Mr. TABER. That is correct; and it takes care of the housekeeping situation with reference to employees of the House of Representatives. There are also a large number of items that require action: For instance, in certain instances even though a man should die or resign he could not be taken off the rolls. That situation is corrected.

All of these amendments with reference to the Senate end of the picture have been approved by the Senate committee.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, having witnessed the fiasco at the other end of the Capitol, I am not disposed to let this go through until and unless we know what it is, certainly not until the Clerk reads the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Should we offer the amendments as the bill is read by the Clerk or should that be done later?

The SPEAKER. That should be done after consent for the consideration of the bill has been given.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 202 (h) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946—

(1) the positions and funds allocated on January 1, 1947, to the chairman of any standing committee of the Senate existing on such date shall be continued through January 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by such chairman; except that in the case of any such chairman who has died or was not reelected, committee employees shall be continued on the pay rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate, and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe;

(2) clerks and other employees of any Senator who was a member of the Senate on January 1, 1947, but who was not a chairman of any standing committee existing on January 1, 1947, and who was not reelected, shall be continued on the rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate; and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe; and

(3) the appropriations for the compensation of employees of Senators and of committee employees of standing committees of the Senate contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be available for the compensation of employees specified in paragraphs (1) and (2).

(b) The proviso under the caption "Senate" in the First Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1947, approved August 8, 1946, is hereby repealed, effective as of August 8, 1946.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, after the word "employees", insert "(except in the case of death or resignation of any such employee)."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "employees", insert "(except in the case of death or resignation of any such employee)."

Page 2, line 12, strike out "January 31, 1947" and insert "the date of enactment of this act."

Page 2, line 22, strike out "(2)" and insert "(2) and of the elected officers of the Senate;

"(4) employees of any standing committee of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress which is abolished by operation of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (except in the case of the death or resignation of any such employee) shall continue on the rolls through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

"(5) employees of any standing committee of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress which is not abolished by operation of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (except in the case of the death or resignation of any such employee) shall continue on the rolls until January 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by action of such committee; and

"(6) the appropriations for 'Salaries, officers and employees, House of Representatives,' as contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be available in such amounts and under such regulations as may be approved by the Committee on House Administration for compensation of employees of the standing committees of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress, except the Committee on Appropriations, and shall be available for the compensation of officers and employees of the House of Representatives as authorized by section 201 and section 244 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution relating to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to interrogate the gentleman from New York. In the rush to pass the so-called reorganization bill a great many blunders were made, one of which was to foist onto the Congress a bunch of alleged advisers at salaries of $10,000 a year each.

I am wondering why there was not a provision inserted here eliminating those people, since the Members of Congress now realize a mistake was made.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, there are some very intricate set-ups in this reorganization bill, and I would hardly think the Appropriations Committee should attempt to provide for general amendments to that bill. Legislation of that character should go to the legislative committee rather than to the Appropriations Committee.

It has been generally understood that we would try to keep out of legislation just as far as it is possible to do so. That is why we would not want to undertake the job of repealing some of these things. What we ought to provide in the nature of appropriations can be determined when that question comes before the Deficiency Committee and when it comes before the Legislative Appropriations Subcommittee. I do not think we should undertake the other job.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from New York. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my distinguished colleague from New York, and through him the Republican majority leaders, what is the plan with reference to the appointment of the so-called four legislative assistants for each of the standing committees. Is the majority determined to appoint all four despite the fact that the Reorganization Act says specifically that one or more shall be assigned to the minority? If it is the purpose and plan of the majority to appoint all the executive assistants, we might have the very anomalous situation arising where a very highly conservative Republican assistant might be appointed and assigned to the minority. Can the distinguished gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Indiana tell us something about that situation?

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, the gentleman from New York is familiar with the language contained in the Reorganization Act with respect to the four professional advisers to the various committees. I have read the language many times myself. As I read it it seems to say that the matter of assignment to majority and minority Members is for the discretion of the committees. As of this time I know of no hard and fast rule that has been made or sought to be made by the leadership as such. The gentleman from New York knows as well as I do that there are many committees serving in the House that are not political in their operations. I think that might be said, for instance, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I know I served on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I do not recall any time when there was a division on strictly political lines. All I can say to the gentleman is that so far as I know, at least up to this point, while there has been some question about the meaning of that language, it is now considered to be for the determination of each particular committee. Of course, I cannot undertake to say what might later be determined.

Mr. CELLER. Of course, I agree with the gentleman, it ought to be that way, but the majority party, of course, has the majority on the committee, and if they, the majority, deem it shall be political, the majority members will follow suit, and then we will have a political situation arising. I happen to be on the Committee on the Judiciary, and we have never allowed politics to enter into our deliberations, and I hope that will not be possible after these men may be appointed.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know for what the gentleman contends. I do not know whether he believes that one or two of the four should be assigned to the minority.

Mr. CELLER. I think so.

Mr. HALLECK. Or one, two, or three to the majority. As far as I am concerned, it seems to me that if a committee had been run on a nonpartisan basis, then certainly it would not be very helpful to inject politics by reason of the assignment of these so-called committee advisers. Speaking only for myself, all I can say to the gentleman is—and certainly his committee has operated with full understanding of the premises, and apparently his chairman is here and I am not undertaking to speak for him—it is my understanding that under the language of the Reorganization Act the matter is for the determination of the committee. Incidentally, I might say, the inquiry of the gentleman from New York is proper, although I doubt whether it is particularly relevant at this time.

Mr. CELLER. It may not be germane. We would like to get some enlightenment from the majority, and therefore I press the question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman seen anything to make him suspicious that there was any skulduggery going on?

Mr. CELLER. No; I said nothing about skulduggery. I hope that the majority will at least give one of those appointments to the minority; one out of the four.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Inasmuch as the gentleman brought this matter up, coming from the Committee on the Judiciary, of which I happen to be a member, let me refresh the gentleman's memory by saying that he asked me this question and read the law to me, but he forgot to read the extension of the law which says that this matter, in substance, is in the discretion of the committee.

Mr. CELLER. I am aware of that, of course.

Mr. MICHENER. I gave the gentleman the same opinion exactly that the majority leader gave him, excepting the gentleman was primarily interested in knowing whether or not, if any staff member was assigned to the minority, that member would be assigned to the minority as such or to the ranking member of the minority. I assure the gentleman the Committee on the Judiciary will do as it always does, leave out the politics and act judicially.

Mr. CELLER. That is perfectly agreeable, with politics left out.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, the Speaker has just stated that this is an important piece of legislation. It deals with the Reorganization Act that Congress passed at the tail end of the last session. I think anything that deals with that act is important. I wonder if the gentleman from New York will withdraw his unanimous-consent request and give the Members of the House a little time to study this measure so that we may have some idea of what it contains. I wonder if the gentleman from New York will not withdraw his unanimous-consent request.

Mr. TABER. I think my request has been granted. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. TABER. There are some things in here that should go right along. There are some things here that have to go along pretty fast. There are some repeals of legislation that were unfortunately passed that should become effective at once. Therefore I feel that we ought to go into it right away and clean it up. I shall be glad to explain the effect of every single item involved here if the gentleman would like it. I do not think it is so involved that there would be any difficulty in every Member of the House understanding fully just what there is about it. If the gentleman would like me to do so, I will start on an explanation of each paragraph.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

JOINT SESSIONS OF SENATE AND HOUSE COMMITTEES ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I notice in a front-page news story of the Washington Post this morning that the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services have agreed to have joint sessions to consider testimony on America's world commitments and armed strength, also that Senator GURNEY, chairman of the Senate committee, and the gentleman from New York, Representative ANDREWS, chairman of the House committee, have agreed on a plan to have department officials give members of the committee the most complete picture of international conditions and United States power that has yet been given. I think this is very fine. But the thing that disturbs me is that this matter, which is of the utmost importance not only to members of the Committee on Armed Services, but of great importance to the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and every Member of the House of Representatives, will be presented to only 32 Members of the House, those on the Armed Services Committee. Would it not be of great benefit to all the Members of the House if we could make arrangements to give 1 hour a week or 1 hour every other week to enable the Secretary of State, Mr. Marshall; the Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson; and Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Forrestal, who are going to be called before the Committee on Armed Services, to come here and appear on the House floor and make their reports so that all of us could hear and see what takes place and have an opportunity to participate in the discussion? The public, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, would get the benefit, and every Member of the House would be enlightened and currently informed on these most vital problems. These are matters that all of us ought to know about. We can do this by simply amending House rule XVIII through the adoption of House Resolution 17, which is now before the Congress. We should certainly give this method a trial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

PRIVATE CLAIMS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the Reorganization Act of 1946, certain claims against the Government of the United States are now triable and subject to determination in the courts. Prior to the enactment of the Reorganization Act, I presented several claims on behalf of certain claimants in the form of bills which were not acted upon by the Congress. In accordance with the terms of the Reorganization Act, these papers in support of the claims are now on file in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives. I am informed by the Clerk that the only way they can be released to the several claimants for use in the court proceedings which they contemplate instituting is by direction of the House of Representatives.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the papers filed in support of the claims of Willie B. Smith, Ray Glenn and his wife, Elfriede Glenn, and Charles Sweet, as covered by H. R. 6061, H. R. 6729, and H. R. 6987, respectively, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, may be released by the Clerk of the House of Representatives and returned to the claimants for use in the judicial proceedings which they intend to institute.

The SPEAKER. Have adverse reports been filed on any of these claims?

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the claims were not acted upon by the Seventy-ninth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on Claims made any report at all?

Mr. GEARHART. No, Mr. Speaker. The papers that were filed in support of the claims are necessary for use as evidence in the courts. Therefore, I think they should be released to these people so that they can pursue their claims in the courts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement and a short editorial by Mr. Hugh B. Wilcox.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EMPLOYEES OF SENATORS AND SENATE STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) relating to employees of Senators and Senate standing committees.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, from information given me by Members familiar with the contents of House Joint Resolution 3, I find it satisfactory and I, therefore, withdraw my objection to its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 202 (h) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946—

(1) the positions and funds allocated on January 1, 1947, to the chairman of any standing committee of the Senate existing on such date shall be continued through January 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by such chairman; except that in the case of any such chairman who has died or was not reelected, committee employees shall be continued on the pay rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate, and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe:

(2) clerks and other employees of any Senator who was a member of the Senate on January 1, 1947, but who was not a chairman of any standing committee existing on January 1, 1947, and who was not reelected, shall be continued on the rolls of the Senate through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Secretary of the Senate; and such employees shall perform such duties as the Secretary of the Senate shall prescribe; and

(3) the appropriations for the compensation of employees of Senators and of committee employees of standing committees of the Senate contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be available for the compensation of employees specified in paragraphs (1) and (2).

(b) The proviso under the caption "Senate" in the First Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1947, approved August 8, 1946, is hereby repealed, effective as of August 8, 1946.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, after "employees", insert "except in the case of death or resignation of any such employee."

Page 2, line 6, after "employees", insert "except in the case of death or resignation of any such employee."

Page 2, line 12, strike out "January 31, 1947" and insert the date of enactment of this act.

Line 22, strike out "(2)" and the period and insert "(2) and of the elected officers of the Senate;

"(4) employees of any standing committee of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which is abolished by operation of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (except in the case of the death or resignation of any such employee) shall continue on the rolls through January 31, 1947, unless sooner removed for cause by the Clerk of the House of Representatives;

"(5) employees of any standing committee of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-ninth Congress which is not abolished by operation of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (except in the case of the death or resignation of any such employee) shall continue on the rolls until January 31, 1947, unless otherwise directed by action of such committee; and

"(6) the appropriations for 'Salaries, officers, and employees, House of Representatives', as contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be available in such amounts and under such regulations as may be approved by the Committee on House Administration for compensation of employees of the standing committees of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress, except the Committee on Appropriations, and shall be available for the compensation of officers and employees of the House of Representatives as authorized by section 201 and section 244 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution relating to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

DIRECT QUESTIONING OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, as one who voted for the reorganization bill and as one who studied its provisions with the utmost care and interest, I wish to make plain that I hope, in event the policy is adopted of bringing Cabinet officers and other high officials of the Government before the House for questioning, we proceed with the policy of direct questions, without having to go through a board or panel to cushion our effect, and without having the questions depart from some of the serious issues that are before the country. I think that an honest, straightforward policy in dealing with these matters should be pursued.

In voting for the reorganization bill my position was made clear on that issue. I think it will be a constructive step in our Government if such a policy is followed. Congress will be in a position to do a better job. I hope that direct questioning on the part of any Member of this House will be permitted under the provisions of this bill, in the event we adopt the policy of calling some of the high officials of the Government before the House for questioning.

It would be much less embarrassing for an official of the State Department, for instance, to submit to questions from House Members and be given the chance to defend his position than to have to read in the papers of attacks Congressmen leveled at him without any opportunity to answer his attacker simultaneously.

By the same token, Members of Congress could justify the expectations of people they represent by obtaining direct statements from high policy-making officers of our Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HALE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from the Right Reverend George P. Johnson, of St. Joseph's rectory, Portland, Maine.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the New York Times.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I should work for Mr. Jones and after a time we should have a dispute as to how much he owed me, and he would not pay me and I brought suit against him, under the law as it is today Mr. Jones and I could get together and cut out the lawyers and agree upon a settlement. We could settle it and get out of court. But that is not the way it is under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Suits have been brought for compensation for overtime. Under that law we have some queer judicial decisions.

The United States circuit court of appeals had this to say about this provision—section 16 (b)—providing for overtime payment:

> Is this provision of the law as to liquidated damages mandatory or discretionary? Since the act has been violated in good faith in this case, we would indeed like to hold that it is discretionary. It seems a keen injustice for employers bewildered by strange legislation and confused by divergent authority in the courts to be subjected to such a measure. Yet no matter how much we lament its harshness, the section appears to be mandatory and virtually all the courts have so construed it. (St. John v. Brown (D. C. 38 F. Supp. 385); Williams v. General Mills (D. C. 39 F. Supp. 849); Muldowney v. Seaberg Elevator Co. (D. C. 39 F. Supp. 275); Thompson v. Daugherty (D. C. 40 F. Supp. 279); Emerson v. Mary Lincoln Candies, Inc. (Sup. Ct. 174 Misc. 353, 20 N. Y. S. (2d) 570); Reeves v. Howard County Refining Co. (D. C. 33 F. That decision of the circuit court of appeals—One Hundred Twenty-sixth Federal Statutes (2d), pages 98–110—was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court—Three Hundred Sixteenth United States Reports, pages 572–581.

Today, there is no way of settling these disputes outside of court calling for the payment of something over $5,000,000,000, without paying the full amount, or the amount which some court later may say was due.

Last Saturday, Mr. Lee Pressman, general counsel of the CIO—he has been general counsel since 1936—appeared before a committee of the other body and was asked about an amendment to the law which would permit settlement of these suits. He made a recommendation, and again I want to go along and offer something constructive. I hope it will be so considered by Mr. Pressman. Perhaps he will not think it is just what he wants. He made a suggestion that the law, section 16 (b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, be amended so as to provide that litigants could settle by collective bargaining these claims for compensation for overtime. He was asked by a Senator:

> Mr. Pressman, may we understand that you agree as to the reasonableness of a bill to be enacted into law which would permit the compromise of back wages of the portal-to-portal type of payments by collective bargaining?
> Mr. PRESSMAN. The answer is, "Yes"; as I said before, sir.
> Senator DONNELL. I thought it was, but I wanted to be clear.
> Mr. PRESSMAN. That is correct.

Note what Mr. Pressman advocates: Settlement of claims for back wages by collective bargaining. Mr. Pressman, according to his testimony, is interested in five suits for back pay—as an attorney he is interested. I think each one of these suits calls for more than a million dollars. Mr. Pressman is willing to have those settled by collective bargaining.

I have today offered an amendment to section 16 (b) that goes just one step further than Mr. Pressman. If these employees are entitled to that compensation, that money belongs to them as individual employees. So the amendment offered provides that when any employee brings a suit for back wages, overtime compensation, he may at any time—mark you, at any time—settle with his employer if they can agree upon a compromise. Is there anything wrong about that? If two of us have a dispute, is there any reason why we should not get together and settle? Is there any reason why the law should prevent parties settling their disputes without the final judgment of a court. Certainly Congress never intended to force parties into lawsuits when they had no desire to stand suit.

Mr. Pressman is not going to like that amendment because he could not continue his suits, he could not settle them, he would not have the exclusive right to settle them by collective bargaining; because the men who have worked, who have earned the money, under this amendment, could go to the boss and say: "Now, listen here, you owe me $10, but I will take $7.50." How about that—should not that be permitted? And when I say "$10" I mean $1,000,000; and when I say "$7.50" I mean $750,000.

Is not that a good amendment?

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. In a minute.

I hope the House Committee on Labor will consider this amendment next week and bring it to the House, and when it reaches the floor I hope the membership will pass it. Why? So that the men who are entitled to compensation for overtime, if they are so entitled, can get it without having a lawyer, or a collective-bargaining agent, or some union, sit back and say: "No; you cannot settle; the company has got to come across for the full amount or settle with me; pay what I, not you, ask—are willing to accept."

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean that he is just preventing the collective-bargaining agreement or that he is to bypass the lawyer without first discharging him in the regular way?

Mr. HOFFMAN. As Mr. Pressman testified—and at the present time there is a pile of testimony piled 8 or 10 inches high—of the testimony that has been taken before the subcommittee of the Senate—I have gone through that. Mr. Pressman testified that many of those suits are upon a contingent basis. Of course, if what the gentleman is getting at is that the lawyer ought to get his cut, perhaps so; but, after all, the man who is interested in the lawsuit ought to be the client, and all good lawyers, all honest lawyers, all lawyers who follow the ethics of the profession, let the client have the final word as to a settlement. The present trouble grows out of the fact that the attorneys and the collective-bargaining agents think they are the boys who are interested, who should say whether a suit should be brought—when and for what it should be settled. The worker is just like an ox in the yoke, he can do the work, he can earn the money, but the union is the one to determine what shall—what shall not be done.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is trying to probe Mr. Pressman's mind. He wants it settled by collective bargaining. Does he not know that the employee has the right if he cannot settle to call a strike and force the employer to settle?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am not quite so sure whether the employee has any longer a right to call a strike. That is the law, of course, that is the theory of it, rather. But the strikes in my district are called by someone who does not live there, by an international representative, by somebody living in Detroit, Pittsburgh, Chicago, or New York.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is probing Mr. Pressman's mind. What is back of his mind, however? By not going to the court he can force settlement, is that it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Sure. It is giving the union leader, the man who is interested in initiation fees and dues, and the lawyer the chance of a larger cut.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. SNYDER. Would not this House by the very act of passing such legislation recognize the validity of these claims?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, no. These suits have been filed. Such an amendment would give the interested parties an opportunity to agree upon an adjustment. All that Mr. Pressman wants to do is to give the authority to compromise those suits to a collective-bargaining representative of the union. What I want to do is to say to the man who has done the work, who is entitled to the money, that he can go in and avoid litigation which in some instances, if it is successful under the construction of the act by the Court, will ruin the industry, wipe out the jobs.

There is no question but that these suits grow not out of the law as passed by the Congress, but out of an interpretation of the law which was given by the Court, a New Deal court at that. It is about time that the Congress begin to insist that it write the laws, that the courts give them the meaning the Congress intended. When the Supreme Court changes our law, the law we write, and puts into effect something which it thinks we should have passed but did not, then we should write another law and set the Supreme Court right and tell that Court in no uncertain terms just what we did mean. We did not mean a man ought to be paid from the time he gets up in the morning until he goes to sleep at night. What we meant was that if a man did some work at the request of an employer for his benefit, he should be paid, but outside of that, nothing doing.

Why wait? Why not act now on this question of what is work, of what the word "workweek" means?

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, January 15, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways;
Reclothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives Thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise.

"Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of Thy peace."

Deliver us, O Lord, from the foolishness of impatience. Let us not be in such a hurry as to run on without Thee. We know that it takes a lifetime to make a tree; we know that fruit does not ripen in an afternoon, and Thou Thyself didst take a week to make the universe.

May we remember that it takes time to build the nation that can truly be called God's own country. It takes time to work out the kind of peace that will endure. It takes time to find out what we should do; what is right, and what is best.

Slow us down, O Lord, that we may take time to think, time to pray, and time to find out Thy will. Then give us the sense and the courage to do it, for the good of our country and the glory of Thy name. Amen.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

The Senate resumed consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 46) continuing the authority for the investigation of the national defense program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified, offered by the Senator from Maryland, to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. Under the unanimous-consent agreement all time from the convening of the Senate until 2 o'clock is divided under the control of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. To whom do the Senators yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether in the allocation of time any preference is given as between the two sides in regard to opening and closing the debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to respond to that inquiry. The Chair would think that would have to be arranged between the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Maine.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Maine, as we agreed, put on his first speaker, and he and I will confer further and see if we can work out a satisfactory unanimous-consent arrangement.

Mr. BREWSTER. I will ask for a quorum call at this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. If there is a quorum call it ought to come out of the time of the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Maryland will yield, if there is a quorum call it will be taken out of the time of both sides equally, but unless the Senator from Maryland is agreeable, the Chair would not think it fair to ask for a roll call.

Mr. BREWSTER. Then, Mr. President, we will waive the roll call, and I yield time to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How much time does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield 10 minutes to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has 10 minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the importance of this particular issue has been exaggerated, and that the time devoted to it has been out of all proportion to the significance of the question involved. So far as I can see there is no moral issue, there is no other fundamental issue in the question whether or not the Senate shall continue a very successful special committee for another year until its task is completed.

I even see no vital issue in the question whether we shall have or shall not have special committees. From time immemorial the Senate has had special committees; from time immemorial it has been recognized that certain jobs are better done by special committees. Committees of the kind which are involved in this particular issue have been frequent instruments of the Senate. There was a committee on the conduct of the war during the Civil War. There was a special committee on the conduct of the war in the First World War. There is a special committee now, and until this time no one has ever questioned the desirability of such a special committee.

There are many activities which can be better carried on by special committees than by standing committees. Certainly the Democrats who are opposing the resolution now pending have used special committees frequently during the past 12 years, often very effectively, and properly.

On the question of past investigations, chairmen of standing committees have often not been particularly interested or concerned with what has occurred in the past, but are concerned with future legislation and with working out a constructive program rather than in making extensive studies of the past, which might be of great value, but which might not relate to the immediate purposes of the committee or its chairman.

During the past 2 or 3 years there has been a special Committee on Atomic Energy. The Senate felt that the question of atomic energy justified the creation of a special committee with a special staff, to make a special investigation. The responsibility of making the investigation could have been turned over to the Armed Service Committee, with a special staff, but the Senate chose not to do that.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky himself proposed a special committee to investigate the Pearl Harbor disaster, and it was decided by the Senate, without the slightest doubt or question, that such an investigation should be made, so as to throw some light on past history, and give an example for the future, and that the investigation should be conducted by a special committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I am sorry; my time is limited.

There was the George postwar committee, to look into the question of postwar economic policy and planning, and the committee did valuable and effective work, cutting across the work of many other committees.

There was, above all, the Special Committee on the Organization of Congress, the La Follette-Monroney committee, originally the Maloney committee, created under a resolution submitted by the late Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Maloney, who was such a distinguished Member of this body. The La Follette-Monroney special joint committee did work which probably never would have been accomplished by a standing committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I prefer not to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. TAFT. So, Mr. President, there is no question that the special committee has been recognized frequently as a perfectly proper weapon for the Senate to employ. In the instant case we do not have to consider the broad issue; the question we are considering is whether we will continue a particular special committee, a distinguished committee, a committee which was created under the leadership of a then distinguished Senator from Missouri, now the President of the United States. The former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, assumed the chairmanship following the elevation of Mr. Truman to the Vice Presidency and then the Presidency, and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] succeeded Senator Mead. It is a committee which has made a record and has built up a staff for this particular work. It certainly is the most effective weapon which we could possibly have to investigate war contracts, which everyone agrees is a task which should be undertaken by an agency of the Senate of the United States. That is a much more limited question than might be involved in proposals to create new special committees. It seems to me we should reserve the right to create special committees, notwithstanding the fact that the power and privilege can be abused, and I think at times in the past it has been abused.

As I understand, the position of the minority now is that we should not permit the creation of special committees except under a suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote. In other words, the opponents of the resolution wish to deprive the majority party of a power over the procedure of the Senate which it has always exercised, and which it cannot exercise if a two-thirds vote is necessarily required to set up such an instrumentality for effective investigation. That was the provision of the La Follette-Monroney bill, which was wisely deleted by the House of Representatives. It has been said that I advocated and voted for the Reorganization Act. Of course I did. However, there were many things in the bill which I did not approve, as there always are in many bills. Obviously when Senators vote for a bill they do not necessarily approve every section in it. They always have the burden of balancing provisions that are good against those that are bad, of deciding if the bill contains more good things than bad. I felt then, and I feel now, that the La Follette-Monroney act as a whole has established a procedure which will contribute tremendously to the effective operation of the Congress, but certainly there can be no violation of the spirit of a particular provision for which the Senate voted but which was eliminated from the bill by the House. The fact that Senators voted for the bill with the provision in it does not necessarily commit them in any way or commit anybody in any way to that particular provision, which was not in the bill when it was finally passed, and is not today the law of the United States. Under such circumstances I cannot understand how it can be said that the pending proposal violates the spirit of the Reorganization Act. There is no such thing as a spirit in something which has not been enacted. The legislative enactment is before the Senate, and Senators can determine its terms. It does not in any way prohibit special committees. It leaves Congress free to act as it desires to act.

I think that special committees should be to some extent restricted, and we have been considering methods and means of bringing about such a restriction. I do not think they ought to be restricted by requiring a two-thirds vote for a suspension of the rules; I certainly should oppose such a proposal if it came before the Senate.

I intend, Mr. President, to submit a resolution to be referred to the Rules and Administration Committee, which will set forth my personal ideas of the kind of rule we ought to have:

Resolved, That rule XV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by adding a new paragraph as follows:

"3. Whenever a bill or resolution is introduced providing for the creation of a special Senate committee or a special joint committee for the purpose of considering any subject, such bill or resolution shall be referred to the standing committee or committees of the Senate having jurisdiction of the subject matter or matters to be dealt with by such special committee. In case such bill or resolution is reported favorably by such standing committee of the Senate, it shall be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which committee shall not approve said bill or resolution unless, in its opinion, the creation of such special committee is in the interest of efficient, orderly, and economical procedure in the Senate."

I submit the resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 64) submitted by Mr. Taft was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Democratic majority, now the minority, have used special committees for the last 12 years. They have used them as a very effective weapon for the successful operation of the Senate in accordance with the policy of the Senate. Today they come before us, saying, "This is a wicked procedure. We have repented. We are sorry we made use of special committees. We now contend, since the Republicans have obtained control of the Congress, that no more special committees should be created."

I cannot understand any possible reason for the present attitude of the minority of the Senate, except a desire to hamper and reduce the effectiveness of the investigation of war contracts. I see no other reasonable ground for the opposition to the pending resolution.

I am not particularly fond of special committees; certainly I shall try to limit them as far as possible in every way and discourage their creation; but the Senate for years has recognized there is a proper field of work for special committees, and if there is such a field there certainly is proper ground for continuing an existing committee, with an existing staff, an existing personnel, trained to do a particular job, and capable of doing it more effectively than can any new committee that may be organized, or any new committee that might undertake to take over the work, the personnel, and the spirit of the existing special committee.

It seems to me that the only possible ground for opposition to a continuation of this special committee is the fear of the minority that the investigation conducted by it will produce results which in some way may injure their political future.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss this issue, but in view of developments I feel that I should not remain silent. In view of the limited time, I shall not be privileged to yield to any of my colleagues.

Mr. President, partisanship and party allegiance have a proper place in political actions and in legislative and administrative affairs in any democracy. There are times, issues, and attending circumstances where and when partisanship may well be exercised by any Member of the Congress without betraying any obligation, violating any conscience, or doing any disservice to the best interests and welfare of the Nation. In such instances, Mr. President, party allegiance and obedience are doubtless commendable virtues rising above warranted censure or criticism. But partisanship can be, and is sometimes, abused and indulged in for temporary expediency on the erroneous theory and assumption that the political ends desired justify the employment of such means for their achievement.

Such motivation and conduct can hardly be appraised and is seldom esteemed by the great majority of American citizens as being a high standard of statesmanship. Crossing party lines in support or in defense of a principle is not a grievous error, nor is it an unpardonable sin with the masses of our people in either of our major political parties. During the 4 years I have served in this body I have sometimes hesitated, but never refused, to cross party lines and vote with my colleagues across the aisle when convinced that the issue or measure before us was of such importance that it transcended purely partisan political considerations. I shall likely do so again whenever the situation warrants it.

The issue now before the Senate would hardly permit differences of opinion, except that partisanship obviously has been injected into consideration of it. The purpose of both the original resolution and the pending substitute amendment are to authorize and direct the continuation of an investigation into the conduct of certain designated phases of the national defense program. The original idea of such an investigation was conceived by a former Democratic member of this body, who has since become and is now President of the United States. It was President Truman, then Senator Truman, who secured adoption of the resolution creating the special committee that has conducted the investigation thus far. That special committee expired with the Seventy-ninth Congress. Obviously, Mr. President, the special committee was a creation of a Democratic Senate, charged with the duty of investigating and examining into specific affairs and business of Government conducted by the War Department of a Democratic administration.

I believe it is conceded by everyone that the late special committee with a Democratic majority, along with Republican members of the committee, proceeded with its work and conducted its affairs on a nonpartisan basis and rendered a valuable and high quality of national service to our Government and to the people. The old special committee had a stupendous task and was unable, in the exercise of due diligence to finish the job. Surely, most of us are in accord that the work begun by the special committee should be completed. The purposes and objectives of the investigation are not in dispute, but contention has arisen over the means, and the particular instrumentality the Senate shall employ in continuing and completing this important work.

For many years past, Mr. President, and especially since the national emergency and during the war period, the practice was freely indulged by both the House and the Senate to set up and create, by resolution, special committees for conducting studies and investigations into many subjects and many activities of Government. This practice was deemed necessary and followed because jurisdiction of regular standing committees was not adequately defined nor appropriate machinery made available to regular committees to carry on such studies and investigations. The result was, Mr. President, that this practice of setting up special committees grew to such proportions and was overindulged to the extent that it was grossly abused, and the number of such special committees created became, in many instances, a burden and a liability rather than an asset to the Congress. These special committees frequently proved extravagant, involved a duplication of effort and waste of time, and often detracted from orderly procedure and impaired congressional efficiency. That, Mr. President, was one of the substantial reasons for the enactment of the Legislative Reorganization Act at the last session of Congress. That act was given enthusiastic bipartisan support and was heralded by many Members of this body, among the Democrats and also by Republicans on the other side of the aisle, and by most of the public press and news commentators, as a great reform in legislative procedure. Its qualities and virtues were highly commended, and its enactment was acclaimed as a monumental achievement.

While the Reorganization Act does not specifically prohibit the creation of special committees, it was certainly contemplated by all its advocates and supporters, that with the jurisdiction, duty, and authority of the reorganized standing committees clearly defined, the creation of special investigating committees would be obviated and rendered unnecessary. This implication under the terms and provisions of the Reorganization Act and the history associated with its development and enactment is inescapable.

Both the letter and the spirit of the act strongly counsel against such practices, and in my opinion, such practices should not now be renewed nor indulged in except in very extreme and extraordinary situations and circumstances. Such an extreme or extraordinary situation, Mr. President, does not now by any stretch of the imagination exist. One of the regular standing committees of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, has specific and full jurisdiction of the subject matter involved in both the Brewster amendment and the Tydings substitute amendment now pending before us. This regular standing committee is charged with the duty of "studying the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency."

Mr. President, the personnel of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments and the competency and capabilities of its membership to perform the duties with which the committee is charged under the law, I think it can be said, compare favorably with those of any other standing committee of this body. The experiences, abilities, and qualifications of the majority membership of this committee, I dare say, will compare most favorably with those of the majority membership of any special committee that could be named. Why, then, Mr. President, this concerted and determined effort on the part of the majority party to compel the establishing of a special committee to do this job when a regular standing committee is already created, is in existence, and is now ready, willing, and able to perform this function? Why, Mr. President, is the Republican majority of the Senate so anxious to abandon and depart so quickly from a rule of conduct and procedure that it so recently acclaimed as a great legislative reform? Why is this assault being made by the Republican majority on the Reorganization Act before the ink of its printing has hardly dried? The answer, Mr. President, is obvious, and the reasons advanced in this debate by our friends on the other side of the aisle are trivial indeed.

The argument that a special committee can do the job better does not have sufficient force to give it either persuasion or influence, because no evidence can be given to support that position and no facts can be produced to sustain it. So, Mr. President, it appears that the strongest purpose back of the insistence for a special committee is political in character and the advantage to be gained, if any, will be of doubtful value.

The Republican majority has the power, in numbers, to force the creation of the proposed special committee, but associated with that margin of power now temporarily enjoyed by the Republican Party in this body, goes the full responsibility and accountability for the consequences that will ensue if the special committee procedure is adopted.

At 2 o'clock today, Mr. President, when we vote, a precedent will be established, a precedent that will wield an influence of long standing, a precedent that will in effect divest a regular standing committee of this body of powers and duties conferred upon it by law, a precedent which, if followed, will initiate anew a procedure and practice that has heretofore been condemned by the membership of both parties, and the evil of which the Reorganization Act was designed to correct. Whatever others may do, Mr. President, I shall vote today to preserve the spirit, the force, and the integrity of the Reorganization Act. Others may cast stones at it, if they will, and strike a blow that will mar, efface, and weaken the structure of this edifice of legislative reform; but I am unwilling, Mr. President, either to disregard or to discard the principles and purposes and objectives for which it was enacted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield me one more minute?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield one more minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, I am unwilling to cast my vote so as to reflect upon the competency and integrity of any of my colleagues who are members of that committee. I am unwilling to evade or shirk any responsibility that membership on this committee imposes; and I am unwilling to abdicate and transfer to others the power, authority, duty, and responsibility which, under the law, rightfully belong to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments.

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE].

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, it is with some reluctance that, as a new Member of the Senate, I inject myself into the debate at the present time, but I believe there are a couple of points which should be made clear before the vote is taken. The matter of continuing the work of the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program involves two questions to be decided by this body. First, should the labors of the committee be completed and a summary of its work be made available to the Senate; and, second, if the work is to be continued, what committee or agency is best adapted to complete it?

In the first instance it is apparent that the Senate wants the work completed and the results made available for future consideration, and, second, if that be true, then since the regularly constituted Committee on Rules and Administration, made up of a bipartisan membership, has considered the resolution, heard the evidence, and submitted a recommendation that the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program be continued in order to complete the work, the matter is settled so far as I am concerned.

It is simply, in my estimation, a routine organization matter of this body and has already been given more attention and time than should have been devoted to one phase of organization in view of the important business confronting the Congress of the United States.

The past week's debate has furnished considerable time for reflection. I find that the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program was created on March 1, 1941, as a peacetime committee, apparently to consider unusual expenditures in connection with national defense. Second, that there has been a total of $750,000 appropriated and devoted to this work. Third, that there are more than 240 file drawers full of data and information pertinent to war expenditures covering nearly every phase of the work and nearly every area in the world.

It is apparent on the face of it that there is not time available for a regularly constituted committee of this body to review more than 240 file drawers of data and information and become sufficiently familiar with the subject matters then to complete the work of the committee and summarize it for the use of the Senate within the year and at the same time undertake the increased duties of the regular committees which now include anywhere from three to six or seven of the former major committees.

Fourth, we find upon investigation that following World War I a total of 32 committee were engaged in the business of investigating what happened during that Great War, and they conducted a total of 101 investigations. These 32 committees included 12 regular Senate committees, 1 select committee, 11 House regular committees with 3 select committees and 5 joint committees. The resolution approved by the regularly constituted Committee on Rules and Administration of this body confines the investigation to one experienced committee.

I repeat, Mr. President, that there are two questions facing this body neither of which should have consumed the time that has been used in debate upon the subject. First, should the work be completed and summarized for the use of the Members of this body, and, second, if it should be completed, what committee is best equipped through experience to handle the job. The Committee on Rules and Administration has answered that question in the regular course of business, and so far as I am concerned, I shall vote for the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Maine yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BREWSTER. The time of the Senator from Maryland is now running.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall take 10 minutes of the time assigned to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized on the theory that he has the permission of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RUSSELL. I can assure the Chair that that is the case.

Mr. President, as one who served on the Special Committee on the Organization of Congress, I wish to express my deep regret that the pending question appears about to be resolved upon strictly a party and partisan basis. I regret that the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] in his argument for the continuance of this committee, should have pitched his remarks purely upon a partisan basis. If I correctly understood the argument of the Senator from Ohio, it was to the effect that because we have had special committees in the past, under both Democratic and Republican administrations, we should disregard the Reorganization Act of 1946 and continue a practice which has been assailed by Members on both sides of the aisle as rendering standing committees impotent; that we should disregard that salutary provision of the Reorganization Act which provides that each and every standing committee shall follow up the activities of the executive department in executing the laws which it recommends and follow the expenditures which are made pursuant to legislative appropriation. He would wipe away with an airy wave of the hand, the greatest reform in legislative procedure ever adopted by the Congress.

The argument of the Senator from Ohio is made in absolute disregard of the Reorganization Act of 1946, and indicates that the pending resolution is but the beginning of a plethora of resolutions for special committees which will strike down that act and deny the people of the Nation its benefits. When Senators vote for Senate Resolution 46 they stand naked and defenseless against the stream of resolutions which will follow, and which will be based upon arguments as sound as, or sounder than, those which are made here today in behalf of this special committee.

If I were seeking mere political advantage, I would be content to see the Republican majority seize upon this resolution as a spearhead for this stream of resolutions. I doubt if Senators realize the fact that there are hundreds of thousands of independent voters in this Nation who are greatly interested in the Reorganization Act, and who will lament to see inaugurated this whittling process which will result in its destruction.

Be that as it may, when the tocsin is sounded by the Senator from Ohio for all Republicans to rally around and recreate this special committee, I point out that the question has not heretofore been handled upon a partisan basis. It should not be decided here today upon a partisan basis.

After the passing of the late Senator Maloney, of Connecticut, I was appointed a member of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress. It so happened that the committee had not organized, and that on that committee I was the senior member of the party in power at that time, the Democratic Party. Under the ordinary rules of partisan advantage, I was entitled to the chairmanship of that committee. I conceived, however, that this greatly needed reform transcended party lines. I had sat here for 14 years and had seen standing committees of the Senate helpless to function because of the great encumbrance of special committees. Though I was entitled to that chairmanship, I nominated and supported the then Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette, who was not of my political faith, to serve as chairman. There was not a hint of partisanship in any of the deliberations of the committee. When the reorganization bill reached the floor of the Senate it was not considered a partisan measure; and in this body and in the other body some of the strongest speeches made for that measure were made by members of the Republican Party, which was then in the minority, as well as by some of us who belonged to the then majority.

Mr. President, I would regret to see this infant of congressional reorganization strangled and stifled while it is still in its swaddling clothes, merely because of partisan considerations. My remarks are made without any reflection upon the members of the special committee. I believe that they did a good job. I know that the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] can be counted upon to pursue all investigations with unremitting zeal and unflagging energy. But I take the position that this resolution should not be adopted, because I know that it will result in the destruction of the best features of the Reorganization Act. The act sought to vest in the standing committees the power to follow through. It was not only a matter of saving time of Senators, not only a question of relieving the heads of agencies from trying to appear before three or four committees at once. The theory was that legislation should originate with the standing committees, and that the standing committees are entitled to the benefit of investigations, in order that they may draft appropriate and salutary legislation.

Mr. President, I have been amazed to hear eminent Senators say that they were supporting this resolution because of the experience of those who had heretofore been members of the special committee. In the course of the debate they have been driven to that argument as practically the last and only argument remaining to them. They say they are supporting the resolution because of the experience of members of the special committee. They say that such experience has not been enjoyed by members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That is the most specious argument I have heard fall from such distinguished lips in a great many years. Exactly the same argument could be made in behalf of all nine or ten special committees which encumbered this body in the previous Congress. It matters not what is the subject matter; when the resolution is introduced the same argument applies. Senators may have adopted it as a time-saving device, so that they will not be required to write new speeches. A Senator may say, "I am a great friend of the reorganization of Congress. I supported the bill, and I would do nothing to violate the spirit of the act. But in this case, because of the special experience of the members of the special committee, I think we ought to make an exception and continue it."

On the subject of a resolution to continue some other special committee a Senator could strike out the words "Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program," and in the case of the Small Business Committee, which follows in its wake, he could insert the words "Special Committee To Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises" and say, "I am a great friend of the reorganization of Congress. I supported the bill, and I would do nothing to violate its spirit. But in this case, because of the special experience of members of the Small Business Committee, I am constrained to vote to continue its existence."

The same thing will happen in the case of the special silver committee, the special wool committee, the special oil committee, and others in the list of nine or ten. All that it is necessary to do is to strike out the name of the committee in the speech and insert a different name, and every argument, and such alleged validity as it may possess will apply to the other special committees. Not only will it apply to the committees which have been in existence but it could be applied to the creation of new special committees.

Suppose, for example, that a great plague were to assail cattle in the United States; suppose the cattle tick were to attack every herd in the Nation; assume that we had in this body Senator Blank, who had made a great record in his own State in investigating, pursuing, and eliminating the cattle tick. Perhaps Senator Blank had not been so fortunate as to be appointed on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. A special resolution could be offered for the creation of a special committee to combat the ravages and avert the catastrophe of the cattle tick; and Senators could, with as good faith and as sound logic as is here displayed, rise and say, "Of course, I am for the Reorganization Act. I am for its spirit, and I supported it when it was before the Senate. But we are now in the majority. Before the reorganization bill was passed there was a special cattle-tick committee back in 1906 or 1907. We have in this body a great Senator, Senator Blank, a man who has investigated, pursued, and eliminated the cattle tick in his home State. He is not a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, so we will create a special committee for Senator Blank, to utilize his vast experience in striking down and destroying the pest which is assailing the cattle of the Nation."

I resent the statement and the implication that those of us who are adhering to the spirit of the Reorganization Act are afraid of investigations being continued. I believe in investigations; I think they have a salutary effect; but I do not concede that all the probity and ability in this body are focused in any two or three Senators. I believe that a better job can be done by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Members of that committee may not be so accustomed to the glare of the spotlight as are Senators on the special committee, but they will go into this matter thoroughly. If I thought that men who have profited unduly while our boys were dying overseas would go unwhipped of justice I would support the resolution, but I believe that justice will be administered and the spirit of the Reorganization Act will be maintained by a vote to preserve the spirit of the Reorganization Act, and I shall so vote. The act is too important to the welfare of the Nation to be nullified for partisan purposes. It is entitled to a fair chance before being whittled away and emasculated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, it is extremely difficult, particularly for a new Senator, to cast any light on a subject which has been so thoroughly swallowed and digested, considered, argued, and debated for approximately 2 weeks, but perhaps it will do no harm to express one or two thoughts for the purpose of further reflection, emphasis, and consideration.

As one who has not been a Member of this distinguished body for very long,

I take it that the Senate is in full agreement on certain questions now being considered. In the first place, I believe the Senate understands and knows and feels that America wants the investigation of our national-defense program to continue. It seems self-evident and obvious to me that many of the few among the public who hesitate to encourage a continuation of the investigations are those who themselves are frightened at investigations of graft, corruption, and connivance. Every Member of the Senate knows that America wants the investigation to proceed.

Secondly, I take it to be a fact that, being a reflection, as we are, of the very best among our own citizenry, this Senate likewise wants the investigation to continue.

Thirdly, it seems to me that every Senator, be he a Democrat or a Republican, wants the investigation to go forward at the earliest possible moment.

Those are fields of discussion upon which all of us are in agreement. However, obviously there is a bone of serious differences of opinion and disagreement on the question by whom and in what manner the investigations concerning graft, corruption, connivance, and other vicious misdeeds of one character or another shall be conducted. Those who support the contention that the special committee should and must be continued feel, as I feel, speaking particularly for myself as a new Senator, that the special committee has done a good job in the past and that it can and will do a better job in the future. Those who seriously, thoughtfully, and honestly disagree with that premise maintain that a standing committee which has had placed upon it a great task of reorganization can accomplish in better fashion what all of us know has been accomplished in able fashion by the special committee under discussion. Here we have the only argument and disagreement between our two opposing forces.

Mr. President, on this matter I can speak for no other Senator on either side, but, as for myself, I take sturdy if not violent exception to some of the negative arguments which have supported the case of those distinguished Senators who think a standing committee is better qualified to do this job than is the special committee, the continuation of which we are now considering as we are drawing toward a vote. They have said, and have repeated it a thousand times, it seems to me, beginning a week ago last Monday, that if this special committee is to be given continuing or new life an epidemic of special committees will break out. Although I know not the background of all the Members of the Senate, that contention seems to me to be utterly lacking in logic, for the simple reason that in the future no special committees can be created except by the Members of this distinguished body. If an epidemic of special committees breaks out the American people can hold responsible for that outbreak those alone who have made it possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Washington has expired. Does the Senator from Maine yield further time to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator from Maine.

Mr. President, a second argument which, to my point of view is untenable, is that if continued life is granted to this special committee, it becomes life in perpetuity. I see no more logic to that than to the contention just mentioned. The actual request is that continuing life be granted for the period of a single year, following which the same men who granted the extension will consider terminating it.

Finally, Mr. President, the argument has been advanced by men for whom I have a considerable and deep-seated respect, that if the special committee is continued the future of this magnificent and only body of its kind on the face of the earth will be jeopardized. To me such fear implies in the Senate a degree of futility, a degree of uncertainty, a degree of lack of moral courage, and a degree of incompetence that no normal, average, typical American citizen can accept for a single minute.

As an individual, beginning at 2 o'clock, when my chance comes, I shall cast an affirmative vote for the continuance for 1 year of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program because of the pressing need for positive action and because, from my point of view, the proposal makes good, sound common sense.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON].

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, it seems to me that there has been a very studied effort on behalf of the newspaper columnists and radio commentators who act as though they were the publicity representatives of the Republican Party to convince the American people that the minority who are opposing the continuance of the special committee are doing so because they fear an investigation. I was indeed disappointed to hear the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] join the group of men and women who have been writing stories of that kind for the last 2 weeks. I think it cannot be too clearly emphasized that we on this side of the aisle want to have made such an investigation as will uncover every single crook there may possibly be who has taken advantage of the Treasury of the United States in the prosecution of World War II.

Mr. President, why should not we feel that way? We remember the First World War, and we remember the nonpartisan way in which it was conducted. We remember the investigating committees which grew out of that war, and we remember very well the fact that as a result of their activities not a single scandal in the conduct of that great conflict was disclosed. We remember, Mr. President, that after the investigations were completed, with the help and assistance of the then minority Senators, out of the experience which they gained they went forth and were able to pick up and search out and convict the crooks of the Harding administration, who came from the State now so eminently represented by the leader of his party, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. Oh, yes; we remember the Department of Justice. We remember the Veterans' Administration. We remember the raping of the country's oil reserves. We remember, too, that when the dark clouds of 1940 were gathering over this land, be it ever said to the credit of Franklin Delano Roosevelt that he selected Henry L. Stimson, an eminent Republican, to be his Secretary of War, and Frank Knox, another eminent Republican, to be his Secretary of the Navy—two distinguished Americans whose patriotism, integrity, and honorable reputations have not been surpassed in our time. Frank Knox was the Vice-Presidential candidate of his party in 1936. It was under those gentlemen and under their supervision and that of the now great Secretary of War, Robert Patterson, who is also a Republican, who then was Under Secretary of War, that the $400,000,000,000 were spent in fighting the war.

Mr. President, we, of the minority, want to have investigations made. We want investigations made of the War Production Board, and not because we know that 98 percent of the personnel of that outfit were Republicans. We know of the great concerns that got the large war contracts, concerns such as the Chrysler Corp., General Motors, United States Steel, the Sun Shipbuilding Co., the airplane companies, and other industrial organizations that are officered by the "fat cats" of the Republican Party. Mr. President, Senators on the other side of the aisle should not think for a moment that the minority will fail to see to it that some of the "fat cats" will take a trip to the gold-fish bowl along with the little fellows, until we find exactly where the Government's money went.

So, Mr. President, we are determined upon the investigation, and we are determined to make it complete. We want it made by the committee which should make it, namely, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield me a little further time?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield an additional minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MCMAHON. I should like to call attention to the fact that the chairman of the former Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], stated that the former chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program had appealed to him for more money, and stated to him that the investigation then being made by his special committee would then come to a close. On the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS]; and neither of those eminent Senators, so far as I can ascertain, protested against the proposed termination at that time of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, or said, "We cannot permit that committee to cease."

I should also like to call attention to the fact that the Senators on the other side of the aisle who voted to abolish special committees did so when the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program was in full life and existence, and they did so with the knowledge that they were cutting off the very committee which they now seek to perpetuate.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote against continuing the existence of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, because I refuse to say to the American people——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McMAHON. I refuse to yield; I do not have the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield an additional half minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I refuse to say to the American people that I voted for the congressional reorganization bill simply to get a raise in pay and to obtain the benefits of a pension system, and that now at the first opportunity I shall plunge a knife into the vitals of the Reorganization Act and let the Congress of the United States sink back into its former way of doing things. We voted to change all that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

The Senator from Maine has 35 minutes remaining. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe I have 29½ minutes remaining, Mr. President.

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, 5 minutes will be more than sufficient.

I shall speak very briefly as one of the 15,000,000 men who took part in the fighting of World War II. I do not speak for them, but I speak as one of them. I had not planned to speak today, but yesterday afternoon and last evening I spent approximately 3 hours at one of the veterans' hospitals. I spent that time talking to some of my friends who are permanently crippled and disabled. Rather than to speak for myself today in the Senate, I should like to repeat a few of the words that some of those men spoke to me.

One young man, a marine with both legs amputated, said—I shall try to quote him as nearly verbatim as I can: "When we were in the islands and the days were especially rough and the number of dead and injured mounted, and you would lie there at night and listen to the moan of the jungle on the one side and the music of the sea on the other, then the veil between life and death became very, very thin, and very often your good friends who had died that day were much nearer to you than those who still lived, and we knew then and know now that many of those men died because of the graft and corruption which the Senate proposes to investigate."

Another of those men said to me: "What are you gentlemen up there thinking of? You are the body who voted us into the war. Now why do you object to investigating the graft and corruption which occurred during that war?"

I tried to explain that to them, Mr. President. I explained to them that a number of Senators on the other side of the aisle have maintained long and vigorously that they want the war activities investigated and want all those who have been guilty of graft and corruption and criminal incompetence uncovered and punished, but they now say: "We do not want this job done by men who are trained in that type of work; we do not want it done by a committee which is experienced in that work; we want that work done by a new group of men—men equally competent but totally inexperienced."

Then a young chap from Texas made what I thought was a very good comment on that point. He said: "That puts me in mind of having the enemy ask us, before we went into combat, to replace all our trained personnel with an equal number of incompetent and untrained personnel." He said: "If we had done that during the war, I wonder who would have won the war."

Mr. President, I have been told that a great number of the Senators on the other side of the aisle are going to vote for the Tydings amendment, which, as all of us know, will, to say the least, postpone this war investigation for a considerable period of time, if not completely hamstring it. I hesitate to believe that many Senators on the other side of the aisle will vote for that amendment. I think, and I sincerely hope, that a great number of them will join with us in telling the wives and the mothers of the 250,000 men who died during the war—I hope they will join with us in telling the legless and sightless—that not one single individual who was guilty of graft and corruption which may have directly led to the death or wounding of an American soldier, sailor, or marine, will be able, because of delay and procrastination, to escape the just consequences of his acts.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I intend to cast my vote for the amendment which has been offered by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], providing that the war investigation shall be continued, but continued by a regular standing committee of this body. Because it is apparent that I am not in accord with many Senators on this side of the aisle, I wish briefly to explain my position.

In the first place, I think it is clear that there is no question, in connection with the pending amendment, as to whether or not the war investigation shall be continued or shall not be continued. The amendment which I support provides expressly that it shall be continued. I believe there is an obligation upon the Senate to continue and complete the investigation.

Speaking for myself, I hope that in the course of the investigation, every abuse which was committed during the past years may be disclosed, and that every wrongdoer, particularly those who have held positions of trust, may be discovered and may be punished.

However, I do not believe that the obligation which has been imposed upon the Senate, extends itself to an obligation to designate a certain special committee, composed of certain Senators, to conduct the investigation. For that reason I feel that this vote is no test of fidelity to any program of our party for the enactment of legislation. Rather, I believe the investigation should be continued, but if there is a question as to the committee which should conduct the investigation, I believe that it should be decided in accordance with the rule of the Senate.

I do not attempt to say that I understand all the background of the Reorganization Act, but from reading it, and from reading the report of the committee which considered it, and from listening to the debates in this Chamber, I cannot escape the conclusion that one of its declared purposes is that, in the interest of economy, not only of money, but of the time of the Members of the Senate, the work of the Senate shall be done by its regular standing committees unless it can be conclusively established that they cannot perform the particular task.

I would not take the narrow viewpoint that a special committee cannot be established, because that would defeat and hinder the work of the Senate. If in this instance, it had been clearly established that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments would not undertake the task, or that, having undertaken it, would not complete it, or that its work would be obstructed in any way, I should certainly then vote for the continuation of the special committee.

I will go further. I believe that above all is the obligation to make an investigation of the war. When this vote is cast, if the Senate should determine that it is not its wish that investigation should be made by a regular standing committee, believing that the investigation of the war is preeminent, I shall not lend my vote to further delaying such an investigation but shall vote for the continuation of the special committee.

Strong argument has been made upon the ground of continuity, which I think has force, but I believe that argument has been met to a great degree. I think of another question of continuity which I think is more objective. One of the most important questions which will come before the Congress is that of determining the size, character, and function of our armed forces in the future.

I submit that determination of these questions will affect our fiscal policy, our national defense, and have its relation to international affairs. The investigation of the conduct of the recent war will develop information of great value to the standing committees which will consider these questions. Looking to the future, I think it is important that this valuable information be developed by a regular standing committee, whose services and aid to other committees and to this body will always be available, rather than by a special committee of limited duration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. COOPER. May I have one more minute?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield the Senator another minute.

Mr. COOPER. Finally, it may be of importance to no one except the present speaker, but it seems to me, speaking from the viewpoint of one coming recently from the outside, that one of the most disturbing factors we have seen during the past 13 years has been the ignoring of rules of law, and sometimes an actual contempt of those rules, by some of those who were a part of the Government itself. For myself, I should like to uphold in this body, when I can, rules of law.

Mr. President, because of these considerations, and with some regret, from a personal viewpoint, considering my colleagues on this side, I shall cast my vote for the pending amendment providing that the war investigation shall be continued by the Committee on Executive Expenditures.

Mr. BREWSTER. I now yield 5 minutes to the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the Senate is about to vote on the pending resolution relative to the continuation of the War Investigating Committee. I rather doubt that at this late hour many votes are going to be changed on either side of the aisle by remarks which may be made here today; but briefly, and summing up, I should like to review the situation as I see it.

Certainly there will be no violation of the La Follette-Monroney Act by the extension or continuation of the War Investigating Committee. It has been pointed out heretofore that the specific provision which would have prevented special committees was taken out of the reorganization bill in the House of Representatives, and that the Senate itself concurred in that action. Therefore, so far as the legal situation is concerned, and so far as any spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act may be concerned, the Senate is on adequate and sound ground in continuing the committee.

The second point which has been raised is that by continuing this one committee the door will be opened for the creation of many other committees, and that that might tend to defeat the purpose or the spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act. I merely say, on that point, that as a member of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, I certainly would not consider that the adoption of the pending resolution, for the continuation of the War Investigating Committee, would be any precedent justifying opening the door for the creation of many other special committees. I think each committee must stand on its own feet, depending upon the need for it. There may be times in the future when the Senate in its wisdom will feel that it is desirable that another special committee be created, but certainly I do not believe that there will be any opening of the door to the wholesale creation of committees because the Senate may continue the present War Investigating Committee.

I think we must also consider whether the special committee has done effective work in the past. I do not believe there can be any doubt on either side of the aisle that during the long period of years, some five or six, the committee has been in existence, it has contributed to the national good. Under the leadership of the present President of the United States, under the leadership of the former Senator from New York, Mr. Mead, under the leadership of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and now under the leadership of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the committee has had a record of contributing a great deal to the national welfare. I believe there is constructive work it can do in the future which needs to be done.

It has been said that by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland and the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, the records and the files can be turned over to a standing committee. I pointed out last week that, in most instances, the standing committees have not as yet been adequately organized and staffed, and that with the tremendous budget of over thirty-seven and one-half billion dollars proposed by the President the committee so ably headed by the Senator from Vermont will have enough to keep it busy watching the expenditures in the executive departments of the thirty-seven and one-half billion dollars, or whatever amount shall be appropriated, without going into the field of past expenditures.

Second, the discussion about the transfer of records and staffs loses sight of the fact that when a team that has been working together over a period of time is disbanded and its records turned over to a group unfamiliar with them and unacquainted with the background, even if they diligently pursue the matter, it will be 60 or 90 days or more before they acquire the momentum which the War Investigating Committee has at the present time.

It is my opinion that, if the country and the Congress of the United States desire an investigation of corruption, war profits, and profiteering, and if the Senate really desires it to be done, the War Investigating Committee should be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the point to which I address myself was referred to during a colloquy between the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Michigan, appearing at page 455 of the RECORD of January 20, 1947. I desire to call it to the attention of the Senate for the benefit of some of those who were not present during the discussion on that afternoon, since it demonstrates rather conclusively the answer to any suggestions as to either the spirit or the letter of the Reorganization Act.

This arose as the result of a question which had been raised on the floor. I quote the language of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]:

> The able Senator from Illinois referred to my record on the Reorganization Act with great kindness and hopefulness. He indicated, however, that, on the basis of the record, unless I declined to approve an extension of this special committee, I would not be in harmony with my original position.
> I know the Senator would not wish to do the RECORD any injustice and, therefore, with his permission, I should like to call his attention to the remainder of my colloquy with the able former Senator from Wisconsin, on the same page of the RECORD from which he read.

The Senator from Michigan then quoted from the RECORD of those days. I quote:

> I think this is one of the few places in the bill where I am not sure I agree with the philosophy of my able friend from Wisconsin.

Speaking of the question of special committees. He goes on:

> I would not want section 126 to be read as meaning that we do not recognize that there may be extraordinary situations, of which the best illustration at the moment is the control of atomic energy, which are better served by special and select committees, and perhaps by joint committees.
> To which—

Again quoting from the RECORD—> the able Senator from Wisconsin, the author of the bill, replied:

> "I grant that point, and have conceded it in the brief time we have been able to devote to the consideration of the bill today."

The Senator went on further to emphasize that the only distinction is between whether we operate by a suspension of the rules or by a majority vote; which, as is recognized on all sides today, is within the full power and scope of this body.

No matter of principle is involved, but simply the question of how the desired result should be effectuated, and whether there seems to be in the situation here presented reasons why a special committee should continue with the consideration of this matter.

The elimination of the provision regarding special committees from the reorganization bill before its enactment certainly removes any question as to the letter of the law, and the discussion and colloquy between the Senator from Michigan and the former Senator from Wisconsin, the distinguished author of the act, and chairman, incidentally, of the special committee and joint committee that alone made possible the enactment of this very legislation, made it perfectly clear that both Senators recognized the propriety and the possibility of situations arising which would indicate the desirability of a special committee.

Whether or not this situation is of that character, it would not be for me as one of those concerned to say; but it seems to me conclusively demonstrated that to wave the flag of "the spirit and the letter" of the Reorganization Act is not warranted either by the law or by the discussions that went on between those who were most closely associated with the formulation of the reorganization legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Maine that if any other Senator on his side of the question is now available, I should appreciate it if he will yield to him at this time

Mr. BREWSTER. I think I have proceeded far.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well; I yield 5 minutes or 6 minutes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a few days ago in a speech on the floor of the Senate I set forth eight reasons why I thought the Senate of the United States should refrain from appointing special committees, except under the most extraordinary circumstances.

I said on that occasion I thought the burden of proof rested on those favoring continuation of the Brewster committee to show clearly that such extraordinary factors exist in this situation as to justify having the war-contract investigation conducted by a special committee instead of by a subcommittee of a standing committee.

I now wish to say that in my judgment those who favor the continuation of the Brewster committee have not sustained their burden of proof for the following reasons: First, I point out that it was generally agreed by many on this side of the aisle as well as on the other side that the Brewster committee should not have the extensive jurisdiction to investigate any issue that it desired to investigate in regard to the prosecution of the war. It is well known that the Brewster committee sought at the beginning of this Congress to cross the jurisdictional lines of several standing committees, but there were many objections raised by Members, particularly of the Armed Services Committee. Hence the representatives of the Brewster committee—and let us be frank about it—sought out and obtained an arrangement with certain Members on this side of the aisle, who are members of the Armed Services Committee, that they would not exercise jurisdiction over certain issues falling within the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee.

When they laid down that principle of entering into arrangements for votes, Mr. President, then I say their case fell, because they thereby demonstrated that in order to get the necessary votes to continue the Brewster committee, they were perfectly willing to limit their jurisdiction as to certain standing committees but not to others. After that arrangement they knew that they did not have to enter into similar arrangements with other standing committees because having the votes to pass their resolution they did not have to work out such an arrangement.

I say that is an unfortunate principle and practice for us to condone here today by continuing this committee. Further, I believe that the Brewster committee ought to investigate, if it is going to continue, any and all war contracts suspected of the taint of fraud and corruption, no matter where they may reach in their influence. If an investigation of fraud and corruption needs to be made outside of the United States, then it should be made by a single committee and not by several. Hence I am not interested in continuing the committee on the basis of the principle of approving of its practice of trading jurisdiction for votes.

The second point I desire to make, Mr. President, is that I wish the people of the United States to know that by voting against the continuation of the Brewster committee I am not voting against a continuation of the investigation of war contracts. On the contrary, I wish to see a thorough investigation of war frauds. I wish to see brought to the light of day the fraud and corruption which I am satisfied are inherent in many war contracts. I desire those responsible for such misdeeds to be brought to the bar of justice.

However, I say, Mr. President, that a subcommittee of the standing committee headed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] is just as competent and able to conduct and continue that investigation as is the Brewster committee. I do not argue that the Aiken committee is more competent, but I do contend that it is of equal competence in all respects to the Brewster committee.

The record also discloses that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments notified the Senate that if a subcommittee is allowed to conduct the war-frauds investigation, the man who will be in charge of that investigation will be the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON]. A finer, a more able, a more competent investigator does not exist in the Senate of the United States. He is now on the Brewster committee. Hence I think it most unfortunate that the impression is being given to the people of the United States that an investigation of war frauds will not proceed with maximum efficiency and effectiveness unless it is done by the Brewster committee.

I further point out, Mr. President, that this Brewster committee that the Senate is now being asked to continue is a 10-man committee, 4 of whose members are yet to be appointed. It is, as of today, only a six-man committee, and some of those six are men who have had relatively short service on the committee.

Let us be frank about another thing. We do not need a 10-man committee to conduct an investigation such as the one proposed. You and I know, Mr. President, that in these investigations, after all, the greatest load of work is carried by hired expert investigators on the staff of a committee. They do most of the work. Senators for the most part only direct it. What does one find if one attends the meetings and the hearings of many committees? One frequently finds that not even half the committee membership is present in the meetings of many of our Senate committees. I think it is a mistake to give the impression that we need a special 10-man committee to conduct this proposed investigation.

I make one other point before I close, Mr. President, and that is from the standpoint of economy I think more money can be saved by having the work done by a smaller subcommittee of the very committee that has the standing obligation to see to it that the maximum of economy is maintained in the administration of our Government. Special committees involve a certain amount of waste because of duplication of office set-up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator half a minute.

Mr. MORSE. I close with this final observation, Mr. President. I deeply regret that so much partisanship has been drawn into this fight. I wish that we could always try, as I am trying to do in this instance, to take a nonpartisan approach on issues that affect the welfare of our country. I sincerely believe that it is in the nonpartisan interests of the public that we see to it that the spirit of the Reorganization Act is lived up to, both by the Members on this side of the aisle and by the Members on the Democratic side of the aisle. I do share the view that the spirit of the Reorganization Act would be violated in this instance, because I think the proponents of the Brewster committee have failed to show those extraordinary circumstances that justify the appointment of a special committee. I think the majority of my Republican colleagues are making a grievous mistake.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Michigan is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the closing remarks of the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] bring up the question of the spirit of the reorganization law. I wish to place in the RECORD at this point excerpts from the writings of a man who had a great deal to do with the writing of the reorganization law.

Dr. George B. Galloway was the counsel to the La Follette-Monroney committee. He is now a senior specialist in the Library Legislative Reference Service.

After the passage of the Reorganization Act omitting the ban on special committees, Dr. Galloway wrote a book, Congress at the Crossroads, in which the following appears on the value of special committees:

> Special investigating committees: The work load of Congress often overflows its regular standing committees and leads to the creation of select or special committees to investigate particular problems. Congress has set up such special committees many times in our history either to inquire into executive misconduct, as in the case of the scandals of the Grant and Harding days, or to investigate economic and social conditions in Podunk Corners or Puerto Rico, or to examine campaign expenditures or the conduct of the war or a hundred other topics of public or party interest. Between 1789 and 1925 upward of 300 inquiries into executive acts alone were made by select committees.

Under modern conditions, select committees have proved to be useful devices for eliciting information, informing Congress and the country, scrutinizing executive performance, and illuminating public problems. They enable young and energetic Members to sidestep the seniority custom, to employ expert and zealous personnel rarely found on the staffs of standing committees, and to conduct vigorous and searching investigations into vital public questions (pp. 55 and 56).

I think that statement eliminates any question about there being any spirit left in the Reorganization Act so far as special committees are concerned.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to call to the attention of the membership on the other side of the aisle an unfortunate circumstance which has latterly arisen. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] yesterday was called to the bedside of one of his immediate family who is critically ill and with grave possible consequences ahead. It would be a very gracious, a very sportsmanlike, and a very fair gesture on the part of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle if some Senator on that side would give to this Democratic Senator from Louisiana a chance to register his position. I have never known in this body a pair to be refused when the death of some member of the family of a Senator was probable, and when, for that reason, the Senator was absent. I have been unable to secure a pair for the senior Senator from Louisiana, and that has impelled me to make this announcement. In the face of this dire circumstance I ask some Senator on the majority side to accord to the Senator from Louisiana the right that has never been heretofore denied in any case by reason of partisanship in the whole time I have been in this body. I hope some Senator will pair with the Senator from Louisiana so that his position may be recorded.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, I am sure that the consideration which the Senator from Maryland has urged was carefully studied, but I will canvass the situation on this side to see what can be done.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Maine.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, may I say that I wholly dispute the Senator's suggestion that he does not know of any case in which a pair has been refused under such circumstances. Personally I know of very few cases where a pair has been granted under such circumstances when the vote is close. I merely want to make that statement because I think it is a wholly unheard-of proposal on the part of the Senator from Maryland. I have been in the Senate for 8 years, and I never heard such an appeal made, and I see no reason why the appeal should be granted.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I yield myself a half a minute. The Senator from Ohio, however, has not shown an exception, and I still say I defy any Member of this body to show within the last 20 years a single case where, with the possibility of death in the immediate family of a Member of the Senate, he was unable to obtain a pair on any important question.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator cite any case where it was done?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I can cite numerous cases where pairs have been arranged, some of them by the Senator from Maryland, and most notably in the case of the late Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Metcalf.

I yield the control of the remainder of my time to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator from Maine to continue with the debate on his side. I am speaking in behalf of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Maine, and I suppose I would be entitled to close the debate on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland has 13 minutes remaining. The question is on the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senate wishes to vote now I will not occupy the time.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. BARKLEY. I believe the order was that the Senate should vote at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order is that the Senate shall vote not later than 2 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. I am ready to vote now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Maine to Senate Resolution 46.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. How much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirteen minutes remain on the side of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and 17 minutes on the side of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I doubt if the Senate will be called upon to vote at this session on a more important issue than the one upon which we shall vote at the end of 30 minutes—the question as to whether or not we shall continue the all-encompassing Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which has been known throughout the Nation and the world as the Truman committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I assume the Senator would not yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BROOKS. I do not yield any of my time. If I may yield with the understanding that the Senator will use the time of the other side, I shall be delighted to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I repeat that I doubt if the Senate will be called upon to vote on a more important issue than the continuation of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, which is commonly known in America and throughout the world as the Truman committee.

This committee is special and unusual in every way. It is an outgrowth of the war. It was all-encompassing, and certainly it was a necessary committee. When this country was led into war—and I say "led into war" advisedly—the war effort affected every household, every farm, every factory, every business, every hospital, and every school in the Nation. By vote of the Congress every able-bodied man had to respond to the call to arms. By vote of the Congress every household was subjected to restrictions, restraints, and regulations. Thousands of businesses were on the verge of folding up, because the war effort to an unusual extent necessitated the concentration of power in large industries, and in large measure placed the expenditure of money in the hands of military men who were never trained to undertake or understand the intricate details of industry or the handling of high finance.

The war had hardly got under way when the then Senator from Missouri, who was not a senior Senator in any sense, for he had been here only 6 years, rose and asked for the appointment of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I decline to yield.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield for half a minute?

Mr. BROOKS. Not one second, unless the Senator wishes to use the time of the other side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield. It is unfair to take his time.

Mr. BROOKS. This special committee was organized under the leadership of Senator Truman. Membership upon most committees of the Senate is based upon seniority in the Senate. Every time a new group of Senators comes to the Senate they come with a background of the interest of their States and of certain personal experience which gives them special qualifications. They designate certain committees on which they would like to serve. In many instances they are denied that opportunity because of seniority preference, because Senators who were here ahead of them also choose the same special fields.

However, the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program was not chosen on the basis of seniority. Its first chairman had been a Member of the Senate for only 6 years. The year the committee was created four members of the committee who had that year entered the Senate—namely, the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], former Senator Burton, of Ohio, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and former Senator Tunnell—were made members. Ultimately one of those junior Senators, the Senator from West Virginia, became chairman of the committee.

Because of its all-encompassing activities, the committee was made a committee of 10. The investigation into war contracts and fraud ultimately reached into the very Halls of Congress in recent months. I submit that this committee should have at least 10 members at all times.

Of the 10 members, 6 belonged to the then majority and 4 to the then minority. The investigations of the committee extended all over the world and even into the chairmanship of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House.

As a result of that activity, which was magnificently carried on by Senator Truman, with much of the work being done by his colleagues on the committee, he became so widely known that ultimately he became President of the United States, and his popularity rose to an unprecedented height. I believe that his fair and judicious attitude in handling that all-important committee was the major element in establishing for him the confidence of the people of the United States.

One of the members of the committee who had not been long in the Senate, and who was the junior Senator from his State, was Senator Burton. He came to the Senate the year the committee was organized and played a major role in the activities of the committee. I checked up on his activities. He made eight trips—one to New Orleans, to investigate shipbuilding; one to Kansas City, to investigate the coal and fuel shortage; one to Detroit, to investigate airplanes and tanks; one to the Pacific coast, to investigate the bottleneck in airplane production; one to Alaska, jointly with the Subcommittee on Military Affairs, to investigate defense expenditures; one to Columbus, Ohio, again to investigate the bottleneck in airplane production; one to Maine, to investigate wood pulp and its production; and one to north Africa and the Middle East during the readjustment period, to consider the question of surplus property in its relation to the readjustment to peacetime.

It was not a paid investigator who did all that. It was a member of the committee, a junior member of the Senate who saw an opportunity to serve his country as a member of the committee better than he could probably serve it in any other capacity.

I dare say that today only a few Senators can recall on what other committees Senator Truman served. I dare say that only a few Senators, those who knew him most intimately, can even remember on what other committees Senator Burton served besides the Truman committee.

The Truman committee was of great importance to America. It called forth the best efforts of its members. It called upon them to lay aside the ordinary assignments on committees, in order that they might investigate and make known to the people of America, when their sons were dying, when farms were being taken away from their owners for war purposes, when factories were being closed down, and the whole life of the Nation disrupted and thrown into uncertainty, whether there was dishonesty and corruption in connection with the war effort. Such investigations cannot be made in a few days.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this is one of the most important decisions the Senate will be called upon to make at this session. Members of the minority charge that we are motivated by political considerations. Now that we are the majority, we wish to carry on in the same fine tradition in which President Truman carried on when he was a Senator; the same high, nonpartisan tradition in which Senator Burton carried on. He did a great work. He subjected himself to the troubles and trials of travel. He analyzed the facts and wrote reports. The first appointment President Truman made to the Supreme Court was none other than that same junior Senator from Ohio who had been a member of the committee which meant so much to the people of the United States.

I say that the action proposed by the majority does not violate the spirit of the Reorganization Act. I, too, served on the committee which helped draft the act. I, too, signed the report. But the report did not contemplate doing away with this all-important committee, whose activities have been conducted in such fine fashion. No other committee, not even the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, could do as well. The latter committee was not established with any idea of taking over this responsibility. Six Members of the majority on that committee have indicated that they do not want this responsibility. The opponents of the resolution say that they want a wide-open investigation, but they want the responsibility placed in the hands of a committee on which six Members of the majority have indicated that they have enough to do, and that they do not want to devote their time to this important work. In my judgment this special committee is the most important investigating committee the Senate could create. However, we are not actually proposing to create it. We are merely asking that it be continued in the same nonpartisan fashion in which it was created and in which it has continued up to this time.

I do not question the qualifications of any member of any standing committee. No doubt the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments were assigned to that committee because they were especially interested and qualified, but they do not want added to their duties this tedious task of investigation which would take hours of time and miles of travel, and would interfere with their efforts to render service to the people of the United States. I say to Senators on this side—and not from a partisan standpoint—that in a republic there is only one way the people can investigate an administration when it is so all-powerful, and that is to elect representatives to the side opposing the administration. I say that to discontinue this special committee would be, in my judgment, a violation of the trust of the people of the United States, who gave us control of the Senate, although by a slim majority, and while there is still in power an administration which has built itself up during the past years of public spending. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has a herculean task if it can trim down the departments, without going into another field which other Senators, as members of a special committee which has jurisdiction, are willing to investigate so that they can live up to the obligation which the people of America placed upon us by their votes. I do not question any Senator's motives; but I say again that we shall violate the trust that the people have reposed in us if we do not continue this special committee, which will be composed of Members who will be willing to do all that former Senator Burton, of Ohio, was willing to do, and all that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has been willing to do, and what other Senators of their type will be denied an opportunity to do, if the investigation is handled by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

I do not like the charge of partisanship; but it is strange indeed that the other side now stands soldidly against continuing the special committee, now that we have become the majority and for the first time would have a majority on the committee and be able to roll back the curtain and say, "We want to ascertain what was done with the money of the people after we joined you in voting to draft every able-bodied boy in America and send him to strange, far-away places and face death in order that we might continue to be a representative republic, a free nation, where the people by a majority vote in free elections can by mandate call for an investigation of the executive departments."

In my judgment, we must now carry out that mandate, which, to my mind—and I speak again only for myself—is a definite direction to look behind the curtain of secrecy not only in the War Department, the Navy Department, and the other executive departments, but in every branch of the Government, whether executive or any other, and trace down the culprits who benefited from the wealth of America while we poured out our blood and flesh all over the world, that we might continue as a free, representative nation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the previous agreement, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is now recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield for 1 minute. I do not have very much time.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to say that it seems to me that about the only conclusion which can be drawn from the speech of the Senator from Illinois is that if this investigatory work is entrusted to a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, a majority thereof will not be Republicans. I desire to point out that if it is entrusted to a subcommittee of that committee my party will have the majority of the members on that committee. I wish to point out, further, that I am satisfied that every member of that committee, if given this great responsibility and trust, will live up to his obligations under the direction and leadership of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], who is also a member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

I think an attempt is being made to draw partisan lines, but it is just as evident on the Republican side of the aisle as on the Democratic side; and if we want to make a really nonpartisan approach to the question I suggest that we proceed under the standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems to me a very strange spectacle that on the closing day of this debate, any Senator should charge, as we have just heard, that six members of the committee which under the Reorganization Act is charged with the duty of investigating all departments, at all levels, are unwilling to undertake the task, and do not want to assume the responsibility. I hold in my hand a list of the membership of that committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

GEORGE D. AIKEN, of Vermont, chairman; HOMER FERGUSON, of Michigan; BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER, of Iowa; JOHN W. BRICKER, of Ohio; EDWARD J. THYE, of Minnesota; JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin; and IRVING M. IVES, of New York.

Those are the Republican Members. There are seven of them on that committee, and I should be surprised to learn that any six of them or any one of them would be unwilling to discharge any duty imposed upon the committee by the Senate of the United States. If any member of that committee, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, is unwilling to discharge the duties incumbent upon the committee, he ought forwith to resign from it.

Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] said he deplored the injection of partisanship into this debate and then he proceeded immediately to inject it. It has been so long since I made a partisan speech on the floor of the Senate that I have lost the art, if I ever had it. I shall not indulge in any partisan remarks now.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] resorted to the technique of insinuating that there must be something that those on this side of the aisle desire to cover up, or otherwise we would not be voting for the Tydings amendment to the pending resolution. He referred to the fact that a special committee was appointed to investigate Pearl Harbor. The circumstances under which that committee was set up are well known. The prospects were that there would be two investigations carried on simultaneously, one in the Senate and one in the House. In order to avoid duplication, it was felt—and, I think, rightly so—that there should be a joint committee of the two Houses. That joint committee was authorized and appointed, and I think it conducted a very constructive, comprehensive, and thorough investigation.

With respect to special committees, I take the same position on the floor now that I took when the Democrats were in the majority. I take the same position now that I would take if we were still in the majority, because when I voted and spoke for the Reorganization Act, I thought, and I now think, that we intended to funnel all investigations and all legislative action and all legislative responsibility into the channel of the standing committees whose jurisdiction we have now specifically defined. In the Reorganization Act 175 duties are charged to the 15 Senate committees thus set up.

I do not claim that the creation of this special committee violates the letter of the Reorganization Act. If it will satisfy the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and other Senators, I am willing to say it will not violate even the spirit of the act itself, as finally enacted. But it does violate the spirit that actuated the Senate of the United States when, almost unanimously, it wrote into the act a provision prohibiting in the future the appointment of special committees. It is the spirit of what we did last year, regardless of the language of the act, which we are violating here today if the special committee is created.

Mr. President, there was created from among outstanding citizens of the United States a National Committee for Strengthening Congress. The chairman of that committee was Mr. Robert Heller, a very distinguished industrial engineer. He testified extensively before the joint committee, the La Follette-Monroney committee, at the time hearings were being held on the Reorganization Act. I hold in my hand a statement issued for release yesterday, January 21, in the morning newspapers by that committee through its chairman, Mr. Heller. I shall not now read it because I do not have time to do so; but I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks in connection with a telegram which I have received and which I read:

JANUARY 20, 1947.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

We who worked for and supported passage of the Legislative Reorganization Act consider current proposals to create special committees a serious threat to integrity of reform program. Perpetuation of these special committees would imperil keystone in the arch of congressional reorganization. The public interest demands defeat of these proposals.

ROBERT HELLER,
Chairman, National Committee for Strengthening Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter submitted by the Senator from Kentucky will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The National Committee for Strengthening Congress, composed of leaders of many civic and professional groups and of spokesmen for American business, labor, and agriculture, representing every section of the country, today warned the Senate and the people against adoption of two resolutions pending in the Senate that would establish or continue special investigating committees in the fields of war contracts and small business. These resolutions, the national committee stated, would jeopardize the integrity of the congressional reform program.

The national committee stresses the fact that these special committees would invade the jurisdiction already assigned by the revised Senate rules to the new standing committees of that body on the armed services, executive expenditures, and banking and currency, whose members are fully competent to carry on the contemplated investigations.

"Moreover," the national committee points out, "the standing committees of the Senate have been authorized by the Legislative Reorganization Act to exercise continuous oversight of the execution of the laws by the administrative agencies within their respective jurisdictions. They are being equipped with professional staffs and expert investigators to assist them in performing their oversight function and have been armed with the subpena power for this purpose. Hereafter, save in exceptional circumstances, the investigatory function of Congress should be performed by its standing committees, which have been empowered and equipped for the purpose, instead of relying upon special investigating committees, which are sporadic in nature and cannot introduce legislation to give effect to their recommendations."

"The ban on special committees should be preserved," continues the statement, "for the following additional reasons:

"The reformed Senate rules limit Senators to service on two standing committees each so that they can meet their legislative responsibilities more effectively. If, in addition, Senators are appointed to serve on special committees, the burdens of committee work will be correspondingly multiplied and the old evils of poor attendance and scattered attention will return.

"Creation of one or two special committees now will pave the way for the establishment of a rash of special committees with inevitable duplication of the work of the standing committees and unnecessary large-scale expenditures. It might also lead to a revival of the use of staff personnel borrowed from the departments with all the disadvantages of that practice.

"Creation of special committees to deal with subjects already assigned to standing committees will also be a burden on, and impair the efficiency of, the executive agencies of the Government by requiring their officials to repeat their testimony on the same subjects before several committees of the Senate."

Chaired by Robert Heller, Cleveland management engineer and author of a well-known report on strengthening the Congress, the national committee urges the Senate in the interest of efficient legislative organization and operation, to maintain the integrity of the standing-committee structure and to reject all efforts to undermine it. "Now is no time for backsliding," concluded Mr. Heller.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is there any Member of the Senate who is willing to say that Mr. Heller has something which he desires to cover up, that he is actuated by any devious purpose and wishes to conceal from the American people some fact which had its existence as a part of the war effort?

Mr. President, there has just been handed to me by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] a letter signed by Mrs. Anna Lord Strauss, president of the League of Women Voters of the United States. It might be well for me to read it at this time:

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1947.

The Honorable GLEN H. TAYLOR,
The United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TAYLOR: It has come to our attention that there is considerable discussion of the possibility of creating additional special committees in the Senate rather than abiding by the spirit of the Congressional Reorganization Act of the last session. It seems especially unfortunate to us that some of the functions of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments might be put on the shoulders of a special committee, such as by continuing the War Investigating Committee. Such an opening wedge is apt to result in many special committees and a general weakening of the powers of the standing committees. The great strides forward which were made by the reorganization would then be lost.

Since you are undoubtedly aware of the possibility of decreasing the responsibilities of the Committee on Executive Expenditures and are probably as concerned as we are, we wish just to point out to you at this time that the League of Women Voters will stand behind all efforts to prevent such a move.

Sincerely yours,
ANNA LORD STRAUSS,
President.

Does any Member of the Senate charge or suppose that the League of Women Voters, an outstanding nonpartisan organization of voters, extending into all parts of the United States, desires to cover up or conceal something because it wishes to have what we understood to be the spirit of the Reorganization Act lived up to?

Mr. President, in times past many outstanding investigations have been conducted by standing committees of the Senate of the United States, not by special committees; and, similarly, many well-known investigations have been conducted by standing committees of the House of Representatives. Among them were the following: In the Forty-eighth Congress the star route mail frauds were investigated over a period of many months by the then House of Representatives Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. The Pujo investigation, in 1912 and 1913, which was very largely responsible for the development of the facts which resulted in the passage of the Federal Reserve Act, was carried on, not by a special committee, but by the standing Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives. The Teapot Dome investigation in 1923 and 1924, with which all of us are familiar, was conducted, not by a special committee, but by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the United States Senate. No one ever complained that that was not a complete and thorough investigation. The investigation of the Federal Farm Board, in 1932 and 1935, was conducted by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate. The civil liberties investigation in 1936 was conducted by Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, and a subcommittee composed of some of the members of the Committee on Education and Labor of the United States Senate.

In 1932 an investigation was made of the operations of the Stock Exchange and of allied subjects, and that investigation was carried on for nearly a year and a half or 2 years. It was not conducted by a special committee; it was conducted by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate. It resulted in the enactment of the Securities and Exchange Act, regulating the conduct and the sale of stocks and other securities in the United States. The situation and facts which finally led up to the enactment of the Railroad Financing Act were investigated in 1935 by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the United States Senate.

Mr. President, today one of the standing committees of the Senate is the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. That committee is composed of 13 members, 5 of whom are experienced investigators. As against that committee, there is a proposed special committee of 10 members, only 4 of whom would be experienced investigators, and there would be vacancies which would have to be filled. Certainly those who might be appointed to fill those vacancies would not be experienced in the work formerly done by the special commiteee.

For these reasons, as well as others which I might state if I had the time, I shall vote for the Tydings amendment, believing, as I do, in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; believing that it has the integrity, the ability, and the will to do a job of which the Senate will be proud when it is finished.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the time of the side of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has expired.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] has two and a fraction minutes remaining.

Mr. BREWSTER. I understood that I had 3 minutes remaining, Mr. President.

I yield whatever time remains to me to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I wish to make only one or two observations. I speak, not as a member of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, but as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

First, Mr. President, let me say that I have talked to every member on the majority side of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I think every member on the majority side of that committee has expressed himself on this issue, with the exception of the chairman, who I believe has not definitely stated the way he will vote on the pending question. But, aside from the chairman, every member on the majority side of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has stated, either on the floor of the Senate or privately, that he does not believe the committee is at this time so equipped as to be able to take over the matter of the continuance of this most vital activity, the work of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. President, let me also say that the question before the Senate at this time is the Tydings amendment, submitted by the able Senator from Maryland. If there is solicitude for the sanctity of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, let me say that the Tydings amendment assaults that committee directly, because in so many words it limits the scope of the investigation which may be made by that committee. If I read the Reorganization Act correctly, by that act the scope of the activities of that committee is unlimited. But the very language of the Tydings amendment states that it "shall be limited, with respect to the subject matter authorized to be studied and investigated therein." And then it delineates the limitations of the investigation power of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I am opposed to that, and I think every other member on the majority side of the committee is opposed to such an assault on the sovereignty of the power of that committee. So, Mr. President, we observe that the Senator from Maryland himself has made the first assault against the Reorganization Act, by attempting to limit the authority of a standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will proceed to vote on the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] to Senate Resolution 46.

Mr. TAFT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. When a definite time is fixed for a vote, is the suggestion of the absence of a quorum in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be the view of the Chair that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is a part of the process of voting. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	Murray
Baldwin	Hawkes	Myers
Ball	Hayden	O'Conor

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] to Senate Resolution 46.

Mr. MORSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will not be read, but it will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The modified amendment of Mr. TYDINGS is as follows:

In the amendment proposed by Mr. BREWSTER, strike out all after the word "hereby" in line 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "transferred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress (except as hereinafter provided): Provided, That on and after the date this resolution is agreed to, the authority contained in such Senate Resolution 71 shall be limited, with respect to the subject matter authorized to be studied and investigated therein, to excessive profits, fraud, corruption, waste, extravagance, mismanagement, incompetence, and inefficiency in expenditures, connected with the prosecution of the national defense program for World War II: Provided further, That the foregoing authority shall be further limited to transactions which occurred within the United States (including Hawaii, Alaska, Panama, and Puerto Rico) prior to June 30, 1946: Provided further, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments shall report to the Senate the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, as soon as practicable, but in no event later than January 31, 1948: Provided further, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is specifically authorized to obtain from the Treasury Department or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the income-tax returns or any information indicated therein of any individual, person, copartnership, association, trust, or corporation deemed by said committee to be useful or necessary to it for the proper discharge of its duties under this (S. Res. 46) resolution."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). For some years I have had a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. At the beginning of the present session we reached an agreement to continue that general pair. The senior Senator from New York is absent today because of illness. I understand that if present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is absent because of illness in his family, would vote "yea" on the pending question if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—45

NOT VOTING—3

Overton	Reed	Wagner

So Mr. TYDINGS' amendment, as modified, to Mr. BREWSTER's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Several Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if this amendment shall be agreed to there will then have to be a vote on the resolution itself. As I understand, this vote is merely on an amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] to the original resolution reported by the committee. Is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. There will be a further vote after the vote on the so-called Brewster amendment.

The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. TYDINGS and other Senators demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote, the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is absent because of illness, and I withhold my vote because of my general pair with him.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is absent because of illness in his family, would vote "nay" on this question if present.

I announce also that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], whose general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has previously been announced, would vote "nay" on this question, if present.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—49

Aiken	Ecton	O'Daniel
Baldwin	Ferguson	Revercomb

NOT VOTING—3

So the resolution (S. Res. 46), as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore and referred as indicated:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Joint Resolution 2

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing and petitioning the Congress of the United States to pass appropriate legislation to control and eradicate and prevent from entrance into this country of the disease of animals known as foot-and-mouth disease (apthous fever) now present among animals of several states of the Republic of Mexico

"Whereas the United States Department of Agriculture has been advised by the United States Embassy in Mexico City, Mexico, that the disastrous livestock disease known as foot-and-mouth disease has appeared and exists widespread in several states of the Republic of Mexico, and diagnosis of the disease has been confirmed by both Mexican and United States Government veterinarians who have conducted extensive field investigations; and

"Whereas the United States Government through action of the Secretary of Agriculture on December 30, 1946, added Mexico to the list of countries in which foot-and-mouth disease exists and thereby prohibited the importation into the United States from that country of cattle, sheep, or other domestic ruminants, or swine, and the meat thereof; and

"Whereas in accordance with the terms of the Mexico-United States Sanitary Treaty, the United States Department of Agriculture will continue to cooperate with the Mexican authorities in dealing with this serious threat to the livestock industries of the two countries, including the production of meat and milk in the United States; and

"Whereas the present outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in the Republic of Mexico apparently has existed there for some time and may be associated with the importation of Zebu bulls from the Republic of Brazil; and

"Whereas there have been outbreaks of foot-and-mouth disease in the United States in the past, including two in the State of California, and these have been eradicated only after great expenditure of public funds and losses to livestock owners; and

"Whereas the method of eradication used in previous outbreaks in the United States has been to destroy or burn or deeply bury all animals in affected herds and those directly exposed thereto, the last outbreak in the United States being in 1929; and

"Whereas any disruption of our food-producing processes would be serious to the public welfare, the disruption of commerce and the adverse effect on the economic life of the people would be disastrous, and the difficulties and expenses that would be entailed in effectively eradicating this disease, should it spread to California, would be tremendous; and

"Whereas time is of the essence if this disease is not to be permitted to spread to the United States; and

"Whereas it appears that the Government of the Republic of Mexico may need immediately the expert assistance and the financial help of the Government of the United States in curtailing this disease; and

"Whereas it is to the immediate interest of all the people of the United States that the disease be controlled and eradicated in the Republic of Mexico before it is permitted to spread to the United States; and

"Whereas the full administrative and financial assistance required by the United States to deal with the present outbreak in Mexico may not be included in existing laws, involving expenditures in a foreign country in the interest of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary, by legislation or otherwise:

"(a) To appropriate adequate funds to the United States Bureau of Animal Industry to prevent, control, and eradicate foot-and-mouth disease in this country;

"(b) To provide assistance to the Republic of Mexico in locating, diagnosing, and eradicating foot-and-mouth disease in that country to the fullest extent permitted and requested by the appropriate officials of that country;

"(c) To create a joint United States-Mexico Commission empowered to deal with this problem and to control, eradicate, and prevent the spread of foot-and-mouth disease in each of said countries;

"(d) To close the United States-Mexico border, in addition to the present quarantine regulations, to all importations or traffic of whatever kind or nature that may carry the infection of the foot-and-mouth disease into this State; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby directed, forthwith, to send a copy of this joint resolution by telegram and by mail to the President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the United States Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and to the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives in the Congress from the State of California."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"Senate Joint Resolution 1

"Joint resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States in relation to providing funds to complete the veterans' temporary emergency housing program

"Whereas the Seventy-ninth Congress of the United States appropriated $445,000,000 for the construction of 200,000 units of temporary housing to house veterans of World War II; and

"Whereas the National Housing Agency and its constituent unit, the Federal Public Housing Authority, because of increasing material and labor costs now estimate that only 150,000 units can be completed within the limitations of existing funds; and that only approximately 10,000 of the 18,000 units scheduled for California can be completed; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States through its agencies and departments aforesaid has entered into contracts with the State of California and with California communities and educational institutions to provide such temporary housing; and

"Whereas the State of California and California communities and educational institutions on the basis of such contracts have appropriated and expended more than $11,000,000 in reliance upon the good faith of the Government of the United States acting through its departments and agencies aforesaid; and

"Whereas California veterans and their families desperately need all such promised temporary housing: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully memorialized and requested to take such steps as may be necessary to provide sufficient funds to complete all temporary housing units for veterans for which the State of California has appropriated funds to match contributions of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President pro tempore of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California."

A letter in the nature of a petition from Rev. Ellsworth M. Smith, minister for the Church of All Peoples, praying for the enactment of legislation providing refuge and homes for the displaced peoples of Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Hon. Senator CAPPER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

1. Keep tariffs high enough to allow cost of production and all products of the Nation.
2. No products shall become a substitute at a lower price.
3. That Congress alone make all trade treaties.

C. C. HALL,
President.

PROTEST AGAINST LIQUOR ADVERTISING IN NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a letter written by Arthur K. Taylor, of the Taylor Machine Co., Baltimore, Md., addressed to the editors of Time magazine expressing his disapproval of liquor advertising in newspapers and magazines. I fully approve of the sentiments expressed by Mr. Taylor, and as I have a bill before the Senate on that subject, I ask unanimous consent to present the letter for appropriate reference and printing in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was received, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The EDITORS, TIME,
New York, N. Y.

SIRS: Noting the great space and prominent positions given to the liquor interests by many of our publications, would it not be to the public welfare if a plan could be worked out by which the amount of space given to such advertising would be governed by the space in the same publications accorded to authenticated reports of the fatalities resulting from automobile accidents and fires caused by drink, as well as such domestic tragedies as in that restrained account of his father's history recently written by Upton Sinclair? As you know, such cases could be multiplied by the thousands.

By such a plan distillers would be able to use a small part of their enormous financial resources in publishing the oceans of testimony of a sort that would give a more realistic picture of their finished product, and so by this means earn space for further advertising what has at times been referred to as "an aid to gracious living."

If they believe their business and product represents a national asset, this would give them an opportunity to test their faith.

While many will consider this letter silly, its publication would at least serve to remind us that there is another side to this rapidly growing evil.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR K. TAYLOR.

Gen. Casimir Pulaski, which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, and appears under a separate heading.)

ON-THE-JOB TRAINING FOR VETERANS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill with the stated purpose to do equal justice to all veterans with respect to on-the-job training.

This measure might also be called a bill to play square with veterans.

I believe that every Member of this body is familiar with the fact that under Public Law 679 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, a measure which was somewhat hurriedly enacted, to say the least, and which became law after the last session of the Congress had adjourned, a so-called ceiling was placed upon the total amount which a veteran might receive while engaged in on-the-job training.

I do not know the genesis of this limiting provision and I have no desire to attempt to place blame for it. The blame must rest upon the Congress as a whole. I say "blame" advisedly because the effect of this provision has been to say to the veteran that he may not take advantage of the job training Congress has promised him unless he can live on a maximum of $175 a month, if he has no dependents, or $200 a month if he has dependents, no matter how many those dependents may be.

This is telling the veteran that he must do with $175 or $200 what today requires $250 or $300 or more per month.

This is obviously unfair. It is not in accordance with the promises the Congress held out to our veterans.

I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate with a lengthy discussion of this matter. I am confident that a majority of this body would vote today, if given the opportunity, to correct this injustice; and I hope the committee to which my bill is referred will act with all possible speed to give the Senate the opportunity to vote on this measure.

The bill itself is simple. The first section amends paragraph 6 of part 8 of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a) so as to put the language of that paragraph back in substantially the same form in which it was originally passed by the Congress, and to eliminate the so-called ceiling.

Section 2 of the bill provides, in effect, that veterans who have been shortchanged under the provisions of Public Law 679 shall be paid the difference between what they got and what they should have been entitled to.

Section 3 of the bill provides that amounts collected by the Veterans' Administrator from veterans, as "overpayments," shall be returned to the veterans from whom such collections were made; and that demands for the return of such alleged overpayments, which are outstanding, shall be rescinded.

I believe this bill will meet the approval of every veteran and of every veterans' organization and of the overwhelming majority of the people of this country, who desire to play fair with the men who fought their country's battles. I commend it to the attention of every Senator and I want to stress the extreme emergency of acting promptly in this matter. Thousands of veterans are today struggling under conditions which, if not actually desperate, border closely upon it. This is not a situation to be corrected some time months in the future; it is a situation which cries out for correction at once. I earnestly hope that the Congress, in its wisdom, and responsive to the will of the people, will not long delay the corrective.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 324) to do equal justice to all veterans with respect to on-the-job training, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING OF VETERANS

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it has been apparent for some time that the limitations previously imposed by the Congress upon the benefits that may be received by the veterans who are taking either school training or vocational training have made them now, in view of the risen cost of living, grossly inadequate.

For example, the last increase in the subsistence allowance was in December 1945 from $50 to $65 for students without dependents and from $75 to $90 for students with dependents.

A study by the American Council of Education of 132 educational institutions shows that the cost of room and board alone for veteran students has risen over 25 percent in 15 months. This survey does not include other living expenses, such as: Clothing, medical care, and other items which enter into the cost of living.

The survey shows that 66 percent of the veterans without dependents and 81 percent of the veterans with dependents live off the campus of these institutions where the cost of living is higher.

The national average monthly room-and-board cost for single students on the campus is $53.53; off the campus, $64.14. For married students living on the campus with no children, $78.86; off the campus, $105.19. Married students with one child, on the campus, $99.68; off the campus, $130.77. Married students with 2 or more children, on the campus, $106.53; off the campus, $140.56.

Between October 1945 and October 1946 food prices for moderate-income families in large cities increased about 30 percent, clothing about 12½ percent, house furnishings about 14 percent.

MAXIMUM FOR ON-JOB TRAINING

Prior to December 1945 the Veterans' Administration paid a proportionate amount of a full subsistence allowance to a veteran pursuing a course of training on a part-time basis.

It paid a veteran who pursued a course of training on the job and received compensation for productive labor incident to his training full or part of the full subsistence allowance, provided this amount and his wages did not exceed the wage he would receive upon completion of the job training.

According to the Veterans' Administration, abuses crept into the Administration of this provision of law. A course of training on the job became financially more attractive than education at a college or university.

Employers began to convert normal full-time jobs into job-training to enable veterans to get subsistence allowances.

On the basis of four major principles recommended by the Veterans' Administration, Congress, in August 1946, set ceilings of $175 for veterans without dependents and $200 for veterans with dependents—combined allowance and earnings on the job.

A study by the Veterans' Administration shows that beginning journeyman rates are usually well over $200 a month and as often as high or higher than $300 a month. Apprentice wage rates start at about 30 to 50 percent of the journeyman rate and rise in the last stage of training to about 75 to 90 percent of the journeyman rate. Very rarely does the last training rate equal the journeyman rate.

In the job-training program the middle and higher paid jobs predominate over the relatively unskilled and lower paid.

The allowance of 7 percent of the trainees—400,527—in July 1946, would be discontinued and the allowance of 46 percent would be reduced as a result of the $175 and $200 limitations, immediately, according to a study of the Veterans' Administration. The immediate effect of the ceilings would be greatest on the Pacific coast and in the New York, Columbus, and Chicago branch area, the high-wage regions of the country.

The high-wage occupations would be affected most; for example, 70 percent of the trainees in construction occupations would have their subsistence allowances immediately reduced or discontinued. This was also true for professional and managerial occupations.

The eventual effect of the ceilings: 79 percent of the July 1946 trainees had objective wages—the journeyman wage—in excess of the current ceilings, and eventually would have their allowances reduced or discontinued as they neared the end of their training program and approached their objective wage through periodic increases in training wages.

Ten percent of the July 1946 trainees without dependents would have their allowance denied and another 48 percent reduced allowances. Six percent of trainees with dependents would have their allowances denied and 45 percent reduced allowances.

Subsistence payments to all veterans in training in January 1946 was $14,738,441 to 24,627 veterans, and in November 1946, $155,324,085 to 614,882 veterans.

PROFESSIONAL TRAINING

The bill would make medical or dental education and training of auxiliary and medical personnel available to many who otherwise cannot afford it. It would enable many on-force doctors and dentists over 25 years of age with dependents to take advantage of the education benefits. The vast majority of armed forces and other related branches, according to a medical survey of the American Medical Association, want considerable further education after discharge.

The American Medical Association in August 1946 reported the smallest enrollment in freshmen classes of the Nation's medical schools in 17 years. Two reasons have been advanced for the slump: First, the refusal to defer young men from the draft to carry premedical studies, with the consequence a very few are adequately prepared for medical school. Second, a large number of young men whose studies were interrupted by the war have given up plans to enter medical training because of the long years of study and training and financial cost.

The broadening of educational benefits is necessary to meet the health and educational needs—in terms of more doctors, dentists, teachers, and so forth—of the Nation.

The amendment, therefore, proposes to make the increases which I have identified.

I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference the bill to which I have referred, and to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks a memorandum giving the basis for the introduction of this measure.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 326) to amend the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 with respect to the education and training of veterans, introduced by Mr. PEPPER, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement submitted by Mr. PEPPER was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bill is briefly summarized as follows:

1. It removes the requirement that the educational course be initiated not later than 4 years after discharge or termination of the war. The removal of this provision would enable veterans to take jobs now in time of prosperity in order to earn some money and to go to school when jobs are not plentiful.

2. The provision limiting the period during which benefits can be obtained to 9 years after the official termination of the war is removed.

3. The 4-year limitation on educational benefits is removed. Veterans are given entitlement to 1 year of education plus a period equivalent to length of military service.

4. For qualified veterans who desire to complete preprofessional or professional courses of education the maximum period is increased to 9 years, regardless of length of service. There is a great shortage of physicians, dentists, nurses, chemists, and others relative to the needs of our people. It is urgent that we provide veterans with the opportunity for professional training so essential to the future of our country.

5. Monetary benefits to veterans obtaining education are increased from $65 a month to $100 for those without dependents and from $90 for those with dependents to $125 for those with one dependent and $150 a month for those with two or more dependents.

6. The maximum limit on benefits and earnings from employment during job training is raised from the present $175 a month to $350 for those without dependents and from $200 a month to $375 for those with one or more dependents, and to $400 for veterans with two or more dependents.

Reports indicate present benefits are not nearly enough to sustain the average veteran attending school. Dormitory rents have increased in reecnt months. The cost of living has increased sharply since the increase of benefits over a year ago. Thousands of veterans have found it almost impossible to provide shelter, food, and clothing for their families or themselves on present allowances. Many veterans are finding that they can no longer make ends meet even though they are working on the side.

The amendment to increase the maximum for job-training allowances and earnings would remove many of the hardships which were incurred as a result of the present limitations of $175 and $200 a month. The aims of the program to teach skills to veterans and at the same time bring apprentice wages from industry to the level of the journeymen through public subsidy have been adversely affected by the present limitations. In the highly industrialized States, particularly with their attendant high wages, the present ceilings have not had a good effect on the program. For married trainees with dependents the ceilings have proved to be quite a hardship. The amendment would help to relieve the situation and still prevent major abuses from arising under the job training.

RAILROAD REORGANIZATION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution relating to railroad reorganization, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 65) submitted by Mr. REED (for himself and Mr. MYERS) was received and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Whereas many railroads in the continental United States are in the hands of receivers and trustees because of insolvency proceedings brought under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, or through equity court procedure; and

Whereas the mileage of these railroads is approximately forty thousand, and the investment in road and equipment amounts to several billion dollars; and

Whereas many of these roads entered bankruptcy in 1933, 1934, 1935, or 1936, 10 to 14 years ago, and the earnings of these roads in recent years have been sufficient to accumulate large cash amounts, and have placed such roads in a solvent position; and

Whereas, according to the best information available, court proceedings involving some very important railroads are in such a condition that it is difficult if not impossible to approximate the time when reorganization under section 77 will be completed, and it is feasible for a number of these roads to retire part of their indebtedness, at a discount, and to refund or extend the maturity date of the balance of their indebtedness, and it further appears desirable to discharge such railroads from bankruptcy proceedings without the necessity of drastic reorganizations under section 77; and

Whereas the continued holding of roads that have become solvent in trustee or receiver operation as insolvent roads, and further efforts to reorganize, under section 77, railroads which no longer need such reorganization, are contrary to the general public interest and contrary to sound public policy; and

Whereas the President of the United States has joined with Congress in going on record in favor of modifications of present reorganization legislation and in favor of the principles proposed by the appropriate committees of the Senate and House of Representatives in 1946, and in favor of the principles enacted by Congress in 1946, and the President has further urged the strengthening of such proposals and the adoption of further provisions to carry out those general principles: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate is authorized and directed either as a committee, or through a duly constituted subcommittee, to make an investigation of the conditions surrounding the operation and handling of said railroads by trustees and receivers through the period of receivership or trusteeship; to ascertain the extent to which there should be elimination or reduction of any of the exceptions heretofore proposed to legislation on this subject; to inquire into the causes for the failures, (a) to reduce the interest rates of railroads in receivership and bankruptcy proceedings; (b) to arrange for the reduction of the rates of interest payable by such railroads on their outstanding indebtedness; (c) to arrange for the refunding and extension of maturity dates of part or all of the indebtedness of such railroads while in the hands of the courts; (d) to call for the tender of bonds and the purchase of bonds of such railroads either at a discount or otherwise, by the receivers or trustees, out of funds in their hands; (e) to discharge such railroads from court proceedings without the necessity of being subjected to drastic reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and (f) to return such railroads to their owners as promptly as possible; to investigate the fees paid trustees, receivers, counsel, bankers or bank syndicates, committees and experts, and any and all matters relating thereto, and to ascertain the methods of reducing reorganization expenses and the possibility of eliminating, by discharge of railroads without further reorganization proceedings under section 77, the necessity for any further reorganization expenses under elaborate and therefore costly reorganization proceedings; to ascertain what legislative methods can be provided to enable railroads now undergoing reorganization to obtain management local to their lines of operation and to the communities, shippers, and passengers they serve, and to enable the owners of such railroads to secure control free from domination by interests which have not received the affirmative and express vote of the security holders subsequent to reorganization; to ascertain what voluntary methods and steps additional to those proposed in legislation adopted by the Seventy-ninth Congress on this subject will be useful in expediting the discharge of railroads from costly bankruptcy and reorganization proceedings without the necessity of drastic reorganizations under section 77, and to permit reorganization by voluntary proceedings in a businesslike manner and on a businesslike basis; to ascertain what methods and procedures, additional to those provided in legislation passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress on this subject, will be useful for the protection of railroad employees and other investors in the stocks of the railroads. The committee is directed to report to the Senate as early as practicable, with such recommendations as to changes in existing law as may be found desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement respecting the joint resolution which has just been submitted.

The Seventy-ninth Congress by overwhelming votes in both Houses adopted railroad reorganization legislation. This legislation was sent to the White House shortly before the close of the session.

On August 13, 1946, the President issued a statement in which he detailed his approval of the purposes and objectives of the legislation passed by Congress. However, he thought that the legislation should be made stronger in certain respects and indicated that he believed that Congress could pass such a stronger bill in the ensuing session.

Immediately thereafter a bipartisan statement was issued by members of the conference committee which had dealt with this legislation, to the effect that a measure would be promptly introduced to carry out the wishes of the Congress, as voted by both Houses, and with the additional suggestions made by the President.

It would be useful to have the President's statement, together with the bipartisan statement just mentioned, included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM OF DISAPPROVAL

I am withholding my approval of S. 1253, entitled "An act to enable debtor railroad corporations, whose properties during a period of 7 years have provided sufficient earnings to pay fixed charges, to effect a readjustment of their financial structures; to alter or modify their financial obligations; and for other purposes."

Even though I am familiar with the deficiencies and inequities and the evils that exist under section 77 of the present Bankruptcy Act, I fear that this new bill would not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended.

The bill contains two sections, the first of which contemplates the prevention of bankruptcy proceedings where practicable; the second contemplates the reorganization of certain railroad carriers by the institution of proceedings under section 1 of the bill for readjustment of their financial affairs.

Objections which I have to the bill include the following:

The bill fails to direct specifically the immediate reduction of the grossly excessive interest rates now wasting the funds of the railroads in section 77 proceedings. Millions of dollars per year can be saved at once for each of the railroads in section 77 proceedings, by reducing the interest rates on their bonds and other debt down to the level of the interest rates paid by railroads not in section 77 proceedings. I reiterate a statement which I made in my message to Congress on the state of the Union which is as follows, "low interest rates will be an important force in promoting the full production and full employment in the postwar period for which we are all striving."

The bill does not adequately cure the evil, present in reorganizations under section 77, of permitting improper control of railroads after their reorganization.

The bill fails to provide full protection against forfeiture of securities and investments.

The level of fees and expenses in reorganization cases under section 77 has been excessive. This is not corrected in the bill. Affirmative provisions to curb this evil and to bring it under strict control should be included in any bill which may be enacted.

The bill excludes from its benefits certain railroads which should be brought within its provisions if it is to become law. In this regard it appears that the $50,000,000 limitation in section 2 of the bill would exclude some railroads for whose exclusion there appears to be no logical justification.

This bill fails to correct a serious abuse which I condemned in the course of the Senate railroad investigation. I refer to the abuse of diverting under cover of a reorganization plan, the funds of a railroad for the purchase of its own stocks in the market.

On the other hand, the bill does incorporate principles for which I was one of the sponsors in the Senate. I commend particularly the emphasis which the bill places on the principle that reorganizations must give primary consideration to the public interest, and to the best interests of the railroads which are being reorganized.

This requires, among other things, that reorganizations shall place control of railroads in persons primarily concerned with transportation for the communities served and for the Nation as a whole, without any strings direct or indirect, conditions or otherwise, to institutions or others in distant financial centers.

Such regard for the public interest will also help the stockholders, whether they be railroad employees who have invested in the stocks of the companies for which they work, or ordinary investors, desirous of safeguarding their investment, but not of helping any interest to capture control of their railroad. These stockholders, whom the bill justly seeks to protect against forfeiture, can and should get such protection, but without enabling any financial interest to use such legislation to acquire control.

By withholding my signature to this bill I do not intend to indicate that I favor the pending reorganization plans. I am in agreement with those objectives of the bill which prevent undesirable control of the railroads, either immediately or within a few years, and which prevent forfeitures of securities.

I believe that the next Congress can pass a bill which will meet the stated objections and which will be in the best interests of the public, the railroads, the bondholders and other creditors, and the stockholders.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 13, 1946.

STATEMENT OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS REGARDING FURTHER LEGISLATION

The railroad reorganization bill, S. 1253, was the culmination of over 3 years of intensive effort to save $2,000,000,000 of investments made by hundreds of thousands of stockholders and junior bondholders in railroads now in process of reorganization under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act. Those investments will be wiped out under pending plans of reorganization unless legislation is enacted to prevent it. This bill was designed and passed by the Congress primarily for that purpose.

Those who have supported this legislation will be definitely heartened by the declaration of principles contained in the President's memorandum stating why he withheld his signature from the bill. For it is clear that the broad principles announced by the President are shared by the proponents and supporters of this legislation. Broadening of the bill to meet the requirements of the President's objections can and will be drafted. Such a bill will be promptly introduced at the next session of the Congress. As Congress has already overwhelmingly committed itself to such legislation and the President has declared that he, too, favors its purposes, the prompt enactment of such a measure appears certain.

While this legislation was under consideration in the committees of the Senate and House, a number of courts and the Interstate Commerce Commission recognized the appropriateness of cooperating with Congress in meeting this public problem and abstained from taking steps which would have carried forward any of the pending reorganization plans under section 77. This was months before the legislation came up for a vote in either the Senate or House. Now that the legislation, both in the form in which it was reported by the respective committees of the Senate and House and in the subsequent form contained in the conference report, was passed by an overwhelming vote in each Chamber and the objectives of the legislation have received the approbation of the President, it is confidently hoped that the courts and the Commission will take no steps in support or furtherance of pending reorganization plans under section 77, but will instead await action by the Congress and the President on legislation giving effect to the principles favored by both.

CLYDE M. REED.
JAMES M. TUNNELL.
SAM HOBBS.
CHAUNCEY W. REED.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 14, 1946.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, preliminary discussions have already been agreed to with Members of the House, with a view to expediting this legislation in the Eightieth Congress. It is hoped that it can be taken up, in a preliminary stage, with the White House so that the greatest possible speed can be secured for the legislation to be finally enacted in the Eightieth Congress.

It will be useful for this purpose to conduct a brief inquiry such as was authorized by the Senate on April 1, 1946. In the Seventy-ninth Congress the former senior Senator from Montana, Mr. Wheeler, and the junior Senator from Kansas introduced Senate Resolution 192, providing for such inquiry. The terms of that resolution have been broadened to cover subsequent developments, including, in particular, the suggestions made by the President on August 13, 1946, as well as the advances made in the legislation passed by Congress on this subject toward the close of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Subsequent to the passage by the Senate of Senate Resolution 192, as well as prior thereto, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce held prolonged and exhaustive hearings on this subject, and thereafter submitted to the Senate a full and exhaustive report of pertinent facts, in Senate Report 1170.

The subject matter requiring inquiry is therefore now far more limited than even the limited subject matter called for in Senate Resolution 192 early last year.

In view of the accumulation of the great body of material in the hearings on Senate bill 1253, the legislation considered by the Senate in the Seventy-ninth Congress, none of the funds authorized under Senate Resolution 192 had to be expended. If the same economical handling can be effected in this Congress on the resolution now proposed, of course the same policy will be followed.

GAMBLING IN CONNECTION WITH NATIONAL SPORTS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution authorizing the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to make an investigation of the apparent raid of organized gambling upon organized national sport. I request that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 66), submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY (for himself and Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado), was received and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

Whereas organized baseball is an interstate system of commercialized sport operating throughout the United States under central management which exercises complete control wherever the game is played; and

Whereas professional football, hockey, basketball, and other sports are similarly organized and managed as commercial enterprises on an interstate or national scale; and

Whereas the American public supports these enterprises out of a love for athletic contests of skill and agility and in the belief that all such contests are played honestly by the players and managed honestly by the owners; and

Whereas athletic contests are an important source of tax revenue for the United States; and

Whereas there have been instances of attempts by gamblers and the underworld, by corrupting players and otherwise, to influence the outcome of such contests in order to enable them to make wagers, secure in their secret knowledge of the outcome of such contests; and

Whereas there have been numerous reports of an organized attempt by such gamblers to extend the sphere of their activities in baseball and other organized sports: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a thorough study and investigation with respect to the operation of professional sports contests, with particular reference to attempts at bribery and other corruption in connection with these contests and the extent to which Federal laws are being violated and the tax revenue of the United States affected.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire also to emphasize the necessity for this action by reading the following statement from the column of Westbrook Pegler as published in the Washington Times-Herald of January 17, 1947, a column in which he discusses the subject of baseball and gambling. He said in this column:

I anticipate that one eminent club in the major leagues will be secretly owned by the underworld soon through loans to an inept and stupid owner.

Yesterday in the Washington Times-Herald a sports columnist by the name of Jimmy Powers made this statement:

Gamblers still operate openly in many ball parks, waving fistfuls of currency and shouting odds.

I ask unanimous consent to have both articles printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAIR ENOUGH

(By Westbrook Pegler)

A short time after the death of Judge K. M. Landis, the baseball industry was invited to consider Elmer Irey as his successor. The owners chose, instead, Happy Chandler, of Kentucky, a politician and, by the process of that occupation, a Senator.

He was not a good Senator and the qualities which recommended him to his new employers were his defects, not his virtues.

They wanted a man less narrow-minded than the old judge had been and an optimist who would look for a silver lining in a sewer.

Mr. Irey was coordinator of the intelligence services of the Treasury. That means he was general manager of the Secret Service, the Narcotics and Alcohol Tax Units, and several other groups of investigators and fly cops. He was retired.

In his career with the Government, Mr. Irey had general charge of the investigations which turned up the evidence against the Pendergast gang in Kansas City, of which President Truman is a proud alumnus in affectionate defiance of our perfunctory morals; against the Huey Long gang and Al Capone.

This long experience necessarily made Mr. Irey familiar, as few other men are, with the personal relationships and the interlocking interests of the criminal underworld of New York, the Miamis and Hollywood, and the night club and radio departments of the mutually nasty amusement, gambling, and narcotic industries.

Now, professional—and, in some phases, amateur, as it were—sports are invaded by the same vermin who infest our other enjoyments.

Being apart from politics and objective by temperament, Mr. Irey would have come to the job of baseball commissioner free of the old associations and the debts of political gratitude which might handicap a man with Happy Chandler's history.

The proprietors of the major league teams are the trustees of a curious industry which is carelessly regarded as the national game of the great Republic. They have lowered the standards that Judge Landis maintained.

Landis was arbitrary and he invited damage suits by his decrees of banishment against individual rascals. He also excluded, on general, but beautiful, principles all race-track men and race-track money from the ownership of major league teams or firms.

This verboten was abandoned soon after his death.

Landis kept the players on warning to shun gangsters and keep out of underworld hangouts of politicians, crooked Hollywood movie and radio dignitaries, and bookmakers. That social demarcation has been obliterated.

The most conspicuous common resort in New York today of players, gamblers, face-makers, panoplied sound effects, and the lower parasites who feed off their boots, is a saloon which is mentioned so often in print and on the air as to seem to be the capitol of baseball. For that matter, if baseball has a capitol today, it is.

Mr. Irey is no longer a candidate for the job, if he ever was a candidate. I mention him in this connection only to emphasize the need of an uncompromising attitude in the industry toward the underworld and of a man on top who knows crooks in all guises and how they operate and cooperate.

Hollywood is not merely a branch office of the criminal underworld. It is an autonomous state of corruption, but with royal and diplomatic relations with other criminal sovereignties.

Gangsters have become powerful, even illustrious, and enjoy the status of "celebrity." The social standards of Hollywood permitted Willie Bioff, a brothel keeper, so foul that he had to take salt below Charlie Chaplin, to fraternize with the peerage in command of the industry.

A noted magnate of this art recently asked what was wrong with the movies and undertook to answer his own question.

He could not have understood if he had been told the truth, because the worst fault is the social and ethical squalor of his own friends. He would see nothing wrong with them, nor in his own mirror.

I say, let professional baseball go its dirty way. It is not, really, a public institution, anyway, and the nobility and moral splendor which it exploits for the profit of methodical mercenaries and noisy adventurers are an illusion of an affectionate public.

I anticipate that one eminent club in the major leagues will be secretly owned by the underworld soon, through loans to an inept and stupid owner.

If baseball never comes back to respectability, all right.

We had a Nation before we had professional baseball and our civilization will not explode if the ball yards are sown to apartment houses.

THE POWERHOUSE

(By Jimmy Powers)

NEW YORK, January 20.—All the average New York fan knows is that Larry MacPhail let him down. MacPhail's conscience must bother him because he acted strangely when telephoned by reporters. He was surlier and more ill-mannered than usual. Newspapermen are accustomed to his boorishness, but even the most callous, including our veteran Jim McCulley, were stunned. McCulley, incidentally, was the only baseball writer to vote for MacPhail recently when discussion of the award of a plaque for services to baseball was introduced.

GREENBERG CASE HARD TO TAKE

If MacPhail's explanation of why he did not go all out financially for Greenberg sounds silly just read all the quotes out of Detroit. One of the zanier reasons why Briggs bounced Greenberg is said to be an interview written by Dan Daniel which was reprinted in Detroit. Dan is one of Hank's best wishers. All New York writers are in Hank's corner and know him intimately. Hank is a clean-living gentleman, a distinct asset to any baseball roster in any city. If the Detroit owners are starting an economy wave or feel that they wish to build with younger men, that is their privilege. But to cut off a good and faithful servant in a cloud of "best interests" innuendos is something we find a little difficult to stomach at this time.

It was particularly untimely to see the backstage conniving that must have gone on to get around the waiver rule which is on the books to protect the fans from loss of good talent.

The best home-run hitter in baseball leaves one league and goes to another. To our mind that is not an honest interpretation of baseball law. There must have been collusion. We don't mind it in pro football, where many owners are gamblers and have their own peculiar set of ethics.

BASEBALL OWNERS HAVE STRESSED HONESTY

But baseball owners have always made a great point of stressing honesty. Here we have the Paris hocus-pocus and then the Greenberg hipper-dipper. We don't mind a few stupid elbow-benders or a fraud who will rob a kid prospect of his last nickel in exchange for a sermon. They make good copy. But when you get around to double-timing the rules by the owners, how long do you think it will take those money-doodles to seep down and stain the men in the ranks?

Greenberg isn't the first star to be waived out of a league on the grounds that none of the other clubs had any legitimate use for him. It is just that the Greenberg case is unusually raw and untimely.

Baseball cannot stand too many of these booby-trap lushes, these Hollywood divorce messes, these crooked dice hookups, slugging under the stands, Happy Chandler, the Mexican expose of how underpaid many of our best men are, the boost in ticket prices, the reserving of all seats in the house to bleed the last dollar out of the lowliest fan. Gamblers still operate openly in many ball parks waving fistfuls of currency and shouting odds.

MAYBE PEGLER IS RIGHT ABOUT PROFESSIONAL SPORTS

We once said to the owners, "Look, let's clean house thoroughly. Get another Landis in there. Insist that your athletes have clean private as well as public lives. Let's make baseball the last shining bulwark of impeccable honesty." And then what happened? Along comes a backstage hocus-pocus of the rules as evidenced by the Greenberg case. MacPhail shouts obscenely at inquiring reporters and we are told in effect to go and quietly drop dead.

Maybe Pegler is right. We may all live to see the day when professional sports are so thoroughly discredited that the ball yards will be sown to apartment houses.

It is gradually dawning on millions of fans that professional sports is not a community religion. It is a hard-boiled business infested by men who are frankly out to separate the fan from as much of his money as they possibly can. We think MacPhail, a shrewd businessman, made a big mistake in not grabbing Greenberg, because that would have been good business.

Evidently there are backstage deals where one owner waives a star out in return for favors rendered. MacPhail may have been handcuffed by obligations incurred in the under-the-bridge-at-midnight deal on Hank Borowy.

Another signpost, if we need any more signposts, which indicates the trend toward a lower standard of morals and ethics in high places is the general silence that greeted Judge Branham's report. The minor league czar stated: "Baseball today is shot full of corruption. * * * There is gambling everywhere." One minor league player who was receiving less money than a New York City garbage collector, was righteously banished and the owners then changed the subject. Corruption is like an iceberg. Three-quarters of its vicious depth is permanently hidden under the surface.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States is the governing body of the District of Columbia. Members of Congress in both the Senate and the House are interested in sports and are interested in keeping sports clean. The resolution which I have submitted on behalf of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] and myself affords the opportunity now for the leaders of organized sports to purge themselves of these charges.

STATEMENT OF QUESTION BEFORE VOTES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution which would require the Presiding Officer, prior to the calling of the yeas and nays, to state in brief form the substance of the issue to be voted on. All of us know, at the present time that often it is almost impossible for a layman reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to know just what the matter is that is being voted upon. Often he must leaf back through a dozen or more pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to learn the sense of the motion or amendment or resolution that is being decided.

To indicate the nature of each vote would require a very simple change in the rules which this resolution would effect. I believe that it would be instrumental in making for more intelligent understanding by all who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the issues that are decided upon here in the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 67), submitted by Mr. WILEY, was received and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of rule XII of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Immediately prior to calling the names of Senators after the yeas and nays have been ordered, the Presiding Officer shall state in brief form the substance of the issue to be voted on."

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution relating to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 20, appointing a special committee to study the problems of American small business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 20), which is as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of 12 Senators, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small-business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate during the Eightieth Congress, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to request such information from any departments and agencies of the Government, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report the educational material and data on such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

SEC. 3. The special committee created pursuant to Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to October 8, 1940, as extended and supplemented, is hereby terminated.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I submit a substitute for the resolution which has been made the unfinished business, which I send to the desk.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that I did not hear what the Senator from New Hampshire said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has offered a substitute for Senate resolution 20, which will be stated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I did not yield to the Senator for the purpose of offering a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator from New Hampshire has offered a substitute for the resolution which is now the unfinished business. He has a right to do that.

Mr. TOBEY. That is what I offered, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire can offer the substitute resolution later. It is not in order until after the Senator from Nebraska has concluded his observations.

INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS OF FISHERIES

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on December 18 representatives of all the fishery industries on the Pacific coast, as well as the governors of California, Oregon, and Washington, met at the request of Hon. William L. Clayton, Assistant Secretary of State, and submitted to him a proposal to place fisheries on a higher level in the State Department in regard to international negotiations. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the recommendations.

There being no objection, the recommendations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE INTERNATIONAL ASPECTS OF FISHERIES AND THE NECESSITY FOR STATE DEPARTMENT CONSIDERATION THEREOF AT A HIGH POLICY-MAKING LEVEL

To the Honorable WILLIAM L. CLAYTON,
Under Secretary in Charge of Economic Affairs, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It will be remembered that on December 18, 1946, Governor Wallgren, of Washington, personal representatives of Governor Warren, of California, and Governor Snell, of Oregon, together with representatives of the Pacific Coast fishery industry, and the largest American fishery labor union, conferred with you relative to the urgency of the State Department recognizing the necessity for creating a high post within the Department to deal specifically with fisheries as an active, continuing problem and not as a collateral commodity. At that conference, you requested that we submit a very brief brief on the subject.

Accordingly, we respectfully represent:

1. In 1936, when the fisheries' problem in the north Pacific was brought to the direct attention of Secretary Hull, he immediately appreciated the importance of the subject and the necessity of high-level treatment if international complications and potential conflicts were to be avoided. Initially, he appointed a committee of three top men in the Department and shortly thereafter assigned the subject to his closest friend and confidant in the Department, Judge R. Walton Moore, and gave him a special adviser to work under his immediate supervision.

2. Judge Moore passed away in 1941 and Assistant Secretary Breckenridge Long succeeded to the assignment. There was no other change in jurisdiction or status.

3. Shortly after Secretary Stettinius' advent in the Department, he undertook a blanket reorganization and in January 1944 fisheries were assigned to the Commodity Division of the Economics Branch. It is respectfully submitted that the reorganizers lacked familiarity with the actual and potential problems of fisheries' activities and thought that "fisheries" and "fish" were synonymous and were nothing but a commodity.

4. A serious effort was made to point out the specious reasoning of the reorganizers to the Assistant Secretary then in charge of the Department's organization. His explanation of the treatment which fisheries had been accorded was that fisheries were an anomaly; that they did not seem to fit anywhere in the Department's organization diagram; hence there was no other place to put them than into the Economics Division.

5. Until our conference with you, it has been impossible to interest any responsible officer of the Department in the status of fisheries within the Department's organization. We have maintained that fisheries do not belong in the Economics Division and that they are an activity involving serious, unique, and international complications, and not a commodity, and as such an activity should be the direct and immediate responsibility of an official of the Department occupying a policy-making position. The industry, the six United States Senators from the Pacific Coast States, and the three Governors of these States, have all endorsed the position we have advanced, but during the 3 years since fisheries were demoted in the Department and shifted from their proper sphere of diplomacy to that of economics you, Mr. Under Secretary, were the first to express a willingness to consider the situation upon its merits instead of treating it as a closed issue. In addition, as the facts were recited, you immediately recognized the potentialities.

So much for the historical background.

WHAT ARE SOME OF THE PROBLEMS OF FISHERIES WHICH REQUIRE A HIGH OFFICIAL AT THE POLICY-MAKING LEVEL TO HAVE FISHERIES AS A PRIMARY AND SPECIFIC RESPONSIBILITY?

It is understandable that one unfamiliar with the subject might assume fisheries to be a commodity rather than an activity. He does not realize that the activity which produces this particular commodity has such a distinctive locus and nature as to make this activity actually unique. The fish must be found, reduced to possession, preserved, and distributed before it becomes a commodity.

The commercial fisherman must locate an area where commercially valuable fish may be caught in quantities sufficiently large to support the venture, and having found such an area, must be protected in the right to take fish therefrom. These areas and the right to take fish therefrom are what we term "fisheries."

Ocean fisheries have a distinct position in international affairs of a diplomatic and legal nature. In the past they have caused warfare. In fact, shortly before World War II they almost precipitated war between Russia and Japan, for on more than one occasion blood was shed and vessels sunk as the result of armed conflict between Russian and Japanese fishermen. The records of your Department show that in 1938 the Japanese were induced by the Department to withdraw from Bristol Bay and it is respectfully represented that if fisheries had not been given consideration at the highest level at that time armed violence between the Japanese and our own fishermen would probably have taken place.

There have been, are, and will be North Pacific problems as to the Russian, Japanese, Canadian, and American fishing vessels in this area. There have been, are, and will be problems in the Western and Southern Pacific and in the North Atlantic. Some of these problems are acute and are already overdue for adequate attention. As to some steps which might have been taken, we may even now be too late.

From the time of Hugo Grotius fisheries have coped with the merchant marine as an incentive to the development of the law of the sea. This law should not be and is not static, but its growth cannot properly be placed in the hands of economists. It demands the attention of trained diplomats and international legal experts. International law is a growing and vital implement to international peace. But international law, including that relating to fishing, is in a state of flux. The United States should lead in the molding of sound principles by intelligent planning and aggressive action.

The right to fish carries with it the corresponding duty to preserve the area for continuous fishing. As has been demonstrated in the case of Pacific coast halibut, an ocean fishery properly managed through international understanding can be maintained at what is practically a maximum production level. Fisheries as a resource must be preserved, and unless the rights are defined and rules of reason promulgated, areas which we have discovered and developed may well be exhausted not only by our own fishermen but by the fishermen of other countries bent on ruthless exploitation. Only intelligent international understanding can accomplish the desired result. An official at the high policy level personally conversant with this subject and heartily loyal to this Nation's objectives must be responsible for the future of our fisheries. Only such a person can conduct the program on an adequate diplomatic basis.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE PRESENT METHOD OF HANDLING FISHERIES?

Fisheries are principally considered as a commodity by the Department and are relegated to a stratum so far below the policy-making level that it is impossible for any policy-making official to be properly aware of its problems or the consequences of proposed action by this or any other nation.

When any Department policy is formulated in any field it should be known by the policy makers themselves whether it will affect our fisheries. If there is any effect, the policy should not be promulgated or changed without consultation with the fisheries industry. Under the present organization not only the industry but high policy-making officials are unaware of the indirect treatment being accorded fishery problems, sometimes not even of direct action concerning fisheries.

For example, a new concept of international law was expressed in the fishery proclamation of September 28, 1945, by President Truman after exhaustive consultation with and advice from the fisheries industry. Although the language was somewhat weakened without knowledge of those who had worked on its formulation, the proclamation affirmatively declared a vested interest in those fisheries which the nationals of the United States have discovered and developed and provided a means for their proper exploitation and preservation. It was further asserted that fisheries which have been solely developed by us will be controlled by us and that those which were jointly developed with others will be controlled jointly by those who have historically participated therein. The accompanying official release boldly stated that now the United States will be able to protect effectively, for instance, its most valuable fishery, that for Alaska salmon.

It is respectfully submitted that nothing is known to have been done by the Department to implement that declaration of national policy effectively or otherwise. On the contrary, as you will remember, it was suggested by the earnest economist in charge of fisheries that the proclamation was then being interpreted and that a new policy might be evolved—what, we do not know. The industry was not advised of the discussions or determinations within the Department but it strongly opposes any weakening of the President's pronouncement. We submit the course being pursued may vitiate 10 years of effort of the fishing industry and that the spirit and purpose of the President's mandate should not be tampered with. A study of the pronouncement itself and the history leading up to it discloses that it is essential that this matter be handled by high officials who are familiar with international law and international diplomacy.

Economists do not have the training nor background to handle the diplomatic and legal facets of the problem. That is not their field. They may perform a useful function in advising and counseling on the impact of a national trade policy of this or another nation but are in a foreign field when they attempt to formulate policies of a diplomatic and legal character.

CONCLUSION

This presentation has completely omitted producing statistics as we are of the opinion that you yourself recognized the fisheries problem as being one of an activity and not a commodity. This became obvious early in the discussion, and for that reason we are not devoting any argument to meet the frivolous concept that fisheries just mean fish and as such require no different treatment from other food products such as corn, wheat, or potatoes.

We ask that the status of fisheries in the Department shall be restored to its position under Judge Moore and Assistant Secretary Long. We submit that the misunderstanding which existed has continued far too long and to the detriment of this Nation's interests. Other nations not only recognize the necessity of placing fisheries on the very highest policy level but in addition (e. g., Canada) frequently have a member of the cabinet with the title of minister of fisheries or minister of agriculture and fisheries, who, of course, has direct contact with the foreign-affairs department at the very top level of his government. Apparently the only reason that fisheries were demoted in our departmental set-up is because the reorganizers drew a diagram in the drafting of which they completely overlooked fisheries and the importance of fisheries. It would seem that if the organizational diagram does not lend itself to placing fisheries in an appropriate status, the diagram itself must be defective and should be changed. Surely the public interest is paramount to the maintenance of the symmetry of some diagrammatic scheme.

Your suggestion that an industry advisory committee be formed is a step in the right direction, but such a committee cannot serve its most useful purpose unless it is advisory to a policy-level official. It is respectfully suggested that you give serious consideration to the assignment of fisheries as a primary responsibility to some present high Department official who is willing to assume all that goes with the responsibility or if, as we suspect, the present high officials are already too overloaded to be able to give adequate sympathetic attention to this field, then that the office of Special Assistant for Fisheries be created by the Secretary to serve until Congress authorizes an additional Assistant Secretary. (The fact that some particular person may have failed to function satisfactorily in that capacity as to petroleum is no indication of any sound objection to the plan.)

In addition, it is hoped that you will carry out your suggestion and appoint an industry advisory committee. In that case, however, it is suggested that such a committee should act directly under you, Mr. Under Secretary, and that you yourself should preside over the committee. When a special assistant, as proposed, is appointed the committee can be transferred to him, but if such a committee is to accomplish the desired objectives it should have direct contact with an official of your Department on a policy-making level.

Upon behalf of the Pacific coast governors' fisheries delegation.

Respectfully submitted.

MON C. WALLGREN,
Chairman of the Delegation.

LOSS OF DRIVING PRIVILEGES BY MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin for last Saturday, January 18. The title of the editorial is "Sad and Sorry." It deals with a subject sometimes considered controversial. I refer to the former First Lady, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The editorial discusses the action of New York State in depriving Mrs. Roosevelt—temporarily, I hope—of the privilege of driving her automobile, and Mrs. Roosevelt's reaction to this decision as described in her daily newspaper column.

The reason I am asking that this particular editorial be included in the RECORD at this particular time is that the owner of the Evening Bulletin, Maj. Robert McLean, who is also president of the great Associated Press, has just been honored by the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia with its medal of achievement for "outstanding leadership in establishing, maintaining, and extending an informative press free of domination by Government or special interests." The presentation was made last Friday at very impressive ceremonies marking the two hundred and forty-first anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin. I had the honor to participate in those ceremonies and to say at that time that to my mind Major McLean represents in the field of information and news a modern-day Ben Franklin of whom all of us in Philadelphia are justly proud, and that his devotion to the truth is a day-to-day and year-after-year tribute to the memory of Ben Franklin.

This editorial on Mrs. Roosevelt bears out what I have said about Major McLean. It is an outstanding example of fair, decent journalism. The paper in which it appears, the Evening Bulletin, in known as a conservative publication. Politically, it seldom sees eye to eye with me or my party editorially. However, I will say that in its news columns I have always found it sincerely anxious to present the news factually and accurately, and I do not think one could ask for anything more than that.

A newspaper like this, then, can proceed, as the Bulletin has done in this editorial, to comment on the much publicized incident of Mrs. Roosevelt's loss of her driving privileges with kindness and with the human understanding that has always been associated with Benjamin Franklin.

As for the great woman about whom this editorial is written, Mrs. Roosevelt, and the gracious manner in which she acceded to a situation which would find many lesser mortals highly indignant, I commend to the attention of the Senate this editorial from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAD AND SORRY

With the disarming frankness characteristic of her speech and writings, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt admits she is a little sad over losing her driver's license, as penalty for an accident resulting from her dozing at the wheel of her car last summer.

But she also admits the "justice of punishment for endangering other people." This is refreshing contrast to the attitude of many motorists who get in trouble with the law. They may confess their offense, yet be highly indignant when required to pay for it. Some will go to great lengths to evade the consequences of their admitted misdemeanors.

Though sorry for her share in the accident, and sad because she may not drive a car, Mrs. Roosevelt seems to find comfort in philosophy. "At all times and as long as one lives, life administers disciplines, and it is in accepting and obeying them that one learns." A great deal has been learned when a man or woman honestly admits a mistake and accepts the consequences without complaint. It is not easily done; punishments of any sort tend to arouse pugnacious instincts and the mood of self-pity and self-excusing. But Mrs. Roosevelt admits her fault, has taken her medicine and asks no favors. Many of her fellow citizens will like her better for it.

SENATOR McMAHON'S POSITION ON THE INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, at the end of the remarks which I shall now make, a speech which I delivered before the American Bar Association on October 29, 1946, on the subject of the control of atomic energy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I have requested this permission because it would seem to me to be apropos that I restate my position on the control of atomic energy, in view of the fact that a story has appeared in the Hearst press and has been circulated from coast to coast, under the byline of William Flythe, which purports to say that I have changed my position, which is so well known, on the international control of atomic energy. I denounce that story as pure fabrication, as utterly and completely untrue.

I called Mr. Flythe on the telephone, when the story was called to my attention. I read the story to him; and he told me that he knew the story was untrue, that it did not appear in the newspapers as he had written it, and that it had been changed after it left his hands, and before it appeared in the press.

I regret the necessity of calling this matter to the attention of the Senate, and I regret the necessity of calling it to the attention of the country, because my relations with the members of the press have been pleasant and agreeable, and I have received nothing but courtesy and consideration at their hands. So it is with a good deal of regret that I am forced to make this statement about the matter.

I have received hundreds of telegrams and letters from people all over the country who ask me why I have changed my position, which I have held so tenaciously since the first days after the Senate met following the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Therefore, Mr. President, as I have stated, I have requested unanimous consent to have inserted at the end of my remarks the speech which I delivered before the American Bar Association. That speech fully states my position, and from it I have not receded in any degree.

EXHIBIT A

SPEECH OF SENATOR BRIEN M'MAHON BEFORE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, OCTOBER 29, 1946, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

In discussing the great and terrible problem of the international control of atomic energy before a group such as this, I am glad to be able to turn to some of the larger legal and political problems involved. All of us here are lawyers. We know that the strength of government, the peace and prosperity of societies, the security and happiness of individuals depend upon law. We know above all that our democratic civilization and the development of free societies has been possible only through the growth of law. We look to the law to protect us in our property and in our civil rights. We, as citizens, look to the law to establish those conditions in our political affairs under which we can carry on useful and productive lives. We look to the law and to the power which supports the law to keep the peace among us.

If a condition of peace is to exist in the world, we must establish in international politics the reign of jurisprudence; the rule of law. We must set up the machinery and the guiding principles by which disputes among nations can be settled and their conflicts of interest can be reconciled without resort to force. We have just fought a long and costly war to prevent the world from being dominated by force. We must now begin the long, slow task of bringing into being the laws and the administrative instruments that must dominate the world in the place of force.

I need not engage here in any flights of rhetoric to describe what will happen if we fail. The picture of the next war has been painted by far greater word artists than I. In the next war our schools, our churches, our courthouses will be turned into heaps of pulverized stone. And that love of truth, of God, and of justice which has built them will be buried in the rubble. We will die and our children will die, and all that has made life full of hope and meaning for us will disappear in the dust of our ruined cities. We can be sure that this system of law, whose basis is popular consent and whose purpose is justice, this system of law to which you and I have given our lives, will not survive. The race of men that will emerge from another war will be men of yet more unstable natures than we; they will be poorer men; they will be more nervous, more frightened, more superstitious than we; they will be men living without hope of justice or of happiness; they will not be free men; they will be men who have lost all the instincts of freedom. This Nation, if she should gain the whole world in another war, would surely lose that love of law and liberty under the law which is in truth her very soul.

These are all simple, well-known facts of the situation we face in the world today. We must avoid war. We must set up the legal and political system by which this can be done. The statesmen of the world early recognized this and set up at San Francisco over 2 years ago the United Nations organization. The Senate and the people of the United States recognized it and ratified the United Nations Charter. To the orderly growth and development of that organization as a means of handling disputes among nations, we must look for our only real hope for the future.

Now the explosion of the atomic bomb in the world as it is today has merely multiplied and intensified our terror. Our first, most natural impulse has been to tackle the problem directly and to try to relieve the extreme intensity of this terror. Perhaps some people have thought that if we could get security against atomic weapons, we could go on our old ways with impunity. If we could know that the world was not going to be blown up, we could continue to fight among ourselves as we always have done. If only we could make war safe again and let the world become its old familiar self once more! If only atomic energy would leave us alone so we could live like men and fight in peace! But to most of us, it has been clear all along that there is no real security against the bomb except the elimination of war, and there is no real possibility of that except by the setting up within the United Nations of a government based on law, possessed of overwhelming force, and supported by the confidence of peoples of the earth. We cannot achieve world government in atomic energy alone, but we can achieve the beginning of world government by achieving world government over atomic energy.

When the world was a place of limitless distances, in the days of the oxcart and the sailing vessel, peaceful states might survive by reaching an understanding with their neighbors. Today, in the age of supersonic speed, in the age of globe-circling aircraft, there is no nation on earth which is not neighbor to us. We must find a way to live in the same small world with all of them, or we must remove those of them we do not like from the face of the earth. I shall discuss the alternative later in my talk, but now I must proceed on the assumption that it is better to live and let live. And the only way that this can be done on the international level is the same way it is done on the local level—by the rule of law.

The cooperation of the nations of the earth in the establishment and functioning of a system of international law may, in time, lead to the establishment of some form of world government. Surely a man of vision may see in the seed of the United Nations the fruit of world government. However, it would be foolhardy to expect a seedling to bear fruit immediately. With nations, as with nature, first things come first. And the present task, the immediate task, which confronts the men of our day is to bring about the conditions of soil and climate in which the seedling of peace may take root and, it is to be hoped, may one day flourish like the proverbial green bay tree. The world is postured for peace because the world is depleted by war. I know of no people which wants war. Yet peace is not merely the absence of war. Those who desire peace must wage peace as strenuously as ever war was waged. That means fighting to remove the causes of war. That means struggling to bring under control the fears which lead to war. The one fear which, above all others, haunts the minds of knowing men today is the fear of the atomic bomb. If we can put the harness on atomic power, we may be able to control the gods of war.

It is true that the atomic bomb is not the only terrible and dangerous weapon of war. By the newest refinements in biological, chemical, toxicological, and even psychological warfare, it may be possible to kill, or at least neutralize, as many persons as quickly and effectively as with the atomic bomb. But the power of nuclear fission has been demonstrated to the world. Hiroshima and Nagasaki haunt our dreams. Men know that in dealing with atomic energy, one is dealing with the basic power of the universe. "The force," as the President stated it, "from which the sun draws its power." Men know, too, that this great power need not destroy mankind; it is capable of bringing to each living soul a richness and fullness of life hitherto undreamed of.

That is why the control of atomic energy is a good place to begin the control of war. If we can find a formula for the international control of atomic energy, then I feel sure we shall have the basic formula for controlling all weapons and all warfare.

Now comes the question: What kind of control shall we have?

Whatever the plan, it must provide effective control—that's basic.

Within the fair limits of practical justice, it must be acceptable to all parties. That's basic, too.

A plan may be as lovely as a flower and as shining as a star, but if it isn't accepted, it can hardly be very effective. Of course, acceptability is not the only criterion of suitability. Mr. Gromyko, the Russian delegate to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, has offered a plan acceptable to his country. However, we do not find it suitable because we do not find it provides an effective form of control.

We must, however, do all we decently can to avoid stalemate. Stalemate is a very ineffective form of control over so powerful a force as atomic energy. By the same token, the sand is running out. We cannot and must not permit a filibuster in the United Nations Commission. Palaver in the parlor must not be so long engaged in as to permit too long a time for deviltry in the kitchen. Mr. Baruch, the American delegate to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, says we cannot compromise on basic principle. No American can disagree with that. Mr. Wallace asks for a little "give" on both sides for the sake of securing the effective control the world needs so badly. If compromise is possible, then surely there can be no reasonable objection to it, provided we do not compromise on principle. So the problem reduces itself to an analysis of what is basic to our needs.

Mr. Baruch has recently restated succinctly what he refers to as "the irreducible minima essential to the control of atomic energy." These include full control through an international agency of the materials and means of atomic energy production, free access for international inspection and provision for swift and certain punishment of illegal activities in the atomic field. I have maintained for over a year that these are the indispensable elements of an effective program to safeguard the world from atomic warfare.

When Mr. Gromyko offered the Russian plan, which seemed to consist primarily of a unilateral agreement to outlaw atomic warfare, without effective enforcement provisions, there seemed little likelihood of common understanding. When Premier Stalin made the statement that the world was in no immediate danger of war, I called on him, in a press interview, to remove entirely the danger of a third world war by agreeing now to the internationalization of atomic energy, including an effective inspection system. "Just prohibiting the use of atomic energy for war purposes is not enough," I told him. "International atomic control with effective inspection is necessary to enforce a decent and moral way to share the fruits and wealth of atomic energy. It is because we do not wish to intimidate anybody or to be intimidated ourselves that we have taken the lead in seeking a decent, effective agreement on atomic energy."

I was pleased a short time later when the Russian member of the scientific and technical committee, a subcommittee of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, approved a report holding effective inspection and control scientifically feasible. You may be sure this report was not approved without consultation with the Kremlin.

Perhaps this is an earnest gesture of greater agreement to follow. Since the Russians are compelled by the logic of facts to agree that international inspection and control is scientifically feasible, perhaps, who knows, they may even be compelled by the fact of logic to agree that it is politically feasible as well.

It is our proposal for the abandonment of the veto as regards atomic-energy matters that seems to rouse the most inflexible Russian resistance, although I cannot help feeling that their deepest held objection has been to a system of inspection.

The American proposal, if I understand it correctly, maintains that the issue of the veto is basic and a question of principle, one on which we cannot compromise. The Russians say they will not give up the veto since that would weaken the Security Council and the United Nations. Our delegate says: "There must be no veto to protect those who violate their solemn agreements not to develop or use atomic energy for destructive purposes." Surely no sincere lover of peace can disagree with Mr. Baruch's purpose on this point. It may, however, as a way out of the dilemma, be pertinent to inquire, whether the same purposes may not be served by some means which leave our principles unsullied and, at the same time, are acceptable to the Russians. If such a means can be found, surely it will be worthy of the end attained.

Our delegate's aim, as I understand it, is to prevent violators of an atomic energy treaty from securing protection under the veto. He wants such violators punished and punished in a correct manner with legal authority. Sometimes the way out of the densest forest is through the simplest footpath. And I would like to offer a simple solution.

Why is it not possible for the treaty itself to specify the violations calling for punishment and to name the punishment which will be meted out to the violator? The question of violation would be a question of fact for the World Court and that Court's judgment would be final. The nature and extent of punishment is already ascribed in the original instrument of agreement. There can be no question of veto; no opportunity for escape. Swift and certain punishment would await such violations as (1) illegal possession or use of an atomic bomb; (2) illegal possession, or separation, of atomic material suitable for use in an atomic bomb; (3) seizure of any plant or other property belonging to or licensed by the Authority; (4) willful interference with the activities of the Authority; (5) creation or operation of dangerous projects in a manner contrary to, or in the absence of, a license granted by the international control body.

If the delegates have stated their purposes openly and sincerely (and I most certainly believe they have), then it seems to me that this plan must meet Mr. Baruch's objectives at the same time that it eliminates Mr. Gromyko's objections.

This, of course, concerns only the question of the veto. But if we make headway in solving this problem, then the chance of solving our other problems is just that much better. We cannot afford to leave any stone unturned. We cannot leave untried any pathway to successful agreement, because the alternative to mutual agreement is the possibility of mutual extinction. We must learn how to live together on this earth as the only alternative to what we have already learned: how to blast each other into oblivion. If we wish to live, we must live in peace, for if we have a third world war, it will be the one we looked for in the other two—the war to end war. There can be no war when there are no people left to fight it.

I believe that democracy provides the finest way of life for the greatest number of people of any form of government that man has ever known. I believe that democracy is alive and vital and growing. I do not fear the competition of communism or fascism in the economic, political, or intellectual fields. It is only those who have little faith in democracy who could think of advocating war against communism for fear we could not meet the competition.

While I do not fear the competition of communism as a way of life, I do recognize that the fundamental peace treaty that has to be made is not with Italy, Finland, Bulgaria, or even Germany. The peace treaty most fundamental to the peace of the world is the peace treaty between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Until each is certain of the other's peaceful intentions, there can be no peace, because fear and suspicion lead to the race for arms and an arms race almost inevitably leads to war. I am mindful of the words ascribed to the dean of Columbia University that politicians are scientific ignoramuses and scientists are social and political illiterates. It has remained for a businessman, Harry Winne, vice president of the General Electric Co., to call attention to the fact that the present atomic arms race may bring to an end or at least seriously retard the possibility of the constructive use of atomic energy for the good of mankind. "Such a race," he pointed out, "would demand the cornering, concentration, and use of all available uranium. This might mean its rapid exhaustion and the whole process of development might wither like a flower as a result."

That is what may happen if we do not end the atomic arms race by international control. On the other hand, if we do obtain effective international control, the development and application of atomic energy for the welfare of humanity would proceed at an unprecedented and truly astonishing rate. This, in itself, might serve to eliminate many of the causes of war. If atomic power decreases the importance of oil sufficiently, it may no longer be worth fighting over. If radio-activated materials teach us enough about photosynthesis so that we can artificially produce sufficient food for all our people, will we not have taken a big step toward the elimination of war?

Our real purpose, after all, is to begin under international auspices the cooperative development of atomic energy everywhere on the earth and to foster that cooperative spirit among men out of which world law and a world society can grow. When we and the other nations of the world are ready to enter enthusiastically into such a development, then we need have no fears for the peace of the world or the misuse of atomic energy.

Surely it is no sign of bad faith, no cause for despair, that we in America and the leaders of Russia are not prepared to join hands this minute and announce that a world society has been formed and the millennium has arrived. The United States of America were formed originally into a confederation because they had a war to fight. They held together only after great debate because they had a continent to exploit. Atomic energy lies before us now like a great undeveloped continent. Let us trust and hope that the peoples of the world may develop it together.

This is an important thing to do. But let me repeat that we cannot achieve world government over atomic energy while we have world chaos everywhere else. We must do what we can everywhere to promote the growth of law and justice among nations. The hope for our survival and for the survival of all that we believe in lies in avoiding war. As lawyers and as students of human society, you and I know that we can hope for nothing from the growth of tyranny in the world. In the growth of law and the instruments of orderly representative government lies the future of this country as the last, best hope of free men on earth.

INDICATION ON THE CALENDAR OF THE AMOUNT OF PRIVATE CLAIMS BILLS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate in preparing the calendar shall, in the case of private claims bills, show the amount of the claim in the left column of the calendar under the number of the bill.

I am submitting this order because the jurisdiction over claims bills has been transferred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and such bills are being introduced in considerable number. So I think it would expedite the business of the Senate if Senators, when examining the calendar, were able to read the amounts involved in the case of private claims bills.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order I have submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be read, for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate in preparing the calendar shall, in the case of private claims bills, show the amount of the claim in the left column of the calendar under the number of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin will yield to me, let me ask him whether the order comes as a recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which he is the chairman.

Mr. WILEY. I believe I discussed it in the committee. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] can verify that. However, I think there can be no objection. The order is simply that the calendar shall show the amount involved in the case of such bills. I think that matter was discussed at the last meeting of the committee.

Mr. HILL. I take it that so far as the Senator from Wisconsin recalls, there was no objection.

Mr. WILEY. I think there was no objection. There could not be, because the only purpose is to expedite the handling of such business on the floor of the Senate. The order has no other purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let it be understood that I do not lose the floor by yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin, as I have done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Is there objection to consideration of the order submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I respectfully ask the Chair to have the order restated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be restated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate in preparing the calendar shall, in the case of private claims bills, show the amount of the claim in the left column of the calendar under the number of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

There being no objection, the order was considered and agreed to.

GENERAL PULASKI MEMORIAL DAY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the other day there came up in the Judiciary Committee four similar joint resolutions authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski's Memorial Day, for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski. Inasmuch as four joint resolutions of a similar nature had been prepared and introduced, I prepared one, giving credit for its preparation to all four Senators who were concerned. I sent forward the joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me inquire when the joint resolution was reported by the committee.

Mr. WILEY. It would have been reported at the last meeting we had, but there were four joint resolutions on the same subject. I consulted the Parliamentarian of the Senate, and I consolidated the four. Now I am requesting unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which I have sent to the desk. I make this request in order to get the joint resolution off the committee calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I judge that the Senator from Wisconsin is really requesting a suspension of the Senate rule. Is not that true?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; to a certain extent that is what I am doing.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, we can be too rigid about the Senate's rules, and yet we should not be too lax in our disregard of them. I shall not object if there is any special or particular reason for the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. But unless there is some particular reason, I think it should follow the usual course, namely, go to the calendar and be taken up in the regular order.

Mr. WILEY. I wish to say to the majority leader that I am sure he understands that if objection is made, it will be necessary to send the joint resolution back to the committee, and subsequently the committee will have to report it, at which time it will bear the names of the four Senators who have introduced similar joint resolutions. As the matter now stands, four similar joint resolutions have been introduced. Every year, for a number of years past, one joint resolution on the subject has been passed. However, in view of the fact that four Senators have introduced similar joint resolutions this year, the course I have outlined has been proposed, following the suggestion of the Parliamentarian.

Mr. WHITE. I was not troubled because of the inclusion of additional names of Senators as sponsors. I was concerned only because, as I understand the matter, the joint resolution has not been on the calendar and did not lie over, as the Senate rule requires. I shall gladly waive the rule if there is a substantial reason for disregarding it.

Mr. WILEY. The substantial reason, if any, is, as I stated, to expedite the handling of the matter. My request is of no particular consequence, except for the fact that if it is not granted, the measure will have to be returned to the committee, which already is loaded with hundreds of matters which come under its jurisdiction. If objection is made, the measure as it is will have to be returned to the committee, and then the committee will have to get the other four measures off its calendar.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, if I may be heard in the Senator's time, let me say that the joint resolution does not create a permanent nonjudicial or judicial holiday.

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. It merely names one day of the present year as a day for the commemoration of the memory of the late General Pulaski.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me repeat that I am not concerned about the substance of the joint resolution. I am concerned about what it seems to me is a disregard of the rules of procedure in the Senate. I do not like to see the rules disregarded unless there is some real reason for doing so.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if I correctly understand the joint resolution, I have no objection to its purpose. I have no objection to setting aside the day as is proposed. However, I do think the joint resolution should go to the calendar. I can see no reason why the rule should be set aside and why this joint resolution should not take the regular procedure and the regular order of going to the calendar, where Members of the Senate will be advised that the joint resolution is on the calendar, so that if any Senator has objection or if any Senator desires to propose amendments, objection may be made or amendments may be proposed. Therefore, Mr. President, I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILEY. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report the joint resolution from the Committee on the Judiciary, for the calendar.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, introduced by Mr. WILEY (for himself, Mr. FERGUSON, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. LODGE), was received, read twice by its title, and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

WONDERFUL WISCONSIN LOOKS FORWARD TO 1948 CENTENNIAL, MARKING CENTURY OF PROSPERITY AND PROGRESS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, on May 29, 1948, the Badger State will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of its admission to the Union as our thirtieth State. During the whole of next year, all of the three and one-fourth million souls in America's Dairyland, and the State's countless sons and daughters who have made their mark in the far-flung corners of the world, will rejoice on the completion of the Badger State's first century of statehood.

Splendid plans are being made throughout our State for the celebration of this unforgettable occasion. Every citizen is pitching in with typical Badger enthusiasm.

PLANS IN WASHINGTON

I have personally taken three principal steps to assist in the plans:

First. Coin: Introduced Senate bill 126. This bill; as amended, instructs the Director of the Mint to mint some 500,000 50-cent coins in commemoration of the Wisconsin centennial. These coins can be sold at par or at premium by our State treasurer and can help greatly to finance the centennial celebration.

Second. Stamp: Written to the Postmaster General, urging the preparation of a special centennial stamp. This will be a prize addition to countless stamp collections. So, too, the commemorative coin will be long prized by coin collectors as well as average citizens who do not have that hobby but who will be delighted to buy the coin as a hallowed memento.

Third. Exhibition: Made preliminary arrangements with the Library of Congress for the holding of a 3 to 4 months exhibition in the Library of Congress, commemorating the Badger State's progress. This exhibiton will reflect in manuscripts, prints, maps, books, magazines, and music the growth of our State since that memorable day in 1634 when Jean Nicolet touched the shores of Green Bay.

Just yesterday the Librarian of Congress, Luther Evans, wrote me:

> I am profoundly grateful for your assurance of cooperation. It extends, I sincerely hope, to your willingness to deliver an historical address upon the occasion of the opening. Meanwhile, please be certain of our eagerness to perform a worthy service for, and to render a fitting tribute to, the great Badger State.

I intend, through these and other means, to lend every possible assistance to our State centennial committee in order that our celebration will be the finest possible commemoration.

CENTENNIAL'S ECONOMIC MEANING

Every citizen of Wisconsin knows that the 1948 centennial, inspiring itself in its patriotic meaning, is important economically to our State.

Wisconsin knows that, through the means of the centennial, the Nation will become more fully acquainted with the incomparable economic opportunities provided for new industries and the expansion of old industries in the Badger State—"God's country."

Let us remember that the value of Wisconsin war production in prime contracts alone reached in excess of $5,000,000,000. Subcontracts added several billion dollars to that figure. Our Badger industries received over 175 awards of Army-Navy E flags, ordnance flags, Maritime Commission M awards, and Navy E awards. Our shipyards, our machine-tool plants, our powder plants, our food plants were but a few that rightfully won the praise of the Nation. Thirty-five firms in the State produced atomic bomb manufacturing equipment.

Let us not forget, too, that Wisconsin ranks as one of the most inventive States in the Union. Residents of beautiful Badgerland take out about one and one-quarter times as many patents per million population as the national average.

Now this magnificent industrial and business potential, with outstanding manpower, is rolling in high gear to beat all previous peacetime and wartime records of production.

THE RESORT PANORAMA

Yes; Wisconsin is all this, and a lovely natural paradise too. Through the centennial, millions of vacation-hungry Americans will learn anew the peerless beauties of "the little bit of heaven which is known as Wisconsin." They will learn anew of the 170,000 acres of our State's parks and forests, of our 7,000 lakes and hundreds of miles of rivers and streams—ideal for fishing, canoeing, motorboating, sailboating, rowing, swimming. They will learn the unparalleled facilities for summer sports and winter sports easily reached by car or bus over our 80,000 miles of model highways, by our railways and planes and steamships.

Yes; hundreds of thousands of tourists will learn of our beautiful State capital, Madison, and our great industrial and port city, Milwaukee. They will come to see our thousands of villages and towns, nestling alongside breathtakingly lovely streams and lakes.

All of Wisconsin is vacationland—the green, rolling, dairy country with its purebred cows—No. 1 in the Nation—the cool lakes of southeastern Wisconsin, the hills and valleys of the southwestern part and the Green Bay region, rich in historic lore, the ever-changing glories of the lands and beaches bordering Lake Michigan and Lake Superior, the sportsman's northwoods region, with its thousands of spring-water lakes, the lordly Mississippi on its west border.

Everywhere in these regions are abundant and well-kept hotels and resorts, large and small, together with forest lodges and lakeside cabins, modest cottages and cabins in the pines, available for inexpensive rental. They are managed by folks who pride themselves on their high standards as gracious hosts, and who take pride in their State's national reputation for unexcelled hospitality.

Visitors will particularly want to see many of our 125,000 dairy farms, which, for example, produce more nutritious, delicious, aromatic cheese than is produced by all the other 47 States combined. Our farms established new high marks in agricultural production in spite of manpower and material shortages.

THE RICH BLEND OF PEOPLES

Visitors will see, too, our harmonious blend of the great races of the earth—Germans, Poles, Norwegians, Danes, Swedes, Finns, Icelanders, French, Hollanders, Belgians, Swiss, English, Irish, Welsh, Russians, Magyars, Croats, Slovaks, Italians—men and women of all faiths and creeds. In Wisconsin they live together harmoniously as Americans, possessing the warm fraternity of the New World while retaining the varied folklore of the Old World.

From this rich blend came Wisconsin's servicemen, and from their ranks came our 12 Congressional Medal of Honor winners.

CHALLENGE TO WISCONSIN

Our citizens know that the centennial can mark the beginning of a new and more prosperous era than ever before for our State's farmers, for its workingmen, its businessmen, its lumbering industry, its mining industry, its fisheries, and its other important economic fields.

Our State has always been a leader in the Nation in sane, orderly, and clean government. We have been a leader, too, in achieving a harmonious balance between industry and agriculture.

The name of Wisconsin and the fame of Wisconsin will spread throughout America to a greater degree than ever before in the Wisconsin centennial. And it will be up to each of our citizens to add new luster and glory to that name and fame by individual efforts to make of Wisconsin a still greater, more prosperous State in the century which lies so challengingly before us.

FEDERAL-STATE RELATIONS

I, for one, will bend every effort to further our centennial plans, not only because it is my privilege and honor to represent Wisconsin in the Senate, but because every national legislator, I believe, must back up the State governments. We must help add new honor and new importance to our States. Therein is the salvation of our Republic—establishing strong and independent States to act as a check and a balance on our Federal Government.

The people of Wisconsin have always felt a great pride in their State and in their State government, and I trust and believe that through this centennial, they will feel more closely than ever the ties that bind them as members of the great Badger community.

Forward, Wisconsin.

JOINT COMMITTEES ON PRINTING AND ON THE LIBRARY

Mr. BROOKS and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I agreed to yield first to the Senator from Illinois. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Florida if he will not permit two brief interruptions?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois, and then I shall yield to the senior Senator from Florida.

Mr. BROOKS. I report from the Committee on Rules and Administration an original resolution which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 68) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the following joint committees of Congress:

Joint Committee on Printing: Mr. Brooks, of Illinois; Mr. Jenner, of Indiana; Mr. Hayden, of Arizona.

Joint Committee of Congress on the Library: Mr. Brooks, of Illinois; Mr. Jenner, of Indiana; Mr. Ives, of New York; Mr. Green, of Rhode Island; Mr. Holland, of Florida.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, without displacing the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution just read.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROOKS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Are these appointments agreeable to the minority? Has the minority been consulted?

Mr. BROOKS. The appointments are completely agreeable to all members of the minority, as well as members of the majority. The Reorganization Act provides that the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration and two members of the committee shall be members of the Joint Committee on Printing. It also provides that the Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration and four members of the same committee be members of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Day before yesterday, in the House of Representatives, the House by resolution elected its members of these joint committees by resolution. I have conferred with the Parliamentarian o fthe Senate, who tells me that he is not sure that we need elect the members on the part of the Senate. But the method I am suggesting would be the orderly way of proceeding, and, as I have said, the recommendation has the approval of Senators on both sides.

Mr. HILL. With the assurance of the Senator from Illinois that the minority has been consulted and that the minority approves the proposed action, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 68) was considered and agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 20) appointing a Special Committee to Study the Problems of American Small Business.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, if the Senators please. Mr. President, I had intended to proceed with the debate on Senate Resolution 20, as I think we should, and bring it to a vote this afternoon. I believe the arguments which have been made in the last few days on Senate Resolution 46, the War Investigating Committee resolution, are equally applicable to Senate Resolution No. 20 relating to the Small Business Committee.

Since I have made the motion, and Senate Resolution 20 has been made the unfinished business, I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] would like to offer a substitute, but would rather wait until Friday to discuss the amendment he has prepared. I do not desire to take advantage of any Senator, and I want to give the Senator from New Hampshire time to get ready. So I ask unanimous consent—if Senators wish to proceed with the resolution on Friday—I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on it at not later than 3 o'clock on that day.

Mr. HILL and Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment. I know there are Senators on the other side who would like to speak on the question. We have all afternoon today, and I am merely trying to expedite the matter for the Senator from New Hampshire, and would appreciate very much if we could have such an agreement as I have suggested, if it is satisfactory to Senators on both sides of the aisle.

I now yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, has the Senator made the request, or is he suggesting it?

Mr. WHERRY. I am suggesting it, and am asking if there is to be any objection to it.

Mr. HILL. I do not care to say anything except that I hope the Senator will not make his request at this time. The distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], is not present, and other Senators who are interested in the resolution are not in the Chamber at the moment. So I hope the Senator from Nebraska will not make his request, because if he does, I say to him very frankly that I shall have to object at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want to be in a position of forcing the Senator from Alabama to object. I should like to suggest to the distinguished former whip and assistant leader of the opposition that if he would consult with the minority leader I might make the same request later in the afternoon, and if the Senator could give us an answer at that time it would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that I shall be glad to consult the minority leader and others on this side who may be interested.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

I now yield to the senior Senator from Nebraska for an insertion in the RECORD, then I shall yield to the Senator from Florida.

PRODUCTION OF SUGARS AND SIRUPS IN ALCOHOL PLANTS

Mr. BUTLER. I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding at this moment, but I do not seek recognition for an insertion in the RECORD. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution that has come from the House, which is identical with a joint resolution reported by the Committee on Finance and now on the calendar.

It is order of business No. 6, having to do with an extension of time, whereby alcohol plants such as the one operated at Omaha, Nebr., may, at the same time they are making alcohol, produce sirups.

I might say for the benefit of Senators now in the Chamber that during the past few months the Omaha plant has produced more than 35,000,000 pounds of sirup, which has aided materially in the sugar situation in America. They have been operating under a resolution which will automatically expire on February 1.

The House committee and the House itself have passed the identical measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) extending for 15 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol, which was read the first and second time by title.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I now ask that the clerk read the joint resolution in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 3126 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to emergency production of sugars and sirups in industrial alcohol plants) is amended by striking out "February 1, 1947," and inserting in lieu thereof "April 30, 1948."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, is the Senator from Nebraska asking for immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BUTLER. The Committee on Finance of the Senate has reported a joint resolution which is identical with the measure passed by the House and now here for consideration. In view of the fact that the time will expire February 1, I am asking unanimous consent that the Senate now act on the House joint resolution.

Mr. HATCH. I have no knowledge of the subject matter of the resolution at all, but I feel that, if we are going to transact business, if a request is going to be made to take up a measure for passage, there should be a quorum call.

Mr. BUTLER. If the distinguished Senator wishes a quorum call, it is all right with me, but I do not see the occasion for it, because I know there cannot be a dissenting vote in the Senate on this proposal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the senior Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will not insist upon the suggestion he has just made. This matter came before the Finance Committee and was discussed there. We had the witnesses from downtown ready to testify, and those who were in charge of the taxing of the distilleries were ready to testify. There was no objection on the part of anyone.

Since there is this deadline facing us, and, indeed, right upon us, I hope that we may make an exception in this case, and in spite of the somewhat irregular procedure, permit the measure to pass.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. BUTLER. The junior Senator from Nebraska has the floor, but I will yield if I may.

Mr. WHERRY. I have yielded to the senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. HATCH. When a request is made for immediate consideration of a measure, who then has the floor?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I yielded for the purpose of allowing the senior Senator from Nebraska to transact whatever business he had. If there is any question about who has the floor, I submit to the Presiding Officer that it reverts to the junior Senator from Nebraska. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Mexico to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question, if he cares to do so.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, am I to understand that the junior Senator from Nebraska yields to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am interested only in the ordinary, proper parliamentary procedure. I do not understand that a Senator may hold the floor and farm it out so as to permit other Senators to have business transacted.

I have no particular point to make at all, except to ask what is the proper parliamentary procedure. I ask, Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the junior Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I yield to the senior Senator from Nebraska, for the purpose for which he has asked the floor.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the distinguished Senator from Nebraska yield to me so I may make a comment?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado for that purpose.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico that this joint resolution was passed unanimously by the House yesterday. A similar measure was considered here last year and was passed by the Senate, after having been reported by the Senate Committee on Finance. As the senior Senator from Nebraska has said, a Senate joint resolution of like import was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Finance on January 17.

The emergent necessity of getting action I think warrants this procedure, which is somewhat out of order. I hope the Senator will not call for a quorum or interpose other objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the junior Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I still insist, Mr. President, I am interested only in the parliamentary situation. I submit it is impossible for the junior Senator from Nebraska to hold the floor and yield to the senior Senator from Nebraska for the purpose of asking immediate consideration of a measure and for a vote thereon.

In explanation I may say, in the light of what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] and by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], I have no desire to suggest the absence of a quorum; very likely it is perfectly proper to proceed in this manner, but I still object to any Senator holding the floor and farming it out.

I make the point of order that no business can be transacted when the junior Senator from Nebraska holds the floor and yields for any purpose other than a question.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the junior Senator from Nebraska still has the floor, and that he has yielded to the senior Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I hope that if the senior Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent, the Senator from New Mexico will not object.

Mr. HATCH. I must object, as long as the junior Senator from Nebraska holds the floor.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. MORSE. I will say that I certainly have no objection to considering the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I do not want the ruling made by the Chair to be handed back to us in the future as any precedent, because I think the Chair is quite in error. I think it has been very well established that no Senator can yield the floor to another Senator for transaction of business by the other and still retain the floor for himself, unless he receives unanimous consent. I understand the Senator from New Mexico has objected.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Senator from Oregon state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MORSE. My inquiry is whether the Senator from New Mexico has filed an objection to the procedure in which the two Senators from Nebraska are now engaged?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that objection having been made, the junior Senator from Nebraska still has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] be permitted to transact the business that he has in mind, and that I may obtain the floor immediately thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the joint resolution which came to the Senate from the House, and which was passed by the House unanimously yesterday, has been read at the desk. I think every Senator present understands thoroughly the purpose of bringing up the measure at this time for immediate consideration. The time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars and sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol expires automatically on February 1 of this year. In view of the fact that the proposed extension of time to April 30, 1948, has the unanimous support of the departments of Government interested, and has been so supported several times heretofore, I ask for immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what the joint resolution provides. I am sorry, but I was absent when the Senator from Nebraska made a statement concerning it.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure the leader of the minority will not object when I explain to him that this measure had his support in the Finance Committee a few days ago. It is a joint resolution extending until April 30, 1948, permission to alcohol plants to manufacture sugars and sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. TAYLOR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

AMERICAN CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, during the Seventy-ninth Congress and the preceding Congress the senior Senator from Nevada had pending before the Committee on Commerce what was generally termed the all-American flag line bill, which proposed to set up a Government-sustained and a Government-fostered arrangement for international aviation. That bill was opposed vigorously, and it was supported with equal vigor, so much so that the Committee on Commerce by a vote of 10 to 10 at one time, as I recall, nearly voted to report the bill from the committee. However, the bill died in the Committee on Commerce, much to the regret of its author and to the regret of those who have been interested in world-wide aviation.

That we were right in our position that there should be set up an all-American flag air line has been sustained by leading writers on the subject from various angles. At this time I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the January 16 issue of the publication Contact, an aviation publication, headed "United States civil aviation faces alien rule, says J. B. Hartranft, Jr." In other words, alien rule is about to govern our pilots.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL AVIATION FACES ALIEN RULE, SAYS J. B. HARTRANFT, JR.—PRIVATE FLYING WOULD BE UNDER INTERNATIONAL REGULATION

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15.—A warning that American civilian pilots are in imminent danger of being placed under the global mandate of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization, PICAO, is contained in a new year's report on the state of private flying by J. B. Hartranft, Jr., general manager of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association. He points out to the membership of this native-born flying association that if certain proposals are adopted by PICAO, every citizen pilot in this country will be required by law to fly precisely the same way people fly in Ethiopia, Guatamala, and Soviet Russia.

STRAIT-JACKETS DOMESTIC COMMERCE

Protesting vigorously against having our domestic aviation placed in an international strait-jacket, the report states that, "While most of us who are interested in private flying were busy fighting a war, the United States Government, on September 11, 1944, invited 55 nations to meet in Chicago to discuss the subject of postwar civil aviation." The purpose of the meeting being to fix and adopt policies concerning international air commerce. The very wording of the Government's invitation leaves no room for doubt on this point; it said plainly, "The Government of the United States has concluded bilateral exploratory conversations with a number of other governments which have displayed a special interest on the subject of international air transport." No mention was made, anywhere in the invitation, of domestic, or personal, aviation.

PRIVATE FLYING SQUEEZED OUT

Yet when PICAO was born at the Chicago Convention, and duly ratified by the United States Senate, steps were immediately taken to place pilots everywhere under world-wide rule, regardless of national preferences or geographic requirements. At the time private flying was off to the wars and could not be consulted. Then later, upon being mustered out, civilian aviation had to reestablish itself, and it wasn't possible to accept PICAO's bid to sit around the table at the Montreal headquarters.

All other interested groups, including labor, have had ample and very vocal representation there. Outstanding among whom is the rich, powerful Air Transport Association. On this point Hartranft adds, "Our association is envious of the successful campaign which the air transport industry has conducted in dominating the molding of those regulations. Backed by a strong and wealthy association of air lines, they have been able to send qualified representatives to sit in continuous PICAO sessions, a luxury which the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, cannot yet afford. Therefore, where bargaining has been resorted to it has been of little consequence that private pilots' rights and privileges have been abrogated."

Thus civilian aviation has become, according to Hartranft, a pawn of international politics; a bartering medium with which the air lines of the different nations obtain concessions and special consideration.

NOT CONGRESS' INTENT

The Congress of the United States had no intent of placing domestic aviation under alien rule. The Govenment agency responsible for what private pilots term a global sell-out is the Air Coordinating Committee, a wartime hang-over which serves principally as liaison between the United States and PICAO. Proof of this group's insensibility of our traditional freedoms comes to light in one of their bulletins, ACC-52/13, dated June 24, 1946. Fortunately for American aviation, or perhaps fearful of possible popular indignation, the recommendations set forth in the bulletin are couched in legal phraseology which offer several avenues of escape in case the people become unduly wrought up. Here is the potential death knell to aeronautical freedom.

Mr. McCARRAN. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks an article appearing in the publication World Transport, the issue of January 21, 1947, under the caption "Profits of United States air lines cut by inroads of rivals abroad."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROFITS OF UNITED STATES AIR LINES CUT BY INROADS OF RIVALS ABROAD—BIGGER PLANES, POOLING OF FACILITIES, AND POSSIBLE AID FROM GOVERNMENT INCLUDED IN PLANS TO OFFSET LOSSES

Expansion of world routes by United States air lines since the war is not returning expected profits. Despite this tremendous enlargement, United States domination of the world's commercial airways is being increasingly challenged by other nations.

Income from international air routes has dropped precipitously in the last year. Passenger demand is falling off. Progressive rate cuts on some lines have been forced by intense competition from the companies of other nations.

The current difficulties of the world's air lines stem directly from the rush to satisfy pent-up demand for high-speed international travel that followed the end of fighting. United States companies jumped into an immediate lead on most routes. The availability of new sky liners gave the American services an advantage that could not be matched by any other nation.

Overexpansion on the part of several companies resulted. Many invested in surplus equipment of the United States Army that already is outmoded by postwar planes.

Extension of routes to cover the world necessitated development of terminal facilities. In 1946, United States lines added 68,000 miles to the international routes, bringing the total to 175,000. The initial expense of establishing elaborate ground organizations was enormous.

In addition, many of the costly aids to navigation, such as radio facilities and rescue equipment provided by the military services during the war, now must be furnished in large part by private companies.

Concurrently with increased expenditures for the expansion of services, the air lines are faced with continually rising costs of operation. Labor costs and the price of new equipment have gone up substantially since the end of the war.

As a result of the rise in costs and drop in passenger demand, some of the companies have canceled orders for new equipment.

Competition from abroad is becoming more intense. Originally, the lines of Britain, France, Holland, Canada, and Scandinavia were handicapped by a lack of modern planes. To overcome this disadvantage, precious dollars were allocated by the respective countries for the purchase of the latest types of United States built craft. These will be used until Britain, France, and the others can manufacture planes that will match the performance of those of the United States.

Government backing has aided companies of other nations in their efforts to overtake the United States in the air. These countries employ the chosen-instrument principle by which one government owned, or sponsored, line is given a nation's monopoly on certain routes.

Citizens of other countries are finding it advantageous to fly on their own flag lines. Currency controls in most countries make it difficult to pay dollars for passage on United States planes. Other advantages are apparent, such as ease in clearing customs.

Effect of international competition is reflected in the decreased pay loads on American lines. This is especially true on the North Atlantic route which was dominated almost completely by the United States at the end of the war. Planes of other nations now are carrying half the passengers flying across the North Atlantic. Nearly all planes westbound are filled to capacity, due to the backlog of persons in Europe wishing to come to the United States. But many planes are flying from the United States to Europe nearly empty.

On every European route they fly United States lines are competing with at least one, and often more, rivals. The British, Dutch, and Belgian services have flights between nearly all of the major cities to which American planes are scheduled.

Competition from the British is beginning to make itself felt in South America. The British line has flights scheduled 10 times weekly from Europe to South America, with links connecting most of the countries. During 1946 it carried 5,041 passengers for a total of 23,799,151 miles. In addition, 553,556 freight-ton miles and 584,935 mail-ton miles were flown.

In the Pacific, principal contenders against United States superiority are the Australians and Dutch. The Australians have started a service to Canada. The Dutch plan to link the Netherlands Indies to the west coast of the United States, completing their circuit around the world.

Competition is coming also from the return of ocean travel. Luxury liners, not available during the war, are taking some of the potential air travelers.

Against this backdrop of difficulties the United States lines flying world routes are reconsidering their plans.

New projects call for the early substitution of larger planes capable of carrying bigger pay loads with the same size crew. Operating costs are expected to drop sharply when planes can carry approximately double the present number of passengers. Officials of United States companies believe that the big planes being produced will assist in recapturing much of the traffic now being carried by the services of other nations. Improved air liners built in the United States are considered to be well ahead of those of other countries.

United States companies may pool terminal facilities. This may lead to joint use of planes over highly competitive routes, so that profitable loads can be carried. Such common action on the part of the carriers eventually may find United States private companies in effect matching the chosen-instrument device of the other nations.

Revenue freight will be carried by more and more planes of the scheduled air lines. Transport of air cargo is recognized as a developing source of income in the future. The lines are anxious to win freight contracts on international routes to prevent contract carriers from cutting too deeply into this profitable field.

Passenger service is to be improved to match the comforts of ocean travel. Terminal facilities will be modernized. The airways recognize that people no longer fly for the glamor; that there must be more customer appeal.

Safety facilities will be improved, as more and more air lines install radar and other devices for flying under all weather conditions.

The alternative to the plan of United States companies for meeting world competition may be more assistance from the Government on world routes. Increased subsidies through air-mail contracts may result. Pooling of facilities, to place United States companies on a par with their international rivals, may be allowed. The United States Government may give the lines more of a helping hand to aid them to take over the dominant position on world air routes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on several occasions during the last Congress, I drew the attention of the Commerce Committee and of the Senate to the fact that unless the Government of the United States adopted the same principle that had been adopted by Great Britain whereby Great Britain stands behind the chosen aviation instrument of Great Britain and sustains it in its world flights, and followed the same course, our air aviation would be doomed.

Mr. President, in the Washington Star of January 19 this year appeared an article written by W. H. Shippen, Jr., under the caption "'Growing pains' making United States air industry groan" which deals with the same subject. The writer shows that today aviation in America is suffering severely because of foreign competition, and especially because of the fact that great nations such as the United Kingdom have set up a chosen instrument similar to that sought to be set up under the bill to which I referred, the all-American flag line bill. I ask unanimous consent that the article appearing in the Star may be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"GROWING PAINS" MAKING UNITED STATES AIR INDUSTRY GROAN—PAN AMERICAN'S PETITION FOR DOMESTIC ROUTES AT LOWER RATES OPPOSED BY RIVAL LINES AS NEW THREAT TO PROFITS

(By W. H. Shippen, Jr.)

The show-down being forced by Pan American World Airways on the issue of free trade in the air-transport field comes at a critical period in the American aviation industry.

In the lush days of war profits and expansion, 11 United States lines were given international routes under the Federal policy of controlled competition at home and abroad.

Now, plagued by accidents, a decline in revenues which seems temporary but certainly is drastic at this time, and overexpansion in some cases, the lines must marshal their arguments against Pan Am's all-out fight to enter the domestic field with nonstop service at reduced rates.

Pan Am's claim to equal rights with its competitors to operate both domestic and foreign routes and the arguments against it are contained in the largest record ever compiled for the Civil Aeronautics Board—more than 6,000 pages of testimony before a CAB examiner at preliminary hearing just completed.

Batteries of attorneys on both sides are now preparing briefs from the great volume of testimony and exhibits for filing with the CAB prior to oral arguments sometime next summer, with a decision from the Board not expected before fall.

PROFITS DROPPED SHARPLY

The economic picture for the industry has changed radically since Pan Am, taking its cue from what appeared a firm Federal policy of controlled competition, abandoned its fight for community operations overseas and demanded the same right to fly at home that the competition had been given to fly abroad.

Net profits from air-line operations had fallen from the war peak of $42,398,691 in 1945 to $4,788,317 in the first 10 months of 1946, a drop anticipated but doubly difficult to assimilate in a period of high costs for reconverting war equipment and general expansion. Although no figures are available for the last 2 months of 1946, it is known that passenger revenue fell off sharply except during the holiday season.

This was due, air-line officials say, to a series of disastrous accidents grouped close together plus the usual seasonal decline during winter weather. Another element was public reaction to a postwar period of rapid expansion, when facilities were jammed by a pent-up travel demand and the air lines were breaking in new staffs to handle the rush.

At the same time one of Pan American's foremost competitors for high-density traffic across the North Atlantic, Trans World Airline was buffeted by circumstances over which the management had little or no control—the temporary grounding of its high-speed Constellations, the crippling pilots' strike, a fatal accident in Ireland, and a dispute between the management and principal stockholder.

THREE COMPANIES MADE MONEY

With the exception of TWA, however, other members of the "big four," United, American, and Eastern, managed to show profits in 1946 despite heavy outlays for new equipment, although most of them lost some money in the last quarter.

While TWA has straightened out most of its difficulties which caused a loss of up to $7,000,000 in 1946, the general situation has forced curtailment all along many lines, including reductions in schedules and personnel cancellations of contracts for new equipment, and cooperative efforts to cut expenses.

At a time when Pan American is proposing to connect 13 of the country's big population centers with high-speed service at 4 cents a mile, at least one air line, TWA, has put out the first feeler for an increase in the domestic rate now averaging about 4½ cents.

Too, half a dozen air lines have applied to the CAB for higher air-mail rates, including the only big operator with headquarters in Washington, Capital Airlines—PCA, which lost over $2,000,000 last year, due largely, it was said, to rapid expansion and the addition of many four-engined transports.

Pan Am's application, backed by Washington and 12 other gateway cities on its proposed domestic network, must be passed upon under the law which charged the CAB with regulating the air lines and their passenger and mail rates to encourage the development of a strong industry "for the commerce, postal service, and national defense of the United States."

ADDED COMPETITION RESISTED

Moreover, an applicant must prove "public convenience and necessity." The dozen air lines opposing Pan Am's application contend the added competition will result in disastrous diversions or revenue from existing air lines, and that Pan Am has proved neither convenience nor necessity for a service, which, they say, can be duplicated by companies already operating between the 13 cities.

The Post Office Department has entered the case as "a friend of the court" without taking sides, but Pan Am's opponents claim the bulk of its testimony upheld their arguments that the proposed service will unnecessarily divert revenue on a scale which would jeopardize profits of the whole domestic industry.

Meanwhile, the revenue passenger loads dropped from an average of over 90 percent during the war to a general average of 59 percent in November, and air-line officials believe figures for December and the first half of January will be even lower. This happened while the air lines were doubling their passenger capacity and flying almost twice as many passenger-revenue-miles in 1946 as in 1945.

Although Pan Am is now committed against a policy of segregating domestic and international operations, and has spent at least half a million dollars backing its new stand, the old issue of an "all-American flag line" to handle all our overseas flying has been raised in the new Congress by Senator McCARRAN, Democrat, of Nevada.

The McCarran bill, which would set up a single company in which present international air lines and the United States would hold stock, may have more chance of passage than in the last Congress, although enemies of the legislation say the President would veto it as contrary to the policy of free competition.

With an increasing number of nationalized foreign air lines now flying to the United States, including the British, Dutch, French, and Scandinavians, friends of the bill believe a single United States flag carrier would be the only one which could compete on an equal basis.

Pan Am points out that already brisk competition in the North Atlantic will become increasigly strong between all trading nations, with Canada, the Central and South American countries, China, India, Australia, and the Union of South Africa either authorized or negotiating for American rights.

Some observers believe our whole air policy formed under a Democratic administration may be brought up for review before the Republican-controlled Congress, where cries already are being raised in both Houses for investigations of accidents and the financial condition of the air lines.

Civil aeronautics officials, however, agree with "one of the smartest operators in the business," W. A. Patterson, president of United Air Lines, that the lusty, if somewhat overexpanded, industry is suffering only temporary "growing pains," or, as Mr. Patterson puts it, "a shake-down period."

During the war anybody with an airplane could load it with a pay cargo for almost any destination. The Army's Air Transport Command was letting profitable contracts to carry personnel, cargo, and mail all over the world. A number of operators, Mr. Patterson said, got the idea there was nothing to it but to crank up the engines and get going.

Mr. Patterson believes the financial setbacks and decline in the huge demand for air transport came in time to prevent some bankruptcies and just when all the big lines still are in a position to revamp operations and get back on a basis of normal operations and normal profit.

"The industry as a whole will benefit from the jolts the air lines are getting now," he predicted. Their faults, he added, were on the positive rather than the negative side overconfidence, overexpansion, and a natural American impulse to do things in a big way.

On the favorable side are new transports coming off the production line, or in final test states—unquestionably the finest in the world. New high-speed, high-altitude models by Douglas, Martin, Boeing, Republic, and Lockheed, designed for convenience and economy of operation.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 20), appointing a Special Committee To Study the Problems of American Small Business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks an editorial entitled "Vote 'No,'" published in the Washington Post of today. The editorial has reference to the creation of the special committees which are under consideration.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VOTE "NO"

There never was a good case, in our opinion, for continuing the Special War Investigating Committee under the Senate's new plan of organization. Now, even the one argument that the Republican leaders had used effectively in favor of an exception for this special committee has disappeared. They had contended that it was necessar. to let the old investigating committee carry on because only that unit had the privilege of examining income-tax returns in the search for war-contract frauds and excessive profits. But when Senator AIKEN asked President Truman about the matter, he was told that the White House would gladly transfer the privilege of examining income-tax returns to the permanent Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Senator GEORGE had previously proposed that this privilege be conferred by law.

No questions remain, therefore, as to whether an effective investigation could or should be carried on. Answers have been properly returned in the affirmative. The only question that the Senate will have to decide when the issue comes to a vote today is whether the inquiry should go forward within the new streamlined structure of Congress or whether a precedent should be set for breaking down the limits of committee jurisdiction every time an investigation is to be made. We think that the advantage of keeping the inquiry within the committee that will hereafter consider all legislation in this field is so overwhelming that it will bring a whopping vote against the special committee if the issue is decided on its merits.

The only thing that stands in the way of deciding the matter on its merits is Republican prestige. The majority leadership seems to have gone all out for the special committee, although it has lost the support of Senator AIKEN, chairman of the standing committee concerned, and probably of other Members. The GOP hierarchy in the Senate ought to realize that even if it should win on this basis, the victory would be very costly. It would put them in the position of railroading through an unwise and unpopular measure solely out of caprice. That sort of triumph leaves the victors as well as the vanquished sour and makes it the more difficult to maintain party solidarity when a real issue arises. We had occasion the other day to quote the sage who said that "the greatest error of statesmanship is to cling to the carcasses of dead policies." It is precisely that sort of error toward which the Republican leaders are headed in this instance, and we hope they recognize it before the vote is taken.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, there is a very small Executive Calendar. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. I may say for the information of the Senator from Nevada that as soon as we have disposed of the calendar I shall move that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

That completes the calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of these nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY THE PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SMALL BUSINESS

The Senate, in legislative session, resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 20) appointing a Special Committee To Study the Problems of American Small Business.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, am I correct in understanding that the Senate is now in legislative session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. And that the pending business is the consideration of Senate Resolution 20?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I send to the desk an amendment which I wish to submit, and ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WHERRY. I do this, Mr. President, because a request has been made that the vote on Senate Resolution No. 20 go over until Friday. My amendment will be printed; but if Senators who are interested will turn to the second page of the resolution, in line 4, after the words "Eightieth Congress," they will note that the amendment proposes to modify the resolution by inserting "for a period of 240 days after the date this resolution is agreed to."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator seeking to modify his resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, the resolution, which has been reported by a committee and is on the calendar, and which we are now considering, cannot be modified by unanimous consent by the author of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Nebraska may submit his amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that the amendment which the Senator submitted and asked to have lie on the table and be printed?

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that course should be followed.

Mr. WHERRY. The amendment can lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be the pending amendment if the Senator so desires.

Mr. WHERRY. I offer the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the words "Eightieth Congress", it is proposed to insert "for a period of 240 days after the date this resolution is agreed to."

On page 2, at the end of line 19, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert "as of January 31, 1947: Provided, That the authority of such special committees to hold hearings and conduct investigations shall terminate on the date this resolution is agreed to."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the able Senator from Nebraska if he is familiar with the fact that there are now 11 resolutions on the calendar providing for special committees.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe if the Senator will read the calendar he will find that they do not all provide for special committees. I believe the last one provides for an amendment to the rules——

Mr. TYDINGS. With the exception of the last one, they all provide for special committees.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not read all of them. I am not sure what the other resolutions provide for, but I do agree that there is a resolution to extend the silver committee, a resolution to extend the petroleum committee, and perhaps one other.

Mr. BARKLEY. The wool committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is not only a resolution to continue the small business committee, to which the Senator is addressing himself, but there is one having to do with postwar economic policy and planning.

Mr. WHERRY. That is a resolution continuing a special committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is one on national petroleum resources. There is one relating to a special committee on the conservation of wildlife. There is one on the national-defense program. There is one on the production, transportation, and marketing of wool; and there is one on atomic energy. There is one with reference to the 1946 election committee, which already has been absorbed; and I think there is a resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], having to do with the further reorganization of the National Legislature.

My purpose in addressing the Senator is this: Now that the Senate has broken the rule with reference to special committees, at some time in the near future those of us on this side of the aisle would like from the leadership on the other side of the aisle an indication as to whether requests for special committees are to be general or confined to special cases. Now that the precedent has been established, some Senators who might not be in favor of all such special committees might be inclined to go along with the creation of extraordinary special committees.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in answer to the statement of the Senator from Maryland, I will say that I think special committees should be organized only if the Senate feels that such committees are sufficiently important to be justified. I will say further to the distinguished Senator that if those of us who are interested in continuing the Small Business Committee for 8 months cannot justify it on the basis of need and cannot justify the appropriation asked for, I think it should not be organized. It will be perfectly agreeable to me. I think that when any resolution providing for the creation of a special committee comes before the Senate it must be decided in the light of its importance. It is for the Senate so to decide whether it feels that it is important enough to create or to continue. I think that is the only basis upon which a special committee should be either extended or created.

Mr. TYDINGS. In addition to the special committee requests which I have read, there is also one which I understand is being formulated which has to do with fixing the price of gold. If that committee should be created, we would have 11 special committees, in addition to the one which has been decided on here today.

I think the leadership on the other side of the aisle ought to take a pretty firm stand on the question of how far these special committees are to go. We have opened the door, thus giving encouragement for the establishment of special committees. The question now is whether a standing committee can do the job, as was the question before. Many of these proposals are not new. The committee on wool is already in existence, I believe, and this is an extension.

I think the leadership of the other side of the aisle ought to take a stand and tell the Senate how far the organization of special committees will go, rather than have a fight on every one that comes up, because the Senator from Maryland is pretty much of the opinion that it is time to call a halt, and I think we would save time if we knew what the attitude of the leadership on the other side of the aisle was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator referred to certain resolutions as being on the calendar. He does not mean that they have been reported to the Senate. He has referred to the list of committees proposed.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I was about to take that question up with the distinguished Senator from Maryland and call his attention to the fact that the committees to which he has referred were in existence in the Seventy-ninth Congress. I am not sure whether a resolution will be introduced for the creation of another special committee. The only two resolutions about which we know are the two on the Senate Calendar. As the distinguished Senator knows, they have both been debated together during the consideration of the resolution relating to the war investigating committee. In answer to the Senator's question, I feel that the only time we should create a special committee is when the Senate feels that it has special work which is sufficiently important to merit the establishment of such a committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that one of the western Senators—I shall not mention his name—on the other side of the aisle told me recently that one of the reasons he was going to vote for the special committee which was acted upon was that he wanted the wool committee extended because he wanted to see continued the work which that committee had undertaken to perform. I rather think that that will be the program with respect to all the special committees that have been in existence in the past.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, up until now, at least, that has not been the program. I do not know of any other resolution which has been placed on the calendar. But I say once again that it will be up to the Senate to decide, when any resolution is presented to create a special committee, whether or not the work is important enough to merit setting up such a special committee.

I should like to say, further, that the list of committees to which the Senator refers are committees which were created in the Seventy-ninth Congress. They are not before the Senate for consideration. As the distinguished Senator from Maryland mentioned on the floor the other day, there has been a special Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources, if I remember his statement correctly, which goes back to 1915. A report of its work has not been made. I am not condemning the committee and I do not know whether I have given the exact date, but the query propounded by the Senator from Maryland can be answered only in the light of the importance of the committee which is sought to be created or continued.

If the distinguished Senator feels that there is no need for a Small Business Committee; if he feels that the work which has been done by that committee during the past 6 years has not justified the expense incurred; if he wants to cut off the Small Business Committee and not provide a place for businessmen to come to bring their problems as they have done in the past few years, it is up to the Senate to decide.

I believe if the Senator will follow the hearings and see what the Small Business Committee has done he will find that its continuance is justified.

By the amendment I have proposed we are asking that the work of the Small Business Committee may be continued for 240 days.

As I stated on the floor on the first day of the debate on the War Investigating Committee, I feel that there are times when a special committee cuts across standing committee lines, and that when that occurs it is an important committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHERRY. Let me finish my statement.

When a committee such as the Small Business Committee cuts across standing committee lines, as the Small Business Committee has done and will do for months to come, it is an important committee.

As I pointed out then, and point out now, all matters relating to banking and money should be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee; all matters of monopoly control and centralization should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and all matters of freight rates and practices and a hundred and one other things that come up in connection therewith should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

We need a Small Business Committee in addition to the standing committees of the Senate. In the work which the Small Business Committee has done it has cut across the lines of standing committees in the past 6 years. I served on that committee in 1943, as did the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]; and he knows as well as I do that the kind of work the committee has done would not have been done so efficiently by a standing committee as it has been done by the Small Business Committee.

Mr. President, a moment ago I asked the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the minority leader, to consider a unanimous-consent suggestion that inasmuch as a substitute is to be offered for the resolution I have submitted, and inasmuch as the Senator submitting it desires to discuss it and is not prepared to do so at this time, and because other Senators would like to speak regarding it, it would seem that it would be impossible to obtain a vote on the matter this afternoon. So I conferred with the minority leader and with the majority leader.

I should like to suggest again, and merely make the suggestion, that the Senate vote on the resolution and all amendments thereto at not later than 5 o'clock on Friday afternoon next. I should like to obtain unanimous consent to that effect, if it may be obtained. The measure is not a bill or a joint resolution, but it is merely a simple Senate resolution. It is not necessary to have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of its adoption. If there is no objection, I should like to have such unanimous consent obtained, so that the resolution may be set down for a vote at the time I have just stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska that Senate Resolution 20 and all amendments thereto be submitted to final vote at not later than 5 o'clock on next Friday?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say I did not understand that the Senator from Nebraska was actually proposing a unanimous-consent agreement. I thought he was suggesting it and was directing his remarks to the minority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think the minority leader heard what the Senator from Nebraska said.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from New Mexico. My attention had been drawn to another matter in private conference, and I did not hear the request which the Senator from Nebraska made.

Let me say that the Senator from Nebraska and I have talked about the matter, and the 5 o'clock hour is agreeable to me.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to know whether the request is agreeable to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], who is the author of the substitute resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. It is. The Senator from New Hampshire is not in the Chamber at this time, because he said he had a severe headache. He had agreed to a suggestion to have the Senate vote at not later than 3 o'clock. But in order to accomplish the objective of obtaining a vote, we have agreed to extend the hour to 5 o'clock on Friday afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I do object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico objects.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I was about to say by way of explanation that I object generally to all such requests for agreements which would fix definite times for voting. I think the proceedings in the Senate today have presented a fair example of some of the evils which arise when an attempt is made to designate a fixed and certain time for the Senate to vote.

However, in view of the fact that the Senator from Nebraska makes such an urgent appeal that the Senate agree to vote on this particular resolution at 5 o'clock on the coming Friday, I think I shall not object.

Let me inquire whether the request is to have the Senate vote not earlier than 5 o'clock or not later than 5 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. WHERRY. My request was that the Senate vote not later than 5 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. HATCH. Then I suppose it might be possible for the Senate to vote on the resolution at an earlier hour, if the Senate so desired.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. On the other hand, I shall be glad to modify the request so as to provide for the Senate to vote at an hour subsequent to 5 o'clock, if the Senator from New Mexico believes that 5 o'clock is too early an hour.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I believe that very often Senators who wish to debate questions which are before the Senate are cut off by such unanimous-consent agreements. It is to that practice that I object, rather than to the particular request now presented. But if I may be assured that the request is agreeable to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY]—and I think the Senator from Nebraska has already given that assurance—then I have no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the unanimous-consent request,

Mr. LUCAS. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I make the further request that in connection with the agreement just entered, on Friday the time between 2 o'clock and 5 o'clock be equally divided between the two sides, the time for the opponents to be controlled by the minority leader, and the time for the proponents to be controlled by the junior Senator from Nebraska. Is that satisfactory?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the further unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Nebraska that after 2 p. m. on Friday the time on the pending resolution be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents, and that the time be under the control, respectively, of the junior Senator from Nebraska and the minority leader. The Chair hears no objection, and the request is agreed to.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield now to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire to invite the attention of the able Senator from Nebraska to Senate Resolution 77, of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which was submitted by the Senator from Nebraska on February 15, 1945. That resolution authorized the payment from the contingent fund of the Senate of expenses of $75,000 for any investigation or inquiry thereafter authorized, under certain conditions and contingencies, one being that any resolution of that kind being offered should first be submitted to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, together with a budget, in such form as the committee might require, setting forth the committee's estimate of its proposed expenses, hearings, travel, and other information.

I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether or not any budget was submitted in connection with the pending resolution requesting $50,000 which went to the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate, and was reported by that committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that I advised the committee of the resolution, and I was one who felt that the then Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should be advised of the appropriations requested, and that a statement to justify the size of the appropriation should be submitted.

Mr. LUCAS. I remember very well that the able Senator presented that matter to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. When I was chairman of that committee I agreed with him, the committee reported his resolution, and it was unanimously adopted by the Senate.

Now I am asking the Senator whether he followed his own rule when he offered his resolution requesting $50,000 for a new Committee on Small Business.

Mr. WHERRY. We discussed the original budget of $125,000, and we cited the costs. We talked around the table about it, and when the $50,000 figure was finally inserted, we estimated that it would enable the committee to continue for 8 months. It would not be a new committee in the sense that a new staff would be employed, but we would keep the expenses within the limitation of $50,000. I agree with the Senator from Illinois that the matter was not worked out to the last detail, but I will say that it met with the general approval of the committee, and that the committee reported it, and it is now before the Senate.

I should like to point out for the Senator's further attention and information that the same situation arose relative to the Tydings amendment which was voted on by the Senate today. In that amendment no amount of appropriation was set forth.

Mr. LUCAS. All that amendment did was to authorize the continuance of the old committee without requesting any further money at all. I think I am correct about that matter. At this time, at least, no money is requested by the Brewster committee.

But I take it that in the future, even if the Brewster committee requests $100,000, and the Senator from Nebraska is as much interested in having budgets submitted as he was a few months ago, he will compel that committee to present a proposed budget and to explain how it will spend the money requested. I cannot understand how the Senator would bypass himself in regard to such an important resolution, on which he worked for days and nights, and which when presented to our committee was unanimously approved. In other words, I cannot understand how it was so important, when the Senator from Nebraska was in the minority, that he obtain a budget from the majority, but the moment he is in the majority he proposes to bypass his own resolution, and seeks to have the expenditure of $50,000 approved by the Committee on Rules, without submitting any written budget and without telling any member of the Rules Committee how the requested funds will be spent.

I have here a letter from the Small Business Committee dated December 10, 1945, the last time they presented their budget before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and this is what was said:

> It is necessary for the committee to be assured these funds before the Christmas recess, because, first, according to the Wherry resolution passed by the Senate—

And so forth. They asked in the budget for the tidy sum of $187,800. But it was set out in detail, and it was stated in this letter that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] was a member of the Small Business Committee, and that he along with Senator Mead and Senator STEWART had examined each item and the budget had their approval. In other words, after the budget was prepared by one of the experts, a committee went over the budget and approved it. I have here in my hand some 10 pages of budget material that was submitted to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate only 9 months ago. Yet now the Senator from Nebraska comes forward and asks for $50,000 without submitting a single line of anything, so far as a budget is concerned.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the speech made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois relative to the work done by the Small Business Committee and by the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, relative to the budget submitted under the resolution which he just mentioned, is substantially correct, and it is strange that now the opposition, which asked me to prepare not only the budget but also the outlines for the budget, and submit them to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—and the chairman himself said he would abide by my decision in the matter—should question any budget I bring in now to enable the committee to continue for 8 months.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not questioning any budget the Senator may bring in, because he has not brought in a budget.

Mr. WHERRY. I submitted to the Committee on Rules and Administration a statement that it was my opinion that, on the budget submitted only six months ago in detail, it would take $50,000 to continue this committee for eight months, and $50,000 is provided in the resolution. If the distinguished Senator would like to have me prepare a statement showing in detail how the money is to be spent, in order to get his vote for a continuation of the Small Business Committee, I should be most happy to do that.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am only suggesting to the Senate how easy it is, once the Senator is a member of the majority, for him to forget the basic principle that was laid down by the Senator from Nebraska himself. I know, from what the Rules Committee said, that there was no written, prepared budget such as the Senator from Nebraska compelled the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and his committee to submit only nine months ago, when he asked for $186,000. If the Senator from Montana had come before our committee and said, "Gentlemen, we want $186,000, and this is the way we propose to spend it," the Senator from Nebraska would have said, "You must prepare your budget in accordance with my resolution before we will pass on a single thing." I know what the able Senator would have said; and he would have been right. But the point I make is that the first time the Senator from Nebraska got an opportunity to bypass his own resolution, away he went as fast as he could to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and here we have him asking for $50,000. No one knows what it is for or how it is to be spent except the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator permit me to propound a question to him?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be happy to listen to a question.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of the statement the distinguished Senator from Illinois has made on the floor of the Senate about the action I took and all the help I gave him in the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I will ask the Senator if he would not have faith and confidence in me to continue this committee for 8 months, and allow $50,000, because after the eulogy the Senator has made of the careful financing I have required of the committee, and how judiciously the money was spent, and how careful I have been in all matters connected with service on the Senator's committee, there could be no other interpretation placed upon the Senator's statement than that he would be perfectly satisfied that the junior Senator from Nebraska would efficiently spend the $50,000 for which he is asking.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the way the Senator from Nebraska rushed through this $50,000 resolution, in violation of his own budget resolution, I am not quite so sure I have as much faith in the Senator as I used to have. That is the point I am trying to make. In other words, the Senator is now one of the majority, and he wants to do things just as he desires to do them, notwithstanding a rule to the contrary. So long as the majority has the votes, they can do things that way, but I submit it is wrong and they are repudiating their own rule, all of which I am at a loss to understand.

I say, in all seriousness, that I am completely surprised at the position of my able friend from Nebraska, after all the work he did as a member of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in securing the adoption of a resolution compelling every committee which submitted a request for more than $5,000 to present in writing a budget for the total amount, showing how it was to be spent, and also requiring a statement of the number of employees of the committee and the number borrowed by it from Government departments. I went along with him in that because I thought it was good business for the Senate. I am disappointed, and I say it with all seriousness, to find that the moment my able friend gets an opportunity, as a member of the majority, he violates that sacred, solemn principle he laid down, with all the toil and energy he put into it. Today it does not mean a single thing—yesterday it meant everything.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to say again, for the benefit of the Members of the Senate, that in the last Congress Senate Resolution 77 was adopted by the Senate after it was reported by the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I did a great deal of work on that resolution, and especially a great deal of work for my distinguished friend the Senator from Illinois. The resolution was reported really for the prime purpose of enabling us to see to it that every person who was employed by the Small Business Committee, even though he were borrowed from a Government department, should be paid for out of the appropriation made, and not from the appropriation for the department. The distinguished Senator knows that to be so.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the second portion of the resolution, and only in part the reason for its adoption.

Mr. WHERRY. When the resolution was adopted it required that there be provided for the guidance of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a budget stating how the funds would be used.

The Senator from Illinois knows that we approved appropriations in small amounts such as that I am asking for. For instance, we approved $35,000 for the Kilgore committee. We approved, as I recall, though perhaps it is merely a rough estimate, $25,000 for another committee. It was after the resolutions were on the calendar, and we objected to the amounts, that the appropriations were reduced and the committees did not get the amounts requested.

There is nothing to the opposition on the ground now advanced. The Senator from Illinois is not going to vote for the resolution, and he does not care whether I give a detailed statement or not. If it would satisfy him, and cause him to vote for the resolution I should be glad to submit to him, for his guidance, a detailed statement of what the expenditures are to be. The only reason in the world the distinguished Senator from Illinois has flattered me about the resolution to which he has referred—and I do not recall that he ever called it to anyone's attention before—is that he desires to cause debate. The Senator does not intend to vote for the resolution anyway; if I set forth every item of expenditure the Senator would not vote for it; but, if a Senator on the Democratic side had submitted the resolution, regardless of the La Follette-Monroney law, the Senator from Illinois would vote for it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator is absolutely in error in what he is saying. I am discussing only the principle. I see present in the Chamber my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], who is chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration. I know very well that he sat in on the committee meetings when requests for money for special committees were submitted, and that he examined the budgets which were presented. I am sure that the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration would not permit, and I think the Senator from Nebraska would not desire to have, for instance, the Brewster committee come in tomorrow to ask for $300,000 without a detailed and complete budget.

I should think that the Committee on Rules and Administration would be as conscientious in the discharge of its duties, in budget matters, as was the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

In connection with the consideration of committee budgets we compelled committees to tell us how they were going to spend the money, primarily because of the potent arguments made and the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska.

"What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander," and all I am suggesting is that if the Senator from Nebraska is going to permit special committees to come forward and ask for $50,000, $75,000, or $100,000, and grant the requests simply because someone presents a verbal explanation, then we had better adopt a resolution which would repeal the budget resolution that was adopted at the insistance of the Senator from Nebraska. If that is what he desires, I think the Senate and the country should know of his complete about face, now that the Republicans are in the majority.

That is the only point I am making today, and I say again that I am surprised, I am shocked, I am almost at my wit's end to understand why the Senator from Nebraska repudiates his own sacred resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make two observations. It is certainly a compliment to the junior Senator from Nebraska that he should ever cause the Senator from Illinois to reach his wit's end. That is a tribute I certainly never expected to receive from him.

The second observation I wish to make is that the distinguished Senator from Illinois does not need to worry about the Committee on Rules and Administration. The membership of that committee is one of the best. I think it has a personnel that is as fine as that of any other committee of the Senate. I guarantee to the Senator that there will not be any budgets for special committees approved, and no resolutions creating special committees will be reported favorably by the committee, unless in the judgment of the members of the committee such special committees should be set up. Only the amount of money they feel is needed will be provided to carry on the work of the committee. I give my personal guarantee to that effect, because I am positive that the membership of the Committee on Rules and Administration is more anxious to preserve the economy of the country than was the majority membership of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate during the past 14 years.

Mr. President, I have prepared a speech to justify the Small Business Committee. I should like very much to continue, but inasmuch as I am sure the majority leader would like to have the Senate recess at this time, I am going to ask that I be permitted to have the floor on Friday if the Senate recesses. I shall be glad to hear a motion to recess to that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will be recognized when the Senate resumes its session on Friday.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, earlier this afternoon the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] said that he was going to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement that the Senate vote on his resolution at a certain hour on Friday.

I rose to my feet at that time to object to the request and sought to obtain the floor. In fact I addressed the Chair by saying "Mr. President, reserving the right to object." However, several others were making the same attempt to secure recognition from the Chair with the result that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] was recognized first by the Chair. He entered into an arrangement with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that, reserving the right to object, he would like to have an opportunity to consult with the minority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

I had no idea, Mr. President, that the request was going to be renewed this afternoon. Certainly I had no idea it was going to be renewed, in view of the attempt that I made to object to it, while I was called off the floor to the telephone. But I have been informed by the Parliamentarian that while I was on the telephone, such request was renewed and that no one objected, and that there is now an understanding that we shall vote on Friday at 5 o'clock.

I desire the RECORD to show, Mr. President, that had I been in the Chamber I most certainly would have objected. I desire also to have the RECORD show my very deep regret that no attempt was made either by the majority leader or the Republican whip to call a quorum, in view of my well-known views in regard to such unanimous-consent agreements.

I should like to have the RECORD further show that I hope that in the future there will be at least some one on the floor of the Senate who will extend to me the courtesy, in case there is a repetition of such an occurrence as the one that took place this afternoon, of giving me an opportunity at least to respond to a quorum call.

I doubt if there are very many in the Senate who are more conscientious about being on the floor of the Senate for hours upon hours of debate than is the junior Senator from Oregon. In fact, I think my attendance on the floor of the Senate during debates is an exceptionally good one. Hence, I deeply regret that, knowing my views on this matter, the majority leader did not see fit, Mr. President, first to find out what the views of the junior Senator from Oregon were in regard to this matter. I think I am justified in my disappointment over the way my known desires on this issue were treated this afternoon, especially in view of the fact that it was last Friday that the junior Senator from Oregon made himself perfectly clear on the floor of the Senate as to his position in regard to such unanimous-consent requests. I pointed out in my remarks on this issue when it was under discussion last Friday that when such requests were offered I for one, to protect what I believe to be a certain minority liberal point of view on the Republican side which will not be protected unless a few of us rise to protect it, would, as a general policy, not agree to such requests. I said that when I did agree to such requests, any agreement to divide up the time would have to be backed up by a secondary agreement, namely, an agreement with those of us who represent a minority point of view on the Republican side, that we shall be allotted a definite period of time under such an agreement.

I deeply regret this occurrence, Mr. President, of avoiding an objection from me by proceeding with the agreement while I was called to the telephone. I think it was absolutely unnecessary, because I would have been glad to try to work out a division of time as the basis of some agreement. I think it was unfortunate. I think it was most unfair to the junior Senator from Oregon, when his views on this particular matter are well known, to have the debate-limitation agreement put through the Senate while he was off the floor only a very few minutes in order to answer a telephone call. I hope that greater parliamentary courtesy will be extended to me in the future by the Republican leaders. If not, I shall try to form a protective society for those of us who find it difficult to be in two places at the same time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I would like to make an observation in response to the statement just made by the junior Senator from Oregon, for whom I have a very high regard.

In the first place, this agreement does not have to do with the final passage of a bill, nor of a joint resolution.

If I understand the rules of the Senate correctly, it is not mandatory that a roll call be had except when a unanimous-consent agreement is requested in connection with the final passage of a bill or joint resolution.

I believe I am correct. If I am, certainly there was no violation of any rule of the Senate in my suggesting to the Members of the Senate the unanimous-consent agreement to vote on Friday at 5 o'clock.

Furthermore, I suggested the unanimous-consent agreement to the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] who is now present. He said he would reserve the right to object. I said then, so everyone could hear me, that I would appreciate it if he would consult the minority leader, and if the minority leader could suggest a day and an hour when it would be satisfactory that we might vote on this issue, I should be glad to entertain such a unanimous-consent agreement. That was done.

I asked the minority leader if he had in mind any hour or any day certain, and between us we agreed on 5 o'clock Friday afternoon.

I would like to say to the distinguished Senator from Oregon, that I do not believe that in that particular instance his rights were in any way violated or prejudiced. I regret very much that he was off the floor, but certainly the thing was done aboveboard; it was done in the open. I asked for the agreement, the Senators I mentioned brought back the proposal, and I accepted it.

I desire the junior Senator from Oregon to know that I, for one, shall protect his rights at any time, especially if there may be a violation of the rules, but in this case there was no violation. I think the rights of the junior Senator from Oregon were amply protected.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. May I assure the Senator from Nebraska the junior Senator from Oregon does not charge that his rights were violated. He simply desires, however, to point out for the RECORD that he is satisfied the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] as Republican whip, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] the majority leader, are well aware of the views of the junior Senator from Oregon on this matter. I agree that they violate no right of the junior Senator any time they desire to effect such an agreement as they did this afternoon when the junior Senator from Oregon was off the floor.

My only point is that I think fair dealing and parliamentary courtesy entitled me at least to have my majority leader and my whip, in view of my previous expressions on the floor of the Senate since the beginning of the Eightieth Congress in regard to such limitations upon debate, talk to me about the unanimous-consent request before they presented it in my absence. I think my point is well taken especially in view of the fact that I am sure I made myself rather clear earlier in the afternoon, that I desired to be heard on the matter. There certainly are those sitting near me that will testify that I sought to object to the proposal earlier this afternoon. Further my record on this issue is so perfectly clear in light of the many statements I made about it in the Seventy-ninth Congress and again last Friday that I just do not understand why neither the majority leader or the Republican whip failed to extend me the courtesy of a consultation on the request.

Mr. WHERRY. One further thing. I do not care unduly to prolong this discussion. The junior Senator from Oregon has been protected in his rights by the whip many, many times. It is a difficult thing to do.

There certainly was ample time here for the consideration of this unanimous-consent request, and while I respect the rights of the junior Senator from Oregon, I desire to say that the time has come when the majority party must keep the Senate in session.

The time is here when we should proceed to debate these issues and come to a vote. That is absolutely necessary, in the light of the debate that has been held here for the past 10 days on the resolution continuing the War Investigating Committee. The vote on the pending resolution should have been had this afternoon at 5 o'clock.

I desire the Senator to know that I am going to be present to keep the Senate in session. I told the Senator that the only reason why we would not stay in session any longer this afternoon was that I desired to get an early vote on Resolution 20. So when the Senators came back with the unanimous-consent agreement, which was discussed within the hearing of everyone, and everyone was protected, we agreed to it. I desire the junior Senator from Oregon to know that I shall continue to protect his rights, but the work of the United States Senate comes ahead of the rights of any one Senator upon the floor. I think we have a right to an early vote on this matter, and I think the Senator could agree with me that the least I could do was to secure agreement for a vote on Friday, if a vote could not be had this afternoon.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Has the Senator, as the Republican whip, ever failed to receive the cooperation of the junior Senator from Oregon in keeping the Senate in session?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not complaining about the cooperation of the junior Senator from Oregon. I am simply telling him that I have discharged my responsibilities as the majority whip. The unanimous-consent agreement was entered into on the floor of the United States Senate in good faith. The rights of the Senator from Oregon were not violated. In the orderly process of continuing the work of the Senate I think Senators should be on the Senate floor, and it was because I wanted an early vote on the resolution that I finally, reluctantly, agreed to a vote being had on Friday night at 5 o'clock.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I want to make two points. The first point is that I think I have always cooperated with the Senator from Nebraska in keeping the Senate in session. Never have I asked that the Senate recess early. In fact on many occasions I have pleaded that the Senate go into night session, as I think it should many times during the Eightieth Congress, to transact the business of the Senate.

The second point I want to make to my good friend, the Senator from Nebraska, is that I charge no violation of rights. I am just going to leave it to the conscience of the Senator from Nebraska as to whether he thinks, knowing my views on this matter, and in view of the fact that I was called into the cloakroom to answer a telephone call, it would not have been more sporting of him to have at least said to me, "Are you willing to go along with the unanimous-consent agreement?" He well knows my views and I think as individual Senators we should be able to feel that our majority leader and our whip will not proceed with action which leaves us with the feeling that it is not safe for us to even leave the floor to answer the telephone.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to say a word in answer to what the Senator from Oregon has said?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I think I was in default in some measure at least in that I did not call the Senator's attention to the fact that a unanimous-consent request was pending. I have known the views of the Senator from Oregon. I have to a large extent shared those views. I have tried always to be considerate of and courteous to the Senator from Oregon. But the plain truth of the matter is that the unanimous-consent agreement was involved here out of a running discussion participated in by the Senator from Nebraska, by some Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and in a smaller and less consequential degree by myself, and I confess that I did not know whether the Senator from Oregon was present in the Senate Chamber or not. If I had sensed his absence from the floor I would have urged that there be a ringing of the bells and that the Senator from Oregon have his opportunity to speak his views and to take such action as he might see fit.

I beg the Senator to believe that there was no intentional discourtesy to him on my part. I was simply involved in a running discussion heading toward a unanimous-consent agreement, and I simply did not note whether the Senator was present on the floor or not. And with that and for that I express regret to him.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Maine that I deeply appreciate the few remarks he has made. I understand the situation perfectly. I take it for granted from what the majority leader said that if in the future I have objections to a unanimous-consent agreement and happen to be called off the floor temporarily he will hold it up until I get back. I think that is fair. Further, I think I, too, have a mutuality of obligation to the majority leader of trying to indicate to him in advance what my position will be on any unanimous-consent agreement proposal to limit debate. That I shall endeavor to do. However, this afternoon I did not have the slightest idea that this unanimous-consent agreement was going to be brought up while I walked out into the cloakroom to answer the telephone, especially in view of the fact that I was on my feet earlier in the afternoon trying to make clear that I was going to object, but at that time the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] was the one who was recognized. I am sure we understand each other a little better as the result of this discussion.

RECESS TO FRIDAY

Mr. WHITE. If there be no other business to come before the Senate at this time, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Friday, January 24, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit divine, the source of all things good and holy, dissolve our hearts in gratitude and mold our wills with Thine. Amid the labor and the calm of this day, we pray for Thine all-embracing wisdom to lead us that we may be masters of pure motives and sincere desires.

We pray, blessed Lord, that we may see the crown of that which was once the thorn, and the victory of that which was once our trial. Wherever truth is shining, wherever the rugged virtue of justice is lifting its warning finger, wherever charity and tolerance are wearing their healing garments, we beseech Thy richest blessings. Be Thou the lamp unto our pathways when our skies are overcast and the way is confused. In the name of our Saviour we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 21, 1947, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 68):

Joint Committee on Printing: Mr. Brooks, of Illinois; Mr. Jenner, of Indiana; Mr. Hayden, of Arizona.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith submit my resignation as a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Respectfully,

H. A. COFFIN.

ADJOURNMENT OVER AND PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and, of course, I shall not object, will the gentleman, as best he can at this time, give us the program for next week?

Mr. HALLECK. It is our present plan to meet on next Monday, but there will be no legislative business on that day. Then I hope we can adjourn over until Wednesday. On Wednesday next the excise-tax bill from the Committee on Ways and Means will come on for consideration in the House. The rule provides for 3 hours of general debate, and it is my hope that the consideration of the bill can be concluded on Wednesday. We then will meet on Thursday and, I hope, can adjourn over then until the following Monday.

Mr. RAYBURN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KEEFE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman whether the rule that was granted for the consideration of this bill is the usual rule applicable to bills coming from the Committee on Ways and Means, in that it does not permit any amendment to the bill?

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know just how we might characterize the usual rule. It has been the practice in the years I have been here that rules on tax bills coming from the Committee on Ways and Means provide for amendments to be offered by the committee, but not for amendments otherwise to be offered on the floor. It is my understanding that this rule is of that nature.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

STATIONERY ROOM

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to announce to the Members that the stationery room will be closed on Saturday of this week at the request of the Comptroller General for inventory and stock taking.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 62), as follows:

Resolved, That WALTER H. JUDD, of Minnesota, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and to rank No. 3 thereon.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

DOCUMENTS UNDER CONTROL OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JANUARY 22, 1947.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: From the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, I have received a letter requesting me to produce certain and sundry documents, therein described, in Criminal Court No. 3, United States District Court for the District of Columbia in the trial of the United States v. Benjamin F. Fields.

The papers in question are part of the files of the House of Representatives, having been received in evidence by the Select Committee To Investigate Disposition of Surplus Property, of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Since these papers are under the unqualified control of the House of Representatives, and the Clerk is not possessed of any right over them that would enable him to comply with such a request without first obtaining the consent of the House, the letter in question is submitted herewith and the matter is presented for such action as the House in its wisdom may see fit to take.

Very respectfully,

JOHN ANDREWS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the United States attorney for the District of Columbia:

JANUARY 21, 1947.

The CLERK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the trial of the case of United States v. Benjamin F. Fields on January 22, 1947, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, a charge of contempt of the House of Representatives, it will be necessary to have available for use by the Government as evidence the following documents which were received in evidence by the Select Committee To Investigate Disposition of Surplus Property of the Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, and which are presently among the records of that committee:

Exhibits 1, 14, 15, 23, 24, 25, 26, 48, 49, 50, 55, 65, 69, 72, 83, 84, and 90, and receipts relating thereto.

These documents should be produced in Criminal Court No. 3, United States District Courthouse, Fifth Street and Indiana Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., at 9:45 a. m., January 22, 1947.

In the course of the trial it may be necessary to make use of certain other documents having to do with the committee hearings mentioned above, and it, therefore, would be helpful if the list of documents furnished herein could be supplemented by an oral request of my assistant, William Hitz.

Respectfully,

GEORGE MORRIS FAY,
United States Attorney for the District of Columbia.
By WILLIAM HITZ,
Assistant United States Attorney for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 64), as follows:

Whereas in the case of the United States against Benjamin F. Fields, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the United States attorney for the District of Columbia has addressed a letter to John Andrews, Clerk of the House of Representatives, requesting him to appear as a witness before Criminal Court No. 3, and to bring with him certain and sundry original papers in the possession and under the control of the House of Represenatives; and

Whereas the United States attorney for the District of Columbia advises that for certain reasons it is essential that the original papers and documents be produced in court, and not merely certified or photostatic copies thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved, That by the privilege of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in the possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate of process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession but by its permission; be it further

Resolved, That when it appears by the order of the court or of the judge thereof, or any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer, for the promotion of justice, this House will take such order thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House; be it further

Resolved, That John Andrews, Clerk of the House, or an official in his office designated by him, be authorized to appear at the place and before the officer named in the communication beforementioned, with the originals as well as certified photostatic copies of the documents and papers mentioned in the said communication, as well as such other papers and documents pertaining to said case as may be requested, and submit the said papers and documents to the examination of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia from time to time according to its convenience, retaining, however, the custody of the original papers and documents; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the said court and to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia as a respectful answer to the communication afore-mentioned.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION — EIGHTEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF STATE OF NEW YORK

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on House Administration:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1947.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
The House of Representatives.

SIR: The accompanying notice to contest the election of the returned Member from the Eighteenth Congressional District of the State of New York, which is also in the nature of a petition, was received in the office of the Clerk and is being transmitted for disposal.

Very truly yours,

JOHN ANDREWS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF MEMBERS IN CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, preliminary to the publication of the biographical sketches of Members in the new Congressional Directory, I have been asked to obtain from the newly elected Members on the majority side a statement from any of them who, prior to being elected to the Congress, occupied the position of speaker in his own State legislature. If any such Member would transmit that information to me at the earliest possible date, it would make it possible for me to fulfill my obligation.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, while I am not a sales manager nor am I trying to suggest that anybody should buy copies of the speech which I made entitled "The Making of a Congressman," orders have now come into my office totaling some 60,000 copies. I am about to send the order to the Public Printer, and I do not propose as heretofore—perhaps I should not say this—to furnish some ten or fifteen thousand copies for the use of those who do not seem to think they can afford to buy them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am disturbed about immigration to this country. It does seem that the Committee on the Judiciary, now handling the problem, should immediately look into the phase of just how many aliens are permitted to come into the United States. They will need to make a full investigation, based on the facts if they can get them.

I am disturbed and concerned because of the apparent confusion in the several departments of Government covering the problems of immigration. The American people are not being told the truth. In my efforts to get information on this subject, I run into the reluctance on the part of Government agencies to furnish facts, and they make statements about a Presidential order prohibiting the giving out of such information. It is utterly impossible to get, from the State Department or from the immigration authorities, the true picture as to the types of people coming into the United States. Rumors are afloat about large groups coming in weekly. Last month the President issued orders for four ships to stop at European ports to pick up displaced persons. Yet, his report to the Congress would indicate that a mere trickle has been coming in. There seems to be no difference between a regular visa and a visa issued to a displaced person or an immigrant. How much truth is there to the rumor that individuals are entering this country by first becoming citizens of other countries with very loose quota arrangements? These questions need investigation.

Immigration is a subject that should be an open book. The Congress and the people are entitled to have complete information about it. Suppression will lead to serious consequences. It will inevitably lead to false data and rumors that will really intensify prejudices. The administration should have learned a lesson. While suppression of information of strictly military importance was necessary during the war, the broad application of the principle is now doing irreparable damage. Suppression of immigration facts and the slanting of propaganda to favor certain policies should be stopped.

I am fully aware of the fact that there are many displaced persons in the world. This country has not been derelict in its duty of supplying food, clothing, and medicine to this class of people.

The United States was formed and its governmental ideas were established by the people who came mostly from northern Europe. They came to our shores imbued with the idea of individual liberty and desired the opportunity to prosper and raise their families. When the character of our immigrants began to change the Congress set up the quota system and placed upon it some other restrictions aimed at preserving the character of our population. Until 10 years ago this system was strictly adhered to. Are the laws being as strictly observed today? The Congress and the people have a right to know.

In the confusion and secrecy that now exists, there is grave danger that large groups of disgruntled people with totalitarian concepts and individuals serving groups and powers will find their way into our country and disrupt our American way of life. I am certain a careful scrutiny of the records today will show that many of the people now coming will not make a contribution to good government. A great many of them are disturbers. Many of them are joining groups and societies that have in mind changing our form of government.

Mr. Speaker, we are in a period of readjustment. Housing is short. Great numbers of our veterans have not found their place in our postwar economy. Many are attending schools or are in training programs to fit them to return to industry. Many people who were employed in war industries are finding it difficult to get into peacetime jobs. It does seem that before we permit a resumption of immigration on a prewar scale, we should settle some of our internal problems. Indeed, it would seem that immigration should be halted for a number of years or until we find the solution of some of our own pressing problems.

No one in this Congress can be more sympathetic to the sufferings of mankind than this speaker. I have seen by personal observation, not only physical suffering, but the low standards of living and the suffering they now have in many foreign countries. The war has made these conditions immeasurably worse. I do not believe the answer to their problem is to bring them here. Not when we may endanger our country by opening our gates to the prejudices and hatreds of foreign countries. It is far better to do what we can for them there and teach them by example the kind of life they might enjoy under democratic principles.

Mr. Speaker, I am suggesting that an investigation be made by the proper committee at once. I am sure that they will reach a decision to close our doors to further immigration. I am sure the American people and the Congress should have all the facts. After that we can formulate a policy that will preserve our institutions and at the same time offer an opportunity for those who come to our shores to have the kind of life we enjoy.

ELECTION TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 65), as follows:

Resolved, That HOWARD A. COFFIN, of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, elected to the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Public Works.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON (at the request of Mr. REED of New York) was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by David Lawrence.

Mr. HOLMES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include, at the request of Herbert G. West, executive vice president of the Inland Waterways Association, an address delivered by Lt. Gen. R. A. Wheeler, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, before the annual meeting of the association in Portland, Oreg., October 24, 1946.

Mr. LEFEVRE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mark Sullivan.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address by Lothrop Stoddard.

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include four bills introduced at the request of the American Legion.

WHEAT PENALTIES

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture, with the acquiescence of this Congress, in 1941 changed the rules on the wheat farmers in the middle of the game, and increased the penalties that they must pay on wheat from 15 cents to 49 cents a bushel. That was after the wheat had been planted, and in some sections of the country was ready to harvest. In 1942 the penalty was continued until such time as all quotas and restrictions on acreage were removed. In 1942 they permitted the farmer to either put up a bond or pay the penalties in cash. Those who paid in cash are, of course, subjected to the penalties, while those who put up bonds according to my information were forgiven on the bonds.

In 1941 the penalties collected from the farmers was something over $13,000,000, $2,000,000 plus of which was extracted from my Oklahoma farmers. In 1942 the wheat farmers over the country paid something over $2,000,000 before penalties were removed and approximately $275,000 of this amount was paid by the wheat farmers of Oklahoma.

I am today introducing a bill to do justice to the farmers of this country who paid these penalties. My bill would require the Department of Agriculture to refund the penalties exacted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

DEDICATION DAY

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a joint resolution designating the 19th day of November, the anniversary of the delivery of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, as Dedication Day. This resolution does not provide that the day be declared a legal holiday. I should be hesitant indeed to add to the present number of such occasions.

It seems to me, however, that in these times, so critical for our Nation, we may well pause for a moment one day a year to listen to that outstanding classic, which has touched the hearts of men and inspired them with faith in our matchless democracy ever since those words were uttered, and will continue to do so for all time to come.

The resolution requests the President of the United States to suggest to the country that on November 19 these incomparable words be read in public assemblages throughout the country, on our ships at sea, and wherever the American flag flies and, particularly, in our schools, where it is hoped that the ideals and objectives embodied in these words may serve to dilute to some extent the effect of other teachings which carry messages to our young people far less desirable than these inspiring words of Abraham Lincoln.

I hope this resolution may have the support of this body.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NORBLAD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances, in one to include an editorial from the Portland Oregonian, and in the second an article from the current issue of the United States News.

Mr. OWENS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Chicago Tribune of January 19 entitled "Squeeze in Cocoa."

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a news item from the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of January 21.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the question of Carl Aldo Marzani, a former employee of the State Department.

ORIGIN OF PORTAL-TO-PORTAL PAY SUITS

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Mount Clemens Pottery Co. case, otherwise known as portal-to-portal pay suit, has touched off legal actions involving billions of dollars in portal-pay claims. Industry is threatened by this far-reaching decision.

As chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, I am in possession of certain information dealing with the inspiration of the original portal-to-portal pay suit which I think every Member of Congress should be apprised of. The individual who is credited with concocting the idea of these suits, and the lawyer who brought the original action which was sustained by the Supreme Court, both have long records of Communist affiliation which I propose to give in my remarks today.

According to an article which was published in the Union, official organ of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers on January 6, 1947, page 6, Ben Riskin, former research director for the Union, is credited with being the person who conceived the portal-to-portal claims idea, and according to the Union, he pestered Lee Pressman, general counsel of the CIO, until Pressman finally agreed to look into the matter of portal-to-portal claims. Also, Mr. Drew Pearson, in his syndicated column, the Merry-Go-Round, on January 10, 1947, stated:

WHO STARTED PORTAL FIGHT?

Some of the biggest lawyers on Wall Street are now burning the midnight oil trying to figure out ways and means of beating portal-to-portal lawsuits, while high-paid lobbyists are pulling wires to stop portal-to-portal back payments.

What these high-powered legal brains don't know, however, is that a $65-a-week CIO organizer, Ben Riskin, formerly with the CIO mine, mill and smelter workers, concocted the idea which is causing them so much trouble.

It was Riskin—not a lawyer—who pored over the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act, passed primarily to halt sweatshop conditions in the needle trades and which provides that employees must be paid for hours worked. Those last three words, "for hours worked," seemed awfully important to Riskin, but at first he couldn't even get his own CIO colleagues interested.

Finally, however, he sold his idea to Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, and persuaded him to start suit on behalf of the CIO metal miners, who had to spend extra time traveling through mine shafts to their point of work.

Pressman made a thorough study of the question; discovered that in Europe miners were paid from the time they entered the mine, that in Arizona portal-to-portal pay was the basic law of the State, and that Montana had passed a portal-to-portal law that later was killed by the State supreme court.

This disclosure becomes extremely important because of Mr. Riskin's Communist background. If what the Union and Mr. Pearson have reported is true, then it appears that the present legal controversy between industry and labor which has been occasioned by portal-to-portal suits has Communist inspiration.

As an indication of the political views of Mr. Riskin, I call your attention to the April-May 1935 issue of the magazine the New Order, which is the official publication of the International Workers Order, one of the outstanding Communist fronts in the United States. Page 2 of this issue lists Ben Riskin as an associate editor of the magazine, and page 3 carries a featured article by him entitled "May First, 1936." He begins his article by quoting Friedrich Engels, coauthor of the Communist Manifesto:

As I write these lines, the proletariat of Europe and America is holding a review of its forces; it is mobilized for the first time as one army, under one flag, and fighting for one immediate aim. The spectacle we are now witnessing will make the capitalists and landowners of all lands realize that today th proletariat of all lands are, in very truth, united.

Then Mr. Riskin states:

Over one-sixth of the earth has been established a workers' and farmers' land, rising with incredible speed to a state of real general security and comfort, crowned with an ever-growing richness of culture, with ever-deeper plumbings into the realms of science and life.

While in the remaining five-sixths of the world (except in Soviet China where the struggles for a soviet society still go on), decadent capitalism with its 6-year-old depression holds a suffering humanity in a clammy, ruthless, and deadly grasp.

Further quoting from Riskin's article, he states:

Like rats in a corner, the bosses with their backs against the wall resort to their last trick—war.

And thus we find our present problems already outlined. They are the fight against the same old raw deal—the fight for a high living standard for all by the creation of a workers' and farmers' society through the overthrow of the capitalist society. It is with these issues that the American workers of 1935 will flood the streets of America to carry on the glorious tradition of 1886. And it is by such demonstrations of mass unity in days of struggle that we shall win the demands we raise.

This same issue of the New Order contains an article by the general secretary of the International Workers' Order, Max Bedacht, who at that time was also a member of the executive committee of the Communist Party. He also had served as the general secretary of the Communist Party of the United States in 1929. I should like also to call your attention to the fact that the president of the International Workers' Order, at the time this article was written, was William Weiner, alias Welwel Warzower. Mr. Weiner was also treasurer of the Communist Party of the United States, as well as a member of the executive committee. Later, in 1940, he was convicted along with Earl Browder in Federal court for traveling on a false passport. I have cited this for the purpose of making it very clear that the International Workers' Order is under the complete domination of the Communist Party.

The Daily Worker, official organ of the Communist Party, of September 14, 1940, features a story under the headline "Senate sends draft bill back—vital time is gained for fight against draft by peace forces." The article states:

> Earlier in the day representatives of the (American) Peace Mobilization conferred with Senator Wheeler in his office. Present at the meeting with the Montana Senator were John P. Davis, secretary of the National Negro Congress; Howard Lee and Joseph Gelders, of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare; Dr. Treadwell Smith; Fred Keller, of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade; Leon Strauss, of the Furriers Union; Ben Riskin, of the Mine, Mill and Smelters Workers; and Jack Whirl, of the National Maritime Union, and a number of others.

All of the above-mentioned organizations and unions are Communist-controlled. The American Peace Mobilization, as you will recall, was a Communist-front organization which operated during the period of the Soviet-Nazi pact. It is the same organization which picketed the White House protesting against lend-lease to Britain and conscription.

Mr. Riskin was also a member of the advisory committee of the League for Mutual Aid, a Communist-front, whose slogan was "From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs." On the executive committee of this organization was Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, a member of the national executive committee of the Communist Party.

There are other Communist affiliations of Mr. Riskin which could be set forth. However, I feel that the above are sufficient to give you some idea of the background of this individual who, it is reported, concocted the idea of the portal-to-portal pay suits.

Now, I should like to call your attention to the Communist record of the attorney who brought the original action in the Mount Clemens case. He is Mr. Edward Lamb, of Toledo, Ohio. Mr. Lamb, like Mr. Riskin, has followed the Communist Party line and has associated himself with numerous Communist fronts which have been set up during the past 10 years. Mr. Lamb, like Mr. Riskin, was against conscription during the period of the Soviet-Nazi pact. He was a member of the Lawyers Committee To Keep the United States Out of War, of the Emergency Peace Mobilization, later the American Peace Mobilization. This organization sent a telegram to the House Military Affairs Committee against conscription. (See Daily Worker, September 4, 1943, p. 3.)

He also signed a statement to the President of the United States defending the Communist Part. (See Daily Worker, March 5, 1941, p. 2.)

He was a member of the National Committee of the International Labor Defense, an organization which serves as the legal arm of the Communist Party. He is also a member of the National Legal Advisory Board of that organization. When this organization held its national conference in Washington, D. C., June 15, 1937, Mr. Lamb addressed the national conference, along with Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party at that time. Mr. Lamb, in 1938, was executive vice president of the National Lawyers Guild, a Communist front, organized in September 1939.

He was signer of an open letter for closer cooperation with the Soviet Union. He was a contributor to the October 1935 issue of Soviet Russia Today, also to the March 1936 issue of the same publication.

He was a member of the executive committee of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, a Communist-front organization.

He was sponsor of the American Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born, also a Communist-front organization.

He was also signer on the appeal in behalf of Sam Darcy, notorious Communist, which appeal was sponsored by the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, a Communist front.

PRICE MANIPULATION

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to compliment President Truman on again demonstrating the fact that he is not going to subject the starving people of this world to partisan politics. He has demonstrated this now for the second time by selecting Herbert Hoover to go over to study the food conditions in Germany. I am beginning to wonder, however, if it is not just about time we took some such position as that right here in America.

During the last month or so the Department of Agriculture has issued statement after statement saying what the prices would be for certain agricultural products at some future date. Even yesterday some great man in the State of Wisconsin knew exactly what the price of butter was going to be next June. According to this morning's paper some well-known economist of New York, who is now basking in the sunshine of Florida, states that agricultural prices are coming down a certain percent.

I just wonder sometimes why people who read the newspapers have not heard about the Steagall amendment. There is one man today who knows and has something to do about future farm prices, and that man's name is Clinton P. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture. The Congress and both parties are committed by legislation to support the Steagall amendment in order to maintain prices at certain levels for the next 2 years. These guessers really do not know what they are talking about.

If the speculators and market manipulators wish to carry on their activities they had better be advised that the floor prices for American agricultural products is to be not less than 90 percent of parity. The crystal ball gazers who term themselves economists can take a leaf out of the same notebook.

RESTORING TO VETERANS SOCIAL SECURITY CREDITS

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a measure restoring to veterans the social-security credits put in danger by their military service. This measure restores the social-security status that veterans would have had if the war had not deprived them of their employment in insurable industry, and it should become a law with the least possible delay.

Congress cannot afford to delay the correction of this injustice. This discrimination against veterans must be outlawed.

The Social Security Act, by the terms of the bill I have introduced, is so amended that service in the armed forces shall not adversely affect the equities and rights of workers who went to war.

Under the law as it now is, workers are fully insured, permanently, if they have earned in insurable employment at least $50 in half the quarter-year periods since 1936, or since they reached 21 years of age. Military service has prevented veterans of this war from attaining this status. The law also provides for a currently insured status under which death benefits are paid to certain dependents of workers who have paid pay roll taxes in at least half the quarters in the 3 years preceding death. As a matter of course, most veterans, by reason of absence from their jobs, while in military service, have had no chance to make this contribution. They are not, therefore, currently insured at the present time.

The bill I have introduced protects the veteran's prewar social-security status and credits his account with an amount equal to what he would have earned if he had spent the time he served in the armed forces in an insurable employment at $160 a month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SALARY AND ALLOWANCES OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, the right of a Member of the House of Representatives to salary and allowances is fixed by law. I see no good reason why the Speaker of the House should be required to make individual monthly certifications of such rights, nor do I see any good reason why Members should be asked in advance to sign binding receipts for salary and allowances which actually they have not received.

I suggest consideration of these matters on the part of the Committee on House Administration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Sotarios Nicholson.

SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the request for information by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK], may I say that arrangements have been made so that Members who desire to cash their travel allowances immediately may do so by taking the signed voucher to the office of the Speaker where it will be certified as due. It may then be taken to the office of the Sergeant at Arms where Members can arrange to draw their money forthwith. I think similar arrangements may be made as to monthly salary checks.

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHELF] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Hon. J. Proctor Knott. He has been informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $160, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one a resolution he received from the city clerk of Chicago, and in the other a letter he received that was addressed to Secretary of State Marshall.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PRICE of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

PORTAL-TO-PORTAL SUITS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the Members a bill, H. R. 1041, which I introduced a few days ago on the problem raised by the so-called portal-to-portal suits.

My bill is rather simple. It is designed to provide relief from unwarranted windfall suits based on past transactions only. It does not in any way curtail the rights of labor as interpreted by the Supreme Court insofar as new contracts are concerned. It does not attempt to redefine the workweek as now interpreted by the Supreme Court.

It seems to me that it is not so important what the definition of work shall be; what is important is that both labor and industry understand definitely what the workday and workweek are. The Supreme Court has now definitely established that in carefully considered and carefully worded opinions. It would seem to me that if we attempt to redefine the workday or workweek, we will merely invite further difficulties and disputes for the future. The way to avoid strikes and lawsuits is to avoid disputes.

I earnestly invite the consideration of the Members of the House who have been studying and who have introduced bills on this problem and I also invite the earnest consideration of the Committee on Education and Labor to the approach I have suggested in my bill. It is not my desire to criticize other bills but I feel that all of us should give the problem careful consideration and that we should present in writing at an early date, for the benefit of all of us, our conclusions.

My bill is limited to three provisos: First, relief from the penalties of the act under section 14, where the violation is not willful; second, relief from unwarranted windfall suits under section 14; and, third, a provision authorizing settlement of such disputes as have arisen or which may arise in the future after services have been performed.

The second of the above objectives is, of course, the most important to the industry, the public, and labor as well. I have undertaken to cover that by adding to section 14 of the act a proviso which I will quote in full with emphasis on two or three limitation phrases considered by me as important in the appraisal of the amendment. That proviso reads as follows:

And provided further, That in any action based upon services performed by any employee prior to the effective date of this amendment, claim for which is based on the mandate of sections 6 and 7 and/or 14 of this act and not upon the express or implied provisions of any contract, no compensation shall be allowed by the courts, either as compensatory or as liquidated damages, where it is found by the court—

(1) That the services were rendered pursuant to a contract of employment defining the hours of work or workweek and entered into through collective bargaining and in good faith; or

(2) Where the claim is based on items of time or services which were, pursuant to general and established custom and with the acquiescence of the employee, absorbed in the rate of pay but excluded from measured time; or

(3) Where the claim is based on incidental activities required as preliminary or preparatory to the actual performance of productive work otherwise compensated, or required as incidental to the conclusion of such productive work, which incidental activities were not, because of usage or custom, included in the measured time and were not contemplated as items to be included in the measured time by either the employer or employee under the terms of employment express or implied.

SEC. 2. Section 16 of said act is hereby further amended by adding thereto a new subsection reading as follows:

"(c) Any employee may, directly or through his duly authorized agent or collective-bargaining representative, waive, compromise, adjust, settle, or release, either before or after commencement of suit thereon, any claim heretofore accrued or which may hereafter accrue to such employee under this act on account of services theretofore rendered by such employee; and a waiver, compromise, adjustment, settlement, or release of any such claim by such employee or his duly authorized agent or representative shall constitute a complete satisfaction of such claim and a complete bar to any action based on such claim."

One further word of explanation: Employment of any kind is the result of contract, oral or written, express or implied; but it does not necessarily follow that everything done is compensable pursuant to the contract of employment. Where, as in the majority of these suits, the claim is based on items not considered as compensable when the services were entered into or rendered, but are made compensable at time or time and a half by the statute, irrespective of contract or the intention of the parties, the right to such payment may be withdrawn in the interests of public policy even though the acts constituting such compensable items have been performed and suits filed thereon. It is well established, as stated in National Carloading Corp. v. Phoenix-El Paso Express (176 S. W. 564), that "rights of action based upon purely statutory grounds may be abolished by the legislature even after they have accrued."

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ADMINISTRATION

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, last May 21 I appeared before this House to charge that John H. Fahey, Commissioner, Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, and his subordinates, arbitrarily and unlawfully abused the authority and discretion of their respective offices in abolishing, without cause, the Federal Home Loan Bank of Los Angeles, and seizing the Long Beach Federal Savings and Loan Association of Long Beach, Calif. Complaints were lodged with the Special Committee To Investigate Executive Agencies, and hearings were scheduled and held during the month of June. At these hearings John H. Fahey, testifying in his own defense, stated:

I doubt if any member of this committee or Member of Congress has less sympathy than I with public officials who, by their autocratic attitudes, abuse authority invested in them by law and invite just condemnation. I think that any official found guilty of such offenses should be displaced promptly.

In July the Special Committee To Investigate Executive Agencies issued its unanimous report, and, among other things, found John H. Fahey, Commissioner, Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, and Harold Lee, Governor, Federal Home Loan Bank System, guilty of the abuse of authority which John H. Fahey himself testified justifies prompt displacement from public office.

The committee, in particular, condemned the action of these men as being without foundation in law; an abuse of authority; injudicious, arbitrary, and incompatible with principles of good administration or sound policy in Government.

Since Mr. Fahey believes that public officials guilty of such offenses should be displaced, I have today introduced a resolution requesting the President of the United States to immediately remove from public office the said John H. Fahey and Harold Lee. It may interest the Members of the House to also know that the select committee unanimously recommended that the Federal Home Loan Bank of Los Angeles, abolished by Fahey last March, be restored to its former autonomous status. The committee likewise called upon Fahey and Lee to revoke their orders appointing a conservator for the Long Beach Federal Savings and Loan Association and recommended return of the institution to its former management. Fahey, instead of respecting the recommendations of the committee, bitterly denounced the findings of the committee and expressed his defiance of Congress to the press. It seems to me that the first order of business, in connection with the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, is the removal of Messrs. Fahey and Lee. The next order of business, logically, is the amendment of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act so as to prevent further indiscretions and abuse of authority by the personnel of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration. In the next few days I shall introduce such amendatory legislation. Finally, Executive Order 9070 should be repealed so as to allow the automatic reestablishment of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the return of some semblance of democracy to the agency that Fahey and Lee have so despotically reigned over since the date of said order.

RESOLUTION

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that John H. Fahey should be immediately removed from the office of Commissioner of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration and that Harold Lee should be immediately removed from the office of Governor of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, and that the Clerk of the House cause a certified copy of this resolution to be laid before the President of the United States.

FREIGHT RATE DISCRIMINATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a bill I have introduced today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that "a house divided against itself cannot stand."

The great leader of the Republican Party, Abraham Lincoln, once said that this Nation could not continue to exist "half slave and half free."

This country cannot continue to endure the dishonest, one-way freight rates with which the South and West are today punished.

Therefore, I have introduced a short bill that, if it passes and becomes law, will eliminate the most outrageous, most unjust, and dishonest discrimination ever imposed upon the people living west of the Mississippi River and the ones living south of the Ohio River.

I hope every one of you will read it, because this battle is on from this day forward.

It costs about twice as much to ship freight north from the States south of the Ohio, or east from States west of the Mississippi, as it does to ship it the other direction over the same road. It punishes the people of Kansas, Iowa, and other Western States just the same as it does us people in the South.

We have two-thirds of the Senate and about half of the House, and for the first time in history, we have a President of the United States living in the punished area, and we are going to be heard from.

All we ask is justice for the people of the entire Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

DEFINITION OF AREAS OF PRODUCTION

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, it has been interesting to note the comment throughout the country and in the well of this House with respect to the subject of portal-to-portal pay, and the voluminous remedies that have been suggested to deal with that problem. May I call to the attention of the Members of the House another growing situation that will furnish the foundation for a lot of lawsuits that will be just as vicious as the so-called portal-to-portal pay lawsuit. If you are not familiar with it, I suggest that you read the recent definition of "area of production" issued by the administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, and then apply that definition to your district and to those processors who are engaged in processing and making butter or cheese or canning the products of the farm. You will find, in view of the Supreme Court decision which invalidated the former definition of "area of production" and made necessary this new description or definition, that the whole thing is retroactive, and you will find many little plants in your district that will now be confronted with claims under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act based upon this new definition as to what is contemplated by the words "area of production." I am going to make a speech on that subject at length next week and offer some legislation to deal with that before it becomes as acute as the portal-to-portal situation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a bill, H. R. 1038.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, January 29, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address by our former colleague, Hon. Clyde Ellis. The extension consists of 2½ pages of the RECORD and the Public Printer estimates the cost at $160. Notwithstanding the cost, I ask unanimous consent that the extension may be made.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding the cost and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONDERO). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PROPAGANDA LITERATURE BY FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I know many of the Members planned to listen to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and I am just going to take a few minutes until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] can get to the floor, when he will follow me. I say that for the benefit of those Members who want to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced a resolution, now known as House Resolution 50, asking for the appointment of a small committee—I suggested a nine-man committee—to study the operations and workings of people engaged in the Federal agencies turning out so-called propaganda. I want to make it very clear at the outset that I am not attempting, nor would I attempt, to do anything to make it difficult for newspaper men and radio commentators to get all of the information that they possibly can as to the operation of the various departments of our Government. In fact, I think that that service to the newspapermen and radio commentators could, and should, be improved. I think the men in our Government who are making decisions and formulating policies should give the press an opportunity to interview them so that the newspapers would not have to depend, as they do in so many cases, on prepared "canned" press releases. But the point that I want to emphasize is the wasting of hundreds of thousands, and perhaps even millions, of dollars each year by the executive departments of our Government in publishing under the guise of reports purely propaganda documents. I have been appalled at the amount of literature printed at Government expense which comes over the desk of every Member of Congress and which has been coming over our desks for several years. In the last 2 years, when I was not a Member of the House, there was very little let-up on the amount of material that I received in my mail. I can see some justification for sending out these alleged reports to the Members of Congress, although I know that most of these communications go immediately into the wastebasket, but I can see no reason for keeping on the mailing list a large number of former Members of the House. The material that came to me certainly cost the Government thousands of dollars during the last 2 years.

Some day next week I want to show to the House a few exhibits of rank extravagance in the propaganda field. I have in my office one newspaperman's morning mail—a pile of mail actually 4½ inches thick. That mail contains three or four duplicates of exactly the same press release. While it is wrong to use the taxpayers' money in turning out propaganda, there is another phase of it that ought to be looked into. I fear that our citizens and certainly the Members of Congress are being subjected to propaganda, sometimes months before the presentation of any suggested legislation.

Let us take a rather far-fetched example of what can be done and what has been done, I am sure: Suppose somebody downtown decided that whooping cough was a great menace to this Nation. They would not immediately prepare a bill and send it up here to deal with that subject. No. They would start months in advance to put out all kinds of propaganda on the program they later intended to announce. That is going on in the Federal Housing Administration. Many thousands of dollars are being spent right now to popularize certain provisions of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill; to popularize the work of the Federal Housing Administration. Other thousands of dollars are being spent on conferences of Federal housing officials, project managers' associations, and so forth. They have regional meetings. They have one in Boston for the New England region, for instance, and in other cities for other regions. Quite frequently there are national meetings in Chicago, Cleveland, and other places—not to study the problem of operating the projects so that they can better perform their duties, but so that they can come back to their respective communities and circulate propaganda to popularize the Federal housing program they are trying to carry out. If that money which is spent on housing propaganda would be spent on materials and supplies, the veterans would get houses much sooner.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman charge that those meetings are for the purpose of propaganda?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Very largely.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am amazed at that statement.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I can prove the statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. For instance, in my city the housing authority is appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the council. Does the gentleman mean to say that all over the country those local housing authorities, having these meetings occasionally as they do, are mainly for propaganda purposes?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I say, very largely.

Mr. McCORMACK. All I can say is that the chairman of the Boston Housing Authority is a personal friend of mine, as well as the members of that authority. I have never had them propagandize me on any matter.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Perhaps the gentleman and myself differ on what is propaganda. The manager of my local housing project is my personal friend. He goes to those conferences and he comes back. What is his one purpose? To popularize that program. He comes back well fortified with material to make the program popular and addresses the Kiwanis Club, the Rotary Club, and various veterans' organizations on the program that is being carried out.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman call that propaganda?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Of course it is.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman addresses them as a Congressman?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I certainly do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does not the gentleman address patriotic organizations on matters in which he is interested in Congress?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I do not address them to popularize a program.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly, when you address them you are trying to popularize the views you discuss on that occasion.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I do not call it that. I try to present factual information.

Mr. McCORMACK. In your case you do not call it popularizing the program, but in the other case you do?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Because that is not what they are paid to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman mean to say the chairman of the Boston Housing Authority does not have the right to address the Kiwanis Club or the Rotary Club on the question of housing?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. He has a right to address them, but I do not believe the Federal Housing Administration has a right to call these conferences so frequently, for no good purpose.

Mr. McCORMACK. How frequently do they call them?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I cannot say how frequently they call them. I happen to know some officials that I am sure are away from their work on an average of once a month.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman opposed to the provisions of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Am I opposed to what provisions?

Mr. McCORMACK. The provisions of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Act.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I am opposed to certain provisions of it, but I cannot discuss that bill in 10 minutes. I have studied it for 2 years, and I do not know all that is in it yet.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will concede that. That is a fair answer. Now, on the question of investigation, despite what happened in the other body yesterday, does not the gentleman feel that the regular standing committees of the House ought to make investigations under the Reorganization Act?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I was going to touch on that. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it. I have a note here to comment on it. I do not know what the policy of the House is going to be as to special committees.

Mr. McCORMACK. We all agree that if there are any unnecessary publications their number should be reduced. Some people think the Agricultural Yearbook when it was published was unnecessary. I gave my copies to my friends who had agricultural constituents, friends on both sides of the aisle. I think that in a sense they served a pretty useful purpose. To me, and perhaps to the gentleman, from the nature of our district, probably they did not mean so much.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I think the yearbook is a fine thing. I do not call the yearbook propaganda. What I mean by propaganda are these things that come out with expensive lithographed illustrations, glamorizing housing projects in Podunk or Turkey Hollow.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman opposed to low-cost housing projects?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I am not opposed to low-cost housing projects. That has nothing to do with propaganda at all.

Mr. McCORMACK. What does the gentleman mean by propaganda? Will the gentleman define "propaganda" for me? I have been unable to have it defined.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts knows propaganda when he sees it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am inquiring what the gentleman who makes charges has in mind.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], for whom we all have the highest regard, has referred to the matter of special committees as distinguished from the regular standing committees, and the provisions of the Reorganization Act in respect thereto.

The gentleman from Massachusetts certainly will recall that in the last Congress, when he was majority leader, the reorganization bill originally came before us with a prohibition against the creation of special committees. That provision was taken out of the reorganization bill. It would seem to me that would lead to the fair presumption that the House of Representatives did not want to consider itself bound by that specific provision, and is not bound in letter or in spirit.

Mr. McCORMACK. The present majority leader has just made a statement. Are we to understand——

Mr. HALLECK. Did the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts? I thought he yielded to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. Are we to understand now that as majority leader the gentleman from Indiana is taking the position that special committees should be appointed and that investigations should not be made by the regular standing committees of the House? If that is the attitude of the majority party from the statement just made we might just as well know it now as later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONDERO). The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I take it that the gentleman from Connecticut had yielded to me but, of course, none of us would object to the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to make inquiries or to make a statement at any time.

What I undertook to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts—and on that statement I stand—was that the provision against the creation of special committees was taken out of the Reorganization Act by this body when his party was in control and the gentleman himself was serving as majority leader. The only statement I make at this time, for the purposes of the inquiry directed to the gentleman from Connecticut seems to me to be perfectly and completely sufficient, is that the action of the House of Representatives in taking out of the Reorganization Act the provision against the creation of special committees leads to the one presumption, if it leads to any, that the House need not consider itself bound by the letter or spirit of the statute against the creation of special committees.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Connecticut yield further?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield briefly, but wish to reserve at least a minute for myself to conclude.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly. I believe the gentleman from Indiana knows, or he ought to know, what the general concensus was, that that was unnecessary, that with the Reorganization Act providing $10,000 to each standing committee it was assumed that the investigations would be made by the standing committees.

I still say that the statement of the gentleman from Indiana as majority leader in the light of this colloquy is a very interesting one because it indicates to the Members of the House and to the country that so far as the House is concerned the Republican Party intends to have investigations made outside of the standing committees.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Connecticut yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield briefly to the majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman from Massachusetts has now gone to another assumption which is completely erroneous and unfounded. First of all, he should read section 134 (a) of the Reorganization Act. There it appears that the power of subpena and $10,000 is given each Senate committee. Such is not given the House committees.

I do not know whether any special committees will be created. Certainly Republican recognition of the responsibilities, rights, and capacities of standing committees is not new-found. But if we find it necessary or clearly desirable to appoint a special committee, there is nothing in the Reorganization Act to prohibit such action. I am not presently discussing whether or not a special committee should be created for some specific purpose. I am merely talking about whether or not it can be done within the letter and spirit of the Reorganization Act. I say again—there is no prohibition against such action. Certainly I shall grant the gentleman from Massachusetts the right to make any assumption he wants, but the correctness of those assumptions is another matter. We will wait for the unfolding of the record to find out whether or not his assumption is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has refreshed my recollection about the $10,000, being provided for Senate standing committees, but the intent of the Reorganization Act was to have standing committees of each branch make investigations on matters coming under their jurisdiction.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I want only to say in conclusion that the last statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts clearly evidences the fact that he recognizes the statement I made is a correct one because, certainly, the assumption which he would seek to assert cannot be indulged in, in reason and fair judgment, with respect to what happened under the reorganization bill and its adoption here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut has not had any time and with the permission of those having succeeding special orders, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut be permitted to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I yield a fair proportion of the 5 minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is always generous and he knows the state of mind I entertain toward him. My questioning was to bring out the gentleman's state of mind and out of it came this interesting colloquy. I have the fondest regard for the majority leader; however, my friend was fearful of what was growing out of the friendly colloquy going on between the gentleman from Connecticut and myself. I admire him for his attitude, because if they are going to have special investigating committees outside of the standing commitees then the leadership on that side ought to come out and let the country know about it. I will agree the gentleman does not go quite that far, but it does show, and I refer to the gentleman's remarks, that the leadership of the Republican Party has in mind going outside the Reorganization bill and having special investigations.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one brief observation?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Very briefly.

Mr. HALLECK. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts that a special committee, if such should be deemed to be desirable is outside the Reorganization Act, is not a statement of the fact. It cannot be found in the reorganization bill in any place. I do not know whether any special committees are going to be set up or not, but, as far as the Reorganization Act is concerned and by everything that happened here in connection with the adoption of the Reorganization Act, there is no prohibition in spirit or in letter against the House of Representatives doing that if it sees fit.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I did not realize I was going to stir up this discussion on the reorganization bill. I say as one who was not here when the reorganization bill was passed but as one who read the debates very carefully and who has read the Reorganization Act, I assume that there were no prohibitions against the creation of a special committee if one were desired. I do not care who gets the information. It does seem to me, however, that there is a need for somebody finding out what all these people are turning out, what I insist is propaganda and the gentleman knows what I mean by propaganda, finding out where the money is coming from, why people get one title and then spend their time turning out various booklets, pamphlets, movies, and what not. This is only a small example, but I know that the State Department as of today is sending men overseas in far parts of the world at salaries of $7,000 a year and shipping an automobile with them and in at least three cases the fellows never earned $50 a week as cub reporters in the United States. There was no examination, no nothing; they were simply appointed. They will serve out there for a year or two, come back, take an examination, and be frozen on the pay roll forever. I do not know why we want publicity men over in the Far East. I do not see the need for that sort of stuff. This is going on in every department of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I have offered this resolution in good faith. If the Committee on Expenditures has the time to go into this or the Appropriations Committee has the time to go into it, all very well and fine. I thought that eight or nine Members of the House without expending any great amount of money, but working hard, could find out from the Department how many people they were employing in this kind of work, what it was for, what they hoped to accomplish, if anything, and what it is costing the taxpayers. I would like to know. I have heard and read all kinds of statements as to this running into millions of dollars, and I do not think there is any Member of the House that knows just what is being spent for that purpose in the various departments.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I just did not want the gentleman from Massachusetts to commit the entire Democratic side to his attitude on special committees. I helped to create the Dies committee, a special committee that rendered some of the greatest services ever rendered to the American people, and other special committees, and I would not want to see the hands of Congress tied to where we could not create special committees if the occasion arises.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That is my point.

Mr. RANKIN. I may not support the gentleman's motion——

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I realize that.

Mr. RANKIN. But I do not want to be committed against any special committees at all.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I say in all sincerity that I assume your side was committed to continuing special committees. I know that the prohibition against special committees was stricken out of the reorganization bill when it came over here, so I assume that the Democratic leadership was not opposed to special committees. But as I said, I do not know what the policy of the House is going to be. I will abide by it, but I would like to get information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DONDERO). Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

RED FASCISM

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, three things have happened or will happen which to the average reader and observer may have no connection, but in my humble judgment there is a line of connection and relationship. The first one is in the nature of a program that has been announced by the House Committee on Un-American Activities, with which I concur. The second is the passing of a former Member of this House from the State of Minnesota at the age of 87, and I refer to the Honorable Andrew J. Volstead. The third is a resolution that I shall introduce today in the hope that this body will see fit to approve the publication of 500,000 copies of a public document with which I had some identity and some interest, and which I am pleased to say has become something of a Government best seller since Labor Day of last year.

Let me begin by observing that as the Eightieth Congress now moves forward into its work, it is well to go back every so often, and get just a little orientation upon some of the major problems that engross the attention of the country. We have problems, and solutions are being offered. The best evidence of solutions is the fact that up to this noon, 1,226 bills have been dropped into the House hopper and 332 in the hopper of the Senate. Thus far, therefore, in the infant life of the Eightieth Congress nearly 1,550 proposals that will deal with every phase of human endeavor and will be a suggestion for remedy for some of the problems that challenge our attention have been presented.

It is hardly necessary, of course, to enumerate those problems because they lie in the field of industry, in the field of labor, in the field of business, in the field of agriculture, in the field of taxes, in the field of security, and everywhere else. So it is incumbent upon us to get some sense of direction as we move along. Perhaps a little background this afternoon within the time allowed may be of interest.

I have often told that little squib that I saw in Reader's Digest a good many years ago about the lady who climbed on a double-decker bus in New York on Lexington Avenue and promptly unfolded a large colored map of Manchuria and began to peruse it very intently. There was one vacant seat on top of that bus. The bus stopped along the route and picked up a man who had looked a little too long and lovingly upon the flowing bowl, and whose ideas and whose eyesight were just a little nebulous as a result. He clambered up that little, narrow companionway and found this seat beside the lady. When he noticed this colored map, it struck consternation and dismay to his very soul. After a while he could contain himself no longer. He looked at her and said, "Lady, are you sure you are on the right bus?"

Well, we have to be sure that we are on the right bus, and I propose to belabor a little bit what I regard as the primary and No. 1 problem not only in this country but throughout the whole wide world, and that is, oddly enough, the problem of human freedom.

You can talk about taxes and labor and security and portal-to-portal pay and all the rest, but they will be as exactly nothing if the freedom of this country and its people is impaired or if we fail in the ultimate objective of a crusade that over the last few years has taken perhaps over 30,000,000 human lives. So freedom is the great, transcendent issue of the country, it is the great, transcendent issue everywhere. In my humble judgment, freedom is in jeopardy in this country and in the world today. It is the No. 1 problem.

As a matter of fact, this country was born for the purposes of freedom. I remember seeing a squib by Thomas Paine one time—the same Thomas Paine whose last resting place is hardly marked today. He said that if it had not been for this infant country on this side of the Atlantic, the lights of freedom would have gone out in all the corners of the earth. So what some British statesman said in your time and day and generation is not new, when he talked about the lamps of freedom being extinguished in the Old World when World War II began in September of 1939. It has been a great problem in the tortuous course of mankind, of man reaching and seeking somehow to get into the upper air of human freedom. It was the great lesson of Bethlehem, as a matter of fact,. the anniversary of which we so recently observed in December of 1946. I remember standing out there in 1945 in the Holy Land looking at that place that marked the beginning of Christian civilization, and I was so deeply impressed with the fact that that was the beginning of a great movement that somehow imparted a great, shall I say, divinity to human personality, when people for the first time began to look up instead of look down, to look to the stars instead of to the terrain, and then marched on and on through generations, through Magna Carta and the Declaration of Independence, until we have achieved a great and felicitous kind of freedom in this country that they do not know anywhere else in the world.

How strange, then, that as late as 1939, in your lifetime and in mine, young men had to be put in uniform and had to be marched away into all the corners of the earth, had to be placed upon vessels to travel the blue waters of the seven seas, in the interest of this thing called freedom. What an astonishing thing it is. The crusade never comes to an end. You cannot put your finger on some date or day in the calendar and say, "This day freedom was achieved and durably achieved, and there is nothing else to be done." It is a resurgent problem that comes in every generation. So human freedom is a great problem right now here and everywhere.

As we think about it we think of the departures from freedom and we think about the jeopardies to freedom and the forces that would jeopardize it. And as I think of the jeopardies to freedom, that is where Mr. Volstead comes in, oddly enough. Back in 1918, 1919, and 1920, when his presence graced this body, he was the spearhead of a great crusade that did not relent until they amended the Constitution of the United States. There was something very singular about that eighteenth amendment. It was very different from anything else in the Constitution and it was quite different from anything in the Bill of Rights. When you examine the Bill of Rights you find suddenly that the Constitution makers said, "Congress shall make no law respecting the abridgement of the freedoms of the people." That is very clear and unequivocal. It was an interdiction upon the lawmakers and upon the Government. Suddenly, along comes the eighteenth amendment and it departs in style and character from the things that were contained in the Constitution. It did not put a restriction upon the Congress; it very plainly put a restriction upon the people. It said, "You and you and you, as citizens, shall not do certain things." And so we reversed the whole constitutional processes of freedom. It took 14 years or thereabout for the people to shout "Uncle" and cry "enough." It went out, as you remember, in 1933. That was the first departure from freedom. The whole issue of prohibition is not a liquor issue with me; it is an issue in the ethical and moral domain of freedom.

The second departure came in 1932. I do not expect anybody who has been so assiduously devoted to the ideals of the New Deal to agree with me particularly, but I still contend that in 1932 and 1933, when I was privileged to become a Member of this body, we started upon a great departure from the course of freedom. You know, economic desperation somehow frustrates and blinds people and ofttimes they are willing to throw their liberties overboard in order to achieve an economic objective. I remember going home from that 100-day session in 1933. Standing at every highway that entered the Sixteenth Congressional District of Illinois were billboards. Placed upon those billboards was an interesting symbol that you hear so little about today. It was a blue eagle. I tried to find one of those old placards. You cannot find them anywhere. I hope some historian or archivist has gathered up some of them to exhibit to future generations as an indication of what happened in the year of our Lord 1933. They assembled here in Washington for the first time under a new leadership that took us into a semicollective field—and that is a departure from freedom. I say, a semicollective field. You need only review the whole picture of this very fantastic situation which was a mixture of the blue eagle, and Sally Rand, and of Hitler and Mussolini, and Pearl Harbor, and penicillin, and the Maginot line, and Senator Claghorn, and dipsy doodle, and flat-foot-floogie, and all the rest, to get a kind of fantastic picture of what happened in the generation that is now slipping away when we put our feet in the pathway of a departure from the very fundamentals of freedom. Now we are beginning to breathe the fresh upper air again and we begin to see a little more clearly. So the question is in this rather feverish world whether or not we are going to move to the right or move to the left. It is one of those things that disturbs one as he sees the forces and the ferment on the world horizon.

Who knows for sure whether or not we may become just a little isle in a great red sea that splashes all around us and whose waves somehow break upon every shore and unless we are vigilant might some day break upon our shores. Yes. It is a question of direction for this generation. And when I say whether we go right or left, I think sometimes of the days when circuit judges rode about on horseback. I am advised that down in Kentucky in those early days when Abraham Lincoln was a member of the Illinois Legislature, they had a judge who had a great fondness for corn liquor. Of course, he had to be circumspect about it. So he put a bottle in his pocket and he had a rubber tube going up to his mouth. He could sit on the bench all day and puff vigorously but never any smoke curled from the bottle. But in the afternoon he would get what they call in Kentucky "slightly mellow." So this day he went out to throw the saddle on his horse. A young lawyer watching the operation noticed that he had the pommel where the cantle should be. He said, "Your honor, you have got your saddle on backward." Then, with that kind of dignity that only the judiciary can assume, he said, "How in the devil do you know in what direction I am going?"

We have to know, when we stand at the crossroads, in what direction we are going. It is not such an easy thing to rationalize when you seek to appraise these affairs and take realistic stock of them. That is the job we have to do in determining a sense of direction, and how much devotion and attention we are going to put into this fabric of freedom that is probably the most precious inheritance that a country and any people ever had.

I say to you categorically that in my judgment the greatest menacing force to freedom in the world today is red fascism. That is just another term for communism, but I think it is a little more impressive and accurate when you call it "red fascism." And it is on the move, not only in our own country but abroad. I was astonished in 1940 to sit for 12 hours in the bleachers on Avenida Juarez in Mexico City and see a parade that in size and length would have beggared the parade of any American Legion convention I have ever attended. But it was not the size of the parade nor the personalities that was impressive. It was the thousands of banners, here in this republic just south of us, which pictured a likeness of Stalin and carried the symbol, "Viva el Comunismo." You see the virus is on this hemisphere. It is reported by the New York Times and others who have gone to South America to make an inspection, that probably in Brazil they will roll up a million and a half votes. Strange, is it not, that a country that has so recently emerged from dictatorship of Getulio Vargas that a new sinister force is coming up in South America. It is only within the last 7 weeks that an affiliate of the Communist Party was made President of the Republic of Chile. So, as you explore that situation in the hemisphere to the south, that virus is there, and that virus is working. You see it elsewhere in the world. I think one of the most astonishing things I ever heard on a Sunday morning was to stand at the gateway of the old Arab bazar in Tunisia, that place where Hannibal and his legions had their origin in ancient history, and there to see a tottering, impoverished Arab shouting, "Comunismo," as he was hawking newspapers printed for the benefit of those who are affiliated with the Moslem faith.

I always thought that of all individualists in the world the Arab was No. 1. Yet the red fever has gotten a start on the shores of Africa. You can go up into ancient Tehran, and there, of course, you see that whole area that comes under the influence of the Soviet Union, and they will look you over, no matter who you are, when you come within 150 miles of the Soviet border. You need only go to ancient Greece and see the hammers and sickles that are painted upon the ancient landmarks, the ancient Acropolis and all the buildings, to know what is happening there. What they call the KKE group, the so-called liberalist group in Greece, is moving along in order to do the job of imposing communism upon Greece. You see it in Italy. Ask any soldier who has been in the Po Valley or the Arno, who has been at the Caserte, who has been in the Eternal City, and he will tell you of the Red flags and the pennants and hammers and sickles and the strength of the Communist movement in Italy. And so I can imagine the agitation and dismay of the great holy head of that great church in that ancient city who is deeply concerned about this strange play of forces there.

I remember a conversation with a former Prime Minister of Italy who said to me: "I will not hold this portfolio for very long."

I asked, "Why?"

He said: "Because I am not in the grace of Togliatti."

And who is Togliatti?

"Well, good sir, Togliatti is the chief of the Communist Party in Italy."

So they have gotten strong enough to make prime ministers. That can be duplicated in many places.

Then lift your eyes to a country steeped in the liberal tradition, like France, and what do we see? A Communist is going to be Defense Minister in the French Cabinet. They can wreck the country any time by calling a general strike. Jacques Duclos knows that; Maurice Thorez knows that. I would not at this moment give a fig for liberty in France. To be sure, they compromise right now and say they will not go as far as the original Soviet line; but that is only for the present; and it will not be long before France will have been engulfed, and then, of course, this blight of "red fascism" will come right up to the Atlantic's shores. Added to what we have got in South America at the present time, it must be apparent to anyone to what it forbodes; that it menaces and jeopardizes this thing called freedom. And so freedom is a lively issue. Today hundreds of millions of people are beating their breasts at this very moment wishing they might be free and out from under the dictatorship such as they have in Yugoslavia under Tito, and such as they have in Russia under Marshal Stalin, and such as they have in Poland right now—God save the mark. I remember when a professor of the Warsaw University was here this summer. He said: "I want you to go back to Warsaw with me."

I said: "My good friend, I cannot."

There are other responsibilities that kept me here at that time. He indicated then, however, what was going to happen, and it did happen.

Go back and read the remarks Winston Churchill made to Parliament in February 1945—and I was in Parliament the day he made his report on Yalta—to the effect that at long last freedom had been achieved for the Poles. The late President of the United States sat in this well and gave a report on Yalta to the membership of this body in March 1945. He said that while he had not achieved and accomplished everything, at least here was a provisional government for national unity in Poland that had been set up, and so there was going to be freedom for the Poles. But was it the kind that was expressed last Sunday when the Moscow Government impressed itself in that election? You know full well there will be no freedom in Poland. Let us not kid ourselves about it, the red danger is marching.

So once more I say to you as you lift your eyes, like the prophets of old and look at the world horizon. Freedom is in jeopardy and hundreds of millions of people are looking perhaps to this country for a ray of hope. As I think of it I think of it as a testimony to a man who had an ideal and who had a passion. His name, if you will remember, was Vladimir Ilich Ulyanov. That may mean nothing to you. We know him by an assumed name, Nikolay Lenin. You remember that in 1917 he was locked in a railroad carriage and sent from Switzerland to Moscow. He had one idea and one passion. The idea was somehow to take the hatred and chaos that had been churned up by the Czars and direct it against the white ties and the black ties, symbolically speaking, and to drive on and on and on and spread his idea everywhere in the world. He succeeded in great measure. Five hundred million people in the world today, who have no freedom, who are subject to the knock of the gendarme to be taken away at will to a concentration camp, are testimony to Nikolay Lenin who had a hate in his heart and who had an idea and made it stick in 30 short years. Yes, that red fascist menace is marching. Now we see it on our own shores. Distinguished members of the Un-American Activities Committee have given much time and energy to this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I have made no speeches on the subject here. I somehow thought that perhaps speeches and scolding do no good, but I am not insensible to the fact that if ever there was a time to be vigilant it is now. Suppose, and God grant that it will never come, that some kind of economic reverse should come to our blessed country. Do you know what will happen? The same thing will happen that happened in 1933 when we assembled here. The first bill that was introduced in this Congress in 1933 was not even in print. It was in typewritten form. It delegated a very broad power to the Chief Executive and it took a long, long time to reclaim that power and to wipe out some of the bitter fruit when veterans and civil servants were so generously, with wild abandon, taken from the Federal rolls under the euphemism of the Economy Act.

You see, that is what desperation does. I voted against that bill in 1933. There came 1,500 letters and telegrams to my desk scolding me. Some of my best friends stated, "You are going to be a one-termer." There was a surge of feeling to go along with the delegation of power. You see, we set the pattern by a departure from freedom in 1933 and economic desperation can do that again.

Suppose fur coats and fancy apartments go out of the window once more in an economic slide; if the market takes a dip, do you know what will happen? You will be engulfed with letters and telegrams. You must give power to a Moses to lead us out of the wilderness, and then we will put our feet in the same pathway unless we can resist that political pressure and show our devotion to this thing called freedom as distinguished from collectivism and semi-collectivism.

Mr. Speaker, it can happen again. So it is because of the economic uncertainties here and elsewhere for the moment and because this red fire is burning with a high and livid tongue that freedom is constantly in jeopardy and becomes the transcendent problem for us and everybody in this Nation. Yes, I repeat, it is an amazing thing that so many lives were surrendered to it even in our own generation.

I used to see these GI's around the world. I would ask a sergeant: "Where are you from?" "I am from New York." "How would you like to be there today walking down Lexington Avenue, Broadway, or Park Avenue?" He would say, "Do not talk that way. You make me homesick." After a while you would say, "Sarge, what is this business all about? Why are you here in Marseilles, Delhi, or Calcutta?" He would not cite the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution. He would look at you and say, "Congressman, I guess it is about freedom." You see, that is the one thing that had somehow taken root. Thus we had that crusade for freedom that was sparked by the Atlantic Charter and it cost 15,000,000 soldiers' lives and 15,000,000 civilians. Yet it is the great question, it is the great problem of the moment.

Mr. Speaker, the jeopardy then comes from these forces that are operative and that have taken root in the country—red fascism and communism. I subscribe to the program that was announced by the chairman of the Un-American Activities Committee yesterday. There is going to be an exposé of those who are on the Government pay rolls identified with this sinister and this infamous force. We have had some difficulty in the past, and this may be of interest to those who had no participation in it. I offered the first amendment on this floor to knock one Communist sympathizer off the pay roll of the Government. His name was David K. Lasser. He lived in Philadelphia. He was the president of the International Workers, or some such organization, and had an executive counsel around him that was dominated by card-carrying members of the Communist Party. His executive secretary hauled his card out and showed it right here in the committee room in this Capitol. An interesting thing. So Mr. Lasser had to go. The House passed a bill, with a rider, making no funds available to pay Mr. Lasser. The Senate approved and the President of the United States approved it. But oddly enough it only applied to those agencies for which we were appropriating in that bill, namely, the independent offices bill, containing some 30 agencies. They did take Mr. Lasser off, but they transferred Mr. Lasser to another agency of the Government and gave him a substantial raise in pay. Marvelous, is it not? Yes; there is something fluid about the Government, so we have our difficulties. Now, we were successful in separating Mr. Lasser but we were not so successful in removing three professors who had an oblique viewpoint and whose loyalty was questioned, namely, Dr. Lovett, Dr. Dodd, and Dr. Watson. This House finally set up a special committee to investigate. The present Secretary of Agriculture was a member of that subcommittee. I remember the day that Secretary Anderson, then Representative Anderson, stood in this well and made a great case and a fine talk against these people, so we insisted on taking them off the pay roll. But it is not so simple. We can take them off the pay roll all right, but there is a court over there that said that the appointive power lies in the President of the United States. So these men were free to file a claim before the United States Court of Claims for the salary that they did not receive under their term of appointment.

That is one of the difficulties that we have, and yet, notwithstanding that difficulty it becomes necessary now to assist the Committee on Un-American Activities and to go through Government carefully; see that everybody gets a fair shake, gets the right of appeal, does not become the recipient of the tarred stick until we make sure that there is an appeal and that it is unemotional and fair, the Committee on Un-American Activities is going to do that job and I trust it can fairly and realistically get at the very heart of disloyalty in Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Secondly, they are going to move into Hollywood and they are going to move into some of the labor unions that are dominated by red fascism. They are going to take a look at the educational system. Then there is one item in their program that struck me very forcibly, and it is a thing to which I should have devoted all of my remarks, and that is the creation of some counterpropaganda, if you want to call it that, but at the educational level. How necessary that is. That is the thing I want to talk about for a moment, because it is the reason why I am going to introduce this resolution earlier referred to. You see, we are trying to hold the text together: Mr. Volstead, the resolution, and the question of freedom. That is the thing I had in mind.

How much have we done, as a matter of fact, in bringing information to our people on what red fascism really is? And, after all, what is the great weapon that is available in order to push back the forces of communism? Is it not knowledge? In proportion as you educate the citizenry of the country and make them aware of it, that is the best guarantee we have that they will want nothing of an ideology of government that is so inimical to freedom and that would destroy freedom if it could? Now, as a contribution to this educational matter I got very much interested last year while I was addressing a group of farmers out in the Sherman Hotel in Chicago. I was telling them a little about these forces that are operating today, and when it was all over they came up to the speaker's rostrum and they said, "Mr. Congressman, where could we get a book that is not slanted and not oblique, that just actually tells the story of how communism works?" I said, "There is no such book." But I said, "Gentlemen, I will tell you what. I will write you a book." Well, that was a great challenge, and I did not know whether they would accept it seriously or not. But as I boarded the plane for Washington I got to thinking it over and I got out a notebook and I jotted down in outline form the type of book I would write if I would write a book, and if I had time. I could expand those notes somewhat, but the thing that I was most interested in was not in EVERETT DIRKSEN'S unsupported opinion about red fascism. I was most interested in having people know what communism was really like and then to have every statement documented. That is the important thing, to make sure that it will stand up in any forum, at any time or any place, so that the values and the statements and the assertions cannot be controverted successfully. I called in the Library of Congress and they did a lot of work in expanding and documenting those notes. The result was a document, known as House Document 754, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session, under the title, "Communism in Action." It got a little longer than I had anticipated. There are about 141 pages. But this was designed to tell what communism would do to the American farmer if you had it here. It is designed to tell what would happen to our school system. It is designed to tell what would happen to freedom of the press. It is designed to tell what would happen to religion. It is designed to tell what would happen to labor. It was designed as a reference and educational. So let us see what it says, for instance, about this question of labor.

If the average American laboring man could know what is going on in Russia he would run from red fascism as if it were the plague. Here is the documented information, and I will read just a little of it to you:

> Although the Government publishes no statistics regarding the camps—

Meaning the concentration camps—

> in which persons are concentrated and thus confuses and throws out of line all of its other employment statistics, there can be no reasonable doubt that in the Soviet Union several million workers are employed under police discipline and receive only miserable keep for their labor.

That is what happens to men and women in the Soviet Union.

When did these concentration camps begin? Are they something new? Let us see what the experts said:

> The first concentration labor camp was established in 1923.

Why, it was from Russia that the infamous Hitler got the technique for Dachau. Make no mistake about it, it was borrowed from the people who would create an empire of the mind in the world and destroy freedom in this country.

Who are these people? Let us see what the documentation is on this:

> The population of these camps was drawn from political offenders, nonconforming engineers, and intellectuals, kulaks, recalcitrant peasants, former industrial and other officials, and deviating Communists of the right and of the left.

How many of these people are in these concentration camps in Russia today? These estimates, appearing on page 56, by observers who were there at one time or another run all the way from 6,000,000 to 18,000,000. Think of it! That many adult men and women in concentration camps of the Soviet Union today. And still you have people toying with this infamous and brutal idea, and who would try to give it currency here in this Republic.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. The gentleman is discussing "Communism in Action," which is one of the greatest documents on communism in the history of America, the first time, I believe, that an objective, scholarly study has been made by such men as we have in the Library of Congress. The country as a whole owes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a great vote of thanks for having implemented that study, and owes to Dr. Ernest Griffith, of the Library of Congress, an equally great vote of thanks for having done a factual and courageous job.

May I say that our House Committee on Un-American Activities referred to that book and recommended it in our annual report of January 2, now available in the Document Room, which in itself is an unusual report, different from any ever before published by our committee. I recommend it to the serious reading also of every Member of this House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am deeply grateful for the gracious contribution by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. In order that nobody may misunderstand what the Communists are driving at, I quote as nearly verbatim as I can the statement of William C. Foster, head of the Communist Party. He has admitted this statement under oath and it is in the record of the hearings. He said, "No Communist, no matter how many votes he should get, could ever be President of the present Government of the United States." But he said that the Communists would take over this country "just as surely as the sun rises." And he said, "When that day comes it will not be a capitalistic Government but will be a Soviet Government, and behind this Government will stand the Red Army to enforce the dictatorship of the proletariat."

Anybody who does not know that the Communists are out to overthrow this Government and destroy Christianity and everything built on Christianity certainly has his head in the sand.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Now, without trespassing too long upon your patience, gentlemen, the point I make is that we ought to utilize the educational weapon in dealing with this matter which is so essential. There are a lot of things that one could incorporate in a program. I wonder about the advisibility, for instance, of undertaking the cancellation of the naturalization certificates of people who come here and enjoy the advantages of this country and then seek to give us an Old World government and an Old World ideology. I think about the necessity of requiring the front organizations to carry descriptive language on their letterheads and their literature so that we would know what they are really doing. For instance, does the average citizen of the United States know what the Amtorg Trading Corp. is? For all we know, it may be a corporation in Oskaloosa, Kokomo, or Detroit. Do they know that it is a Russian organization? Do they know what the Artinko Pictures, Inc., is? Would you guess that it was Russian? Would you guess that the Inreklama Service doing business in New York City is identified with Soviet Russia? There are a great many such organizations and perhaps it is possible by substantive legislation through the Postmaster General and through the Attorney General to deny the use of the mails to any organization that does not by appropriate descriptive language on their letterheads and literature tell with whom they may be connected.

Those are things that can be done. But when all is said and done, we still have the responsibility of more education in the field of foreign ideology for when the farmer, the laboring man, and the misguided altruist or any other citizen in the country knows what this brutal and infamous scheme of "red fascism" is, and how it works in practice, we will have engendered a force that can cope with communism, or "red fascism," and ultimately throw it back. So the burden of this disquisition today is to bespeak your support of a House concurrent resolution, the purpose of which is to authorize the publication of 500,000 copies of Communism in Action to be distributed to the Members of the House and the Senate in the following ratio: 375,000 for House Members and 125,000 copies for Members of the Senate. In quantity, it will cost about 10 cents. Five hundred thousand copies will be $50,000. Gentlemen and ladies, I submit to you, is it a good investment in freedom or not?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that today the Communists are working through what are called Communist-front organizations all over this country. The Committee on Un-American Activities is going to bring these Communist fronts forcibly to the attention of the Congress and the American people at the earliest possible date. This Communist drive must be turned back if our country is to survive.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

FRED A. GOTTLIEB

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the papers in support of the claim of Fred A. Gottlieb, covered by H. R. 4943 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Claims on May 24, 1946, but which was not considered or passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FREEDOM

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we have listened to a great speech just delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. I address my remarks to the broader implications, rather than what he said in relation to our domestic matters. For example, he made reference to the passage of the Economy Act in 1933. The gentleman voted against it. He referred to that as an indication, as a trend toward the loss of liberty. I voted against that bill in 1933. There were 33 of us who voted against it. We were pilloried. I know because at that time it was predicted that I, like the gentleman from Illinois, would not be reelected. When our late friend, Billy Connery, and I arrived in Boston we had a parade of 15,000 veterans marching through the main streets of Boston in our honor for voting against that measure. While I opposed that bill, I did not consider its passage a trend toward loss of freedom.

I am not going to address myself to that part of the remarks by the gentleman from Illinois with reference to legislation passed, because he and I honestly disagree in some respects, but I am going to make some remarks on the broader implications of what the gentleman said, and with which I am in complete harmony.

The gentleman said "freedom" is the great issue. He is absolutely correct. He said that "red fascism" or "atheistic communism" is on the march. I have said that before. We might just as well face the facts. On July 27, 1946, in a speech on this floor, I exposed conditions existing in Yugoslavia under Tito. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], in my opinion, is absolutely correct in the issue involved in its broad aspect. We are confronted in the world of today with a clash of two concepts of life, one the Marxist concept, the state, all powerful, the state supreme, with its viciousness; and on the other hand, the western concept, the concept of those who believe in one God, Catholic, Potestant, or Jew, the Christian concept of life. There is a clash today, and we must face the situation and face the real conditions in a realistic manner. In facing this situation, there is no middle aisle dividing us. There are no Republicans and no Democrats on that issue. We are all concerned with the national interest of our country. We find the boring in; we find coalition governments; we find the taking over; we find the suppression of labor; we find the constant encroachment; we find the inability to have agreements made on fundamentals; the representatives of our country and other countries willing to do so, but always uncertainty, confusion, and chaos existing due to the practices and actions of the Soviet Union. We find the Balkan Nations behind the iron curtain, except little Greece, and that country is besieged. We find the Baltic Nations behind the iron curtain. We see conditions existing in China. All of these things should bring to our conscious mind, those of us who believe in the concept of life that we do, that our way of life is being challenged. We are not challenging any other concept of life, but our concept of life is being actively and directly challenged. We saw it in Yugoslavia with the unfair trial, persecution, and imprisonment of Archibishop Stepinac. He is an archbishop of the Catholic church, of which I am a communicant. He is the symbol of the persecution of all religions. If they can drive underground the Catholic religion, the attack of other religions will follow. "Divide and conquer" is the policy. We have plenty of evidence of a constant challenge and attack on the fundamentals of life in which we believe.

What is the answer? That is what concerns me. My good friend from Illinois made a brilliant statement, a correct statement, of world conditions that confront us. He says "eternal vigilance"—yes; we know that is the price of liberty, but what are we going to do to bring about eternal vigilance? Are we going to fight defensively—when I say "fight" I use the word advisedly—or use our powers defensively? We are a powerful country, we are not a small nation, like, for example, Liberia. We are one of the great nations of the world, and from an industrial angle the most powerful nation in the world today. I am concerned with the type of leadership we are going to give not only in the field of government but in the field of religion, in the field of business, in the field of finance, in the field of labor, among all of the Americas.

I am concerned with strengthening ourselves internally first. We have got to do it.

I am concerned with preventing bigotry existing in America. Bigotry in any form is a force of distintegration.

I am concerned with leadership in all spheres of human activity, not only on domestic matters but on foreign problems, that type of leadership which will be for the national interests of our country and of our people. We, in this Congress, are faced with that very situation now.

I am concerned with an Army and a Navy, for example, consistent with the national interests of our country at this time. That issue directly confronts us as Members of Congress.

I am concerned with sound progressive leadership. I am talking about leadership that considers the economic conditions of the people. The communistic form of government, in my opinion, is the most reactionary form of government that could exist. The answer is not to fight it negatively. We should not go on the defensive. Democratic institutions of government do not constitute a negative form of government. The religions of the western civilizations are not negative; they are affirmative. You and I who believe in God must think and act affirmatively to obey His commandments and His law. Democratic government is an affirmative type of government. Democratic government requires leadership of an affirmative, not of a negative nature. It certainly requires affirmative leadership to meet the challenge that exists today. As the gentleman from Illinois well said, "red fascism," or "atheistic communism," is "on the march." There is no reason why those of us who have similar views on this subject should refrain from expressing our thoughts. Certainly, there is no withholding of expression of the objectives of the Soviet Union, as far as that country is concerned.

The bringing about of permanent peace rests mainly upon the United States and the Soviet Union; both countries have this responsibility. Our country is doing everything it possibly can to bring about permanent peace.

I publicly charge that the failure to bring about permanent peace today is due to the unwillingness of the representatives of the Soviet Union to cooperate with the understanding necessary to bring about world peace. Persecution, concentration camps, viciousness in all forms, even resulting in death, follow in the wake of atheistic communism. The sordid election in Poland is but another incident. The national interest of our country calls for affirmative action. This means we must develop and use the powers of our country, and maintain our powers so that the representatives of our country will be supported by a powerful army, a powerful navy, a powerful air force. The people of America should be aroused to the challenge of atheistic communism which is attempting to encircle, and, if possible, envelop our country.

Mr. Speaker, I was chairman of the first subcommittee that investigated communism a dozen or so years ago. We investigated Nazis, Fascists, and the bigot, for whom I have nothing but contempt. I have contempt for anyone who hates his fellow man because of the accident of birth, or because of difference of race, color, or creed. My committee was the only one, in over 30 years, that recommended legislation on that subject which has passed the Congress and is now law. The Alien Propaganda Registration Act came out of my committee. The bill making it a crime for anyone to willfully advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence, now a law, was recommended by me. That came out of the special committee of which I was chairman. Also the bill, now a law, giving the Army and Navy real power to control subversive activities in our armed forces came out of my committee. It took us over 3 years to get such legislation through the Congress. There was great resistance from certain directions. But they are all law now.

Mr. Speaker, I think I know a little something about communism. I know something about how Communists operate. The only legislation put through the Congress in over 30 years on that subject was passed as the result of the recommendations of a special committee of which I was chairman and under my leadership.

We are not going to meet this problem by sitting back and letting it roll up on our shores. Yes, we are on the last line of defense in Europe now. If Italy goes communistic—and the prediction is if the Allied troops are withdrawn it will—if France goes communistic, and if Spain goes communistic, our national interests will be adversely affected—the country that controls the Mediterranean controls Europe. Yes, the country that controls Europe thus controls Asia and Africa. We had better face these practical facts. In addition to the European situation, we must also consider similar communistic efforts in Asia and all over the Far East. We must consider, first, the national interests of our country. We must look at this situation from the angle of the national interests of America. What can we do? What should we do in our national interest to help all countries combat communism? What can we do to start rolling back the so-called iron curtain?

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BUFFETT. The gentleman is making a very forceful exposé of communistic interests. He spoke a moment ago about the forces of hatred, which certainly is one of the factors that communism has always used. Does not the gentleman think it a bit sad that in our own country our military has for 19 months after VE-day taught our young soldiers to hate the people of another land? Is not that sort of thing kind of bad in connection with what the gentleman says?

Mr. McCORMACK. If what the gentleman says is correct, may I say that I do not differentiate between any kind of hatred.

Mr. BUFFETT. Does not the gentleman think it is part of our job as Members of Congress to investigate that sort of thing?

Mr. McCORMACK. If what the gentleman says is correct, that is, that our Army is engendering hatred into the minds of our soldiers against the people of another land, then that condition should not be tolerated.

Mr. BUFFETT. Let me add this: The policy has been officially abandoned. I got this information from an article by Felix Morley, who is pretty much of an authority, that for 19 months that policy had been going on.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I concur in what my colleague from Nebraska said, that the gentleman from Massachusetts, as he always does, is delivering an informative and timely address. The gentleman mentioned Poland a few minutes ago. Does the gentleman for a moment believe that the election held in Poland on Sunday last, which registered 80 percent in favor of communism, reflected the true sentiments of a Christian people?

Mr. McCORMACK. The percentage was more than that, and my answer to the gentleman's question is "No."

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course not.

Mr. McCORMACK. There was nothing free or unfettered about it. It is all consistent with what the gentleman from Illinois said about this march of "red fascism." That constituted a consolidation within the communist orbit of Poland for some time to come. The great majority of the people of Poland never would tolerate communism. It was not a free election; it was not an unfettered election.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has not every election that has been held under Communist auspices been preceded by terrorism?

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly; the gentleman is absolutely right. My purpose is to follow the broad line taken by the gentleman from Illinois, who has made a powerful contribution, and to give my views in implementation of what he said and to go one marked step forward. He talked about the danger. Yes. I want the answer. We have had these dangers in bygone centuries against the civilization in which we believe. These dangers were subdued and conquered. But it had to be by affirmative and courageous leadership I do not want to sit back and let this encircling movement of atheistic communism be successful. There is no question but from an ideological standpoint there is an encircling movement going on and directed against the United States, and in my opinion it is a part of the military plan of the Soviet Union. I want affirmative leadership in our foreign affairs, and affirmative leadership in our domestic affairs, to mold our people together, and to enable our country to take those steps which will give us the right type of leadership. Such leadership will be consistent with our national interest, and with our plans and hopes for a future decent world.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does the gentleman agree with me that the way to bring that affirmative action about is to maintain strong military and naval forces, because, paradoxically as it may seem, when we are strong in a military way we are strong at the bargaining table when we want to make deals to bring about permanent peace?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is what I referred to in my remarks.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Having in mind the report of Attorney General Biddle—in the report that he made about 3 years ago concerning the Communist movement in this country—and having in mind that the gentleman himself served as chairman of the Committee on Subversive Activities some 10 years ago, does he still believe that the words of Attorney General Biddle run true about the Communist organization in this country today—that they are dedicated by force and violence to overthrow the Government of the United States?

Mr. McCORMACK. In my opinion, there is no question about it. Twelve years ago when we had Browder and Ford, the Communist candidates for President and Vice President, before our special committee, they frankly admitted there was a political continuity between the Communist Party in America and the Third International. That fact is clear, and the committee of which the gentleman from Mississippi is a member has plenty of evidence on that.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I read the gentleman's report many, many times in regard to that point. I have it in my office. But the very fact that the International Comintern has been dissolved, as they say, does that make any difference?

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it has been dissolved in name only.

I want to conclude by again complimenting the gentleman from Illinois. I rose to implement his remarks by trying to drive home the thought that we should not sit back and wait until communism comes to our shores. Affirmative and courageous leadership is the answer to this challenge.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a petition I have received from the people of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Daily Times, of Hammond, Ind., regarding my fellow Hoosier, our very able assistant here on the floor of the House, Johnny McCabe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMUNISM IN HOLLYWOOD—AND ELSEWHERE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on January 3, 1945, I offered the resolution to create the permanent Committee on Un-American Activities. I was made a member of that committee and have been a member of it from that day to this. I have received more abuse and more persecution at the hands of the Red element of this country and their stooges than any other man who has ever served in the Congress of the United States.

But my country comes first. If it did not, I would not take the time of the House today to bring more forcibly to your attention, if possible, the grave dangers with which we are confronted.

Communism is based upon hatred for Christianity. It has come down the centuries. It is the same old gang that constituted the fifth column of the crucifixion. They hounded the Saviour during the days of his ministry, persecuted Him to His ignoble death, derided Him during the moments of His dying agony, and then gambled for His garments at the foot of the cross. For more than 1900 years they have been doing everything possible to destroy Christianity and everything based on Christian principles.

I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that we should not wait until communism gets here, but I want to inform him that it is already here. The enemy is now within our gates.

A few years ago ex-President Hoover visited Europe—about 1936—and I heard him say over the radio that there was a great banner stretched across the gate of Moscow reading, "Religion is the opiate of the people."

Communism is making a world-wide attempt to destroy Christianity and all free governments that are based on Christianity.

There was no such thing as personal freedom until the Saviour came into the world and taught the dignity of the individual as well as his duty to God, his country, his neighbor, and himself. That is when human freedom began. That was the beginning of our Christian civilization, the only civilization that has ever existed that was really worthy of the name.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I am highly gratified that we are spending as much time as we are today on this very important subject, which has not only its domestic implications but also very serious ramifications in the field of foreign affairs. I think it will be mighty worth-while reading for the people who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to read the speech by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the speech by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and the speech to come by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. If we do nothing else, I hope that in this discussion today we can clinch one point in the mind of the American people, and that is the proper definition of the term "communism." We think of it perhaps as an economic theory or as a political theory.

Our committee for the past 2 years has been drawing the attention of Congress and the American public to this vital fact which is brought out in Communism in Action, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] referred and which was published by the Library of Congress. That is, communism is something more than a political theory or a political party and something more than an economic theory. I want to quote at this point a very short definition from a highly authentic source, the New York Times, which editorially gave a splendid one-sentence definition of the Communist Party in its issue of January 21. I read:

> The Communist Party is not a political party but a conspiracy which uses democratic methods to kill off democracy and resorts to bullets when the ballots go against it.

That, my friends, is what the Communist Party actually is. If we keep that in mind we will know better how to deal with Communists on the Federal pay roll, and we will know better how to deal with Communists in America and Communist ideologies pushing in on us from abroad.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from South Dakota, who is also a member of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

There is no more democracy in a Communist country than there is in Sing-Sing Penitentiary. I made the statement to a Member of Congress from Missouri who had just come back from Europe that there was no more human liberty in a Communist country than there was in the penitentiary of Missouri or Mississippi. He said, "Not as much." "For," he said, "in the penitentiary you at least have religious freedom. In addition to that, you have a chaplain to pray for you." "Besides," he said, "you have the hope of getting out some day, either by a pardon or by the expiration of your term. But a man is chained to a job for life in a Communist country. There is no hope of escape." He said that the convict has the assurance that at least his wife and children will not be forced to suffer the same fate. The Communist has no such assurance.

Communism is already manifesting itself here through various Communist-front organizations, such as the so-called Southern Conference of Human Welfare.

All these racial disturbances you have seen in the South have been inspired by the tentacles of this great octopus, communism, which is out to destroy everything for which you and I stand.

As I said, so far as I am concerned, my country comes first. Regardless of what it takes, I am for driving every Communist and every fellow traveler from the Federal pay roll. I am for a housecleaning in every department, and a fumigation if necessary. I am for driving them from every State pay roll and every county pay roll in America. I am for driving them from the radio. I am for driving them from our educational institutions. I am for driving them from the motion pictures, with which they are poisoning the minds of our children. I received this petition from the patriotic people of California. I will read it to you. It says:

To the Congress:

(Attention Congressman JOHN E. RANKIN, the Committee for the Investigation of Un-American Activities.)

We, the undersigned American citizens of the State of California, congratulate you on your plans to investigate the Communist plot, now centering in Hollywood and the west coast area. We realize that because of this investigation you and your committee will be subjected to much persecution, ridicule, and attack. We are, therefore, signing this petition to give you encouragement and support in your defense of Christian America.

I expect to put all these names in the RECORD. I want you to read all the thousands of names of the people of California who signed this petition.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. For the purpose of the RECORD, how long is that petition? Have you measured it?

Mr. RANKIN. No; but if somebody will take the other end of it, I will unroll it, and you will see that it is something like a hundred or a hundred and fifty feet long.

Mr. Speaker, that is the voice of America, appealing to us, appealing to the Congress of the United States, whether Democrat or Republican, to stand up for this Government which has been entrusted to our care, to uphold our Christian civilization and protect our American way of life.

I want to tell you one thing, they may continue their vicious attacks on me over the radio, they may continue their attacks in the press, they may continue to manufacture their scurrilous films with which they attempt to smear me and my section of the country, they may continue to malign the Committee on Un-American Activities, but so help us God, if the Congress will stay with us, we will drive this infamous influence from American soil and send our country down to the future, as Henry Grady once said, "holding high the torch and making light the way up which all other nations of the earth must come in God's appointed time."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] has expired.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24, 1947

(Legislative day of Wednesday, January 15, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father in heaven, ere we become involved in the routine of the day, we pause to seek Thy help. Experienced in the ways of men, we know all too little of the ways of God. But Thou knowest us, each one of us, by name and by our needs. Turn our wayward minds and hearts to Thee. Forgive the faults and failures of the past and set us free from them. Forgive, O Lord, our failure to apply to ourselves the standards of conduct we demand of others. Forgive our slowness to see the good in our fellows and to see the evil in ourselves. In our differences may we be kind; in our agreements may we be humble, that Thy will may be done in us, and through us in our beloved land. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 22, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I ask to be excused from attendance on the Senate on Monday through Wednesday of next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted the Senator from South Carolina.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR COOLIDGE, OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, yesterday a former distinguished Member of this body and an honored citizen of Massachusetts passed away. I knew every Member of the Senate who served with Marcus Allen Coolidge, of Fitchburg, Mass., liked him. He was a Senator from Massachusetts from 1931 to 1937. Mr. Coolidge, a former mayor of his city, was held in high respect as a thoughtful, energetic leader in public life. In private life he was a successful businessman and loved by those who worked with him. His family life was always most happy. Born in modest circumstances, by his own enterprise he rose to become one of our prominent citizens. The people of Massachusetts deeply regret his passing.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it was my privilege to succeed the late Marcus A. Coolidge as junior Senator from Massachusetts in January 1937. Consequently, I was in a position to develop an informed judgment on the esteem in which he was held by Senators who had served with him here. His good humor, his wide knowledge of affairs, and his public spirit were qualities which endeared him to his colleagues in the Senate just as they had won for him so many friends in Massachusetts. A fine citizen has gone to his reward. I mourn his passing and extend my warm sympathy to the members of his family.

MEETING OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, subject to the approval of the Senate, I desire to call an organization meeting of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy for this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the District of Columbia Committee room, adjacent to the Senate Chamber.

There has been great difficulty in finding a time not in violent conflict with the convenience of many Members in connection with their other duties. Two o'clock this afternoon seems to be about the only time that is available.

The meeting, which is for organization purposes only, will, in my opinion, take not more than 20 minutes. I, therefore, ask permission of the Senate that the members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy of the Senate be permitted to attend the meeting at 2 o'clock in the District of Columbia Committee room.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Iowa is granted.

AVAILABILITY OF ROAD FUNDS UNDER FEDERAL AID ACT OF 1944

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the South Dakota State Highway Commission in regular session on January 14, 1947, favoring extension of the time for availability of funds under the Federal Aid Act of 1944.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Public Works, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 6009

Extension of time for availability of funds under Federal Aid Act of 1944

Whereas the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1944 authorizes the apportionment of certain funds for each of the first three successive postwar fiscal years for Federal-aid highways, for Federal-aid secondary roads, and for projects on the Federal-aid highway system in urban areas; and

Whereas section 4 (d) of said act provides that any sums so apportioned to any State shall be available for expenditure in such State for only 1 year after the close of the fiscal year for which it is apportioned and that any sum so apportioned that remains unexpended at the end of such period, shall lapse and revert to the Treasury of the United States; and

Whereas the aforesaid provisions of section 4 (d) of said act will operate to cause South Dakota to lose that portion of such funds apportioned to it for the first postwar fiscal year that may not be expended by June 30, 1947; and for the second postwar fiscal year not be expended by June 30, 1948; and for the third postwar fiscal year not be expended by June 30, 1949; and

Whereas the South Dakota State Highway Commission is certain that due to the elements of inflation and certain acute shortages of labor and engineering personnel, materials, and equipment, that are known to exist, will make it difficult, if not impossible, to have these funds expended within the time now prescribed by said act, notwithstanding that the State highway commission and the public generally realize that the need for the expenditure of such funds on highway work is and will be more intensified by reason of deterioration, increased unit cost, and ever-mounting traffic volumes; and

Whereas the South Dakota Highway Commission as agent for the counties of South Dakota, which counties, through their privilege, as provided by the afore-mentioned act, may cooperate with the Federal Government in the construction of Federal-aid secondary farm-to-market roads, is aware of the fact that due to lack of the necessary surveys and plans in the hands of the counties of South Dakota, due to the lack of engineering personnel available to the counties, that unless additional time is provided, as requested herein, the funds made available in the above-mentioned highway act, cannot possibly be used by the counties of South Dakota within the time prescribed: Therefore be it

Resolved by the South Dakota State Highway Commission in regular session on January 14, 1947, That the South Dakota Members in the Congress of the United States are hereby petitioned to use their best efforts in securing an extension of the periods of availability of such funds for 12 months after June 30 of each of the years 1947, 1948, and 1949.

Adopted this 14th day of January A. D. 1947.

SOUTH DAKOTA HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
By FRANK M. MITCHELL,
Secretary.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES FOR CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS AND DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, and request that a letter from Henry P. Chandler, Director, Administrative Office of the United States Courts, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the letter presented by the Senator from Wisconsin will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 331) to provide necessary officers and employees for circuit courts of appeals and district courts, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The letter presented by Mr. WILEY is as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1947.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: In behalf of the Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Judges, I herewith transmit a bill for an act to supply basic legislative authority for certain personnel of the courts, particularly secretaries of circuit and district judges for whom it is now lacking, and I would request that the bill be introduced and enacted in due course.

Provision has been made in the annual appropriation acts for secretaries for circuit and district judges for at least the last 50 years, but there is no other express statutory authority for these employees. During the consideration of the Judiciary Appropriation Act for 1946 in the House of Representatives in the spring of 1945, a point of order was made and sustained to the appropriation for miscellaneous salaries of the courts covering the compensation of the secretaries to judges among other employees. The appropriation was restored during the consideration of the bill in the Senate and this action was concurred in by the House so that the appropriation was included in the 1946 appropriation act for the judiciary as passed. A similar appropriation was made without objection in the appropriation act for the current fiscal year, 1947.

Pursuant, however, to expressions of the Appropriations Committees of both Houses that basic acts should be secured for any purposes included in appropriations for which it was then lacking, consideration was given by members of the Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Judges in 1945 to the drafting of legislation to provide for secretaries and law clerks of circuit judges and district judges, and some other miscellaneous employees of the courts paid out of the appropriation for miscellaneous salaries. A bill was recommended which on October 1, 1945, was introduced in the House of Representatives in the last Congress (H. R. 4230). The bill passed the House in the form introduced on March 18, 1946, and on June 14, 1946, passed the Senate with some amendments. The Houses disagreeing, conferees were appointed and a conference report was filed on July 27, 1946, recommending that the House agree to the Senate amendments. This report was agreed to by the Senate but no action was taken on the report in the House and the bill lapsed with the adjournment of the Congress.

The Judicial Conference of Senior Circuit Judges considered the matter again at its annual meeting in October 1946 and recommended the enactment of the bill previously submitted, with the addition of the amendments attached by the Senate. The bill as so amended is now submitted.

The terms of the bill give to the Congress from year to year through the annual appropriation acts complete control of the number and compensation of the judicial employees involved. In this respect the bill follows the pattern of the corresponding provision for clerks and other employees of the executive branch (5 U. S. C. 43). One amendment of substance which was added to the original bill in the Senate extended to the creation of any new position for employees embraced in the bill, a requirement which is applicable under the present law (28 U. S. C. 128) to the appointment of law clerks by district judges, namely that the senior circuit judge of the circuit shall certify to the need for such an employee. This amendment and the formal amendments made by the Senate in the bill the Judicial Conference approved.

It is essential for the effectiveness of the Federal judicial organization that there be no interruption in the secretarial service furnished to the judges and the services rendered to the courts by other personnel now appropriated for. I, therefore, hope that the enclosed bill may receive prompt and favorable consideration.

Yours very respectfully,

HENRY P. CHANDLER,

NATIONAL FIREARMS ACT OF 1947

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of Justice, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to be known as the National Firearms Act of 1947, for the registration of firearms in our country, and for a tax on their transfer.

POSSIBLE OBJECTIONS TO BILL

In the past some objections have been raised to the registration of firearms in our country. I believe that these objections should be adequately heard, but that prompt action should be taken in consideration of legislation such as that I am introducing.

Question may be raised as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. In this connection, we might note that the constitutionality of the National Firearms Act of 1934 was sustained as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress.

I am not committed to the language of this proposed bill as final, but I am anxious that a measure of this type should be thoroughly and quickly evaluated by Congress.

I would be the very last person to suggest that the Federal Government intrude on any matter pertaining exclusively to our State governments and localities. But the problem of crime is a Nation-wide problem, and the responsibility of the National Government is great. I point out, too, that nothing in the proposed legislation will impair the right of any State or locality to pass its own laws which might regulate the carrying of concealed weapons or the licensing of traffic in firearms.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The situation to which the Attorney General calls attention in his letter to me regarding the vast unaccounted-for amount of firearms in our country, which is contributing to the present crime wave, must, I believe, be promptly corrected. Right now we require registration and tax the transfer of machine guns, submachine guns, sawed-off shotguns, and silencers, but do not require registration of nor do we tax the transfer of pistols, rifles, semiautomatic rifles, or ordinary rifles. The headlines in every paper telling us of new crimes demand that we consider some action on the latter group of deadly weapons.

It will be noted that the proposed legislation exempts from these requirements all shotguns and all rifles with a caliber of .22 or smaller, firing rim-fire ammunition, unless they are already covered by the provisions of the National Firearms Act. Firearms of these calibers are generally used for sporting purposes and, therefore, need not come within the purpose of the proposed legislation.

I believe that the vast group of hunting sportsmen in our country will be the very first to recognize the necessity for curbing conditions which lead to the very unsportsmanlike use of firearms in crime. Countless parents throughout the country, too, who are concerned with the problem of juvenile delinquency, will recognize that some such legislation as this may prove very important in preventing their own youth and other youth from securing firearms and entering into a wayward life of crime.

I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD following my remarks and that a letter to me from the Attorney General on this subject also be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 332) to provide for the registration of certain firearms, the taxation of the transfers thereof, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act—

Such tax shall be paid by the transferor and shall be represented by appropriate stamps to be provided by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. Code, title 26, secs. 2550 and 3220), and all other provisions of the internal-revenue laws shall, insofar as not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this act.

(c) Under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, and upon proof of the exportation of any firearm to any foreign country (whether exported as part of another article or not) with respect to which the transfer tax upon this section has been paid by the manufacturer, the Commissioner shall refund to the manufacturer the amount of the tax so paid, or, if the manufacturer waives all claim for the amount to be refunded, the refund shall be made to the exporter.

SEC. 4. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person to transfer a firearm except in pursuance of a written order from the person seeking to obtain such article, on an application form issued in blank in triplicate for that purpose by the Commissioner, which order shall identify the transferee by such means as may be prescribed by regulations under this act. If the transferee is an individual, such identification shall include his fingerprints. Copies of the application and fingerprints shall be transmitted forthwith by the Commissioner to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(b) Every person transferring a firearm shall set forth in each copy of such order the manufacturer's number or other mark identifying such firearm and shall forward such order in duplicate to the Commissioner. The original thereof, with stamps affixed, shall be returned to the transferor for delivery to the transferee.

(c) If the transfer of a firearm is exempted from the provisions of this act as provided in section 11 hereof, the person transferring such firearm shall notify the Commissioner of the name and address of the transferee, the number or other mark identifying such firearm, and the date of its transfer, and shall file with the Commissioner such documents in proof thereof as the Commissioner may by regulations prescribe. Copies of the aforesaid notification and accompanying documents shall be transmitted forthwith by the Commissioner to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(d) Importers, manufacturers, and dealers who have registered and paid the tax as provided for in section 2 of this act shall not be required to conform to the provisions of this section with respect to transactions in firearms with dealers or manufacturers who likewise have registered and have paid such tax, but shall keep such records and make such reports regarding such transactions as may be prescribed by regulations under this act.

SEC. 5. (a) Within 6 months after the effective date of this act every person possessing a firearm shall register, with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he resides, the number or other mark identifying such firearm, together with his name, address, place where such firearm is usually kept, and place of business or employment, and, if such person is other than a natural person, the name and home address of an executive thereof. If the applicant for registration is an individual, the application for registration shall include his fingerprints. No person shall be required to register under this subsection with respect to any such firearm acquired after the effective date of this act and in conformity with the provisions thereof. Copies of the aforesaid registrations and fingerprints shall be transmitted forthwith by the Commissioner to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

(b) The residence of a person possessing a firearm in violation of this act shall be presumed to be the place where the firearm shall be discovered or seized, but this presumption shall be rebuttable.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to receive or possess any firearm which has been transferred to him in violation of section 3 or 4 of this act. Whenever on trial for a violation of this section the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of such firearm at any time after the expiration of the period prescribed for registration by section 5 (a), without having registered the same as required by section 5, such possession shall create a presumption that such firearm came into the possession of the defendant subsequently to the expiration of such period, but this presumption shall be rebuttable.

SEC. 7. (a) Any firearm which has at any time been transferred in violation of the provisions of this act shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, and (except as provided in subsection (b)) all the provisions of internal revenue laws relating to searches, seizure, and forfeitures of unstamped articles are extended to and made to apply to the articles taxed under this act and the persons to whom this act applies.

(b) In the case of the forfeiture of any firearm by reason of a violation of this act, no such firearm shall be sold at public sale. If such firearm is in the possession of any officer of the United States other than the Secretary, such officer shall deliver the firearm to the Secretary; and the Secretary may order such firearm destroyed or may sell such firearm to any State, Territory, or possession, or political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or retain it for the use of the Treasury Department or transfer it without charge to any other executive department or any independent establishment of the Government for use by it.

SEC. 8. (a) Each manufacturer and importer of a firearm shall identify it with a number or other identification mark approved by the Commissioner, such number or mark to be stamped or otherwise placed thereon in a manner approved by the Commissioner.

(b) It shall be unlawful for anyone to obliterate, remove, change, or alter such numbers or other identification mark. Whenever on trial for a violation of this subsection the defendant is shown to have or to have had possession of any firearm upon which such number or mark has been obliterated, removed, changed, or altered, such possession shall create a presumption that the defendant obliterated, changed, or altered such number or other identification mark, but such presumption shall be rebuttable.

SEC. 9. Importers, manufacturers, and dealers, shall keep such books and records and render such returns in relation to the transactions in firearms specified in this act as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations require.

SEC. 10. (a) The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying the provisions of this act into effect; and shall cause suitable forms to be prepared for the purposes of this act, and to be distributed to collectors of internal revenue and such other persons as he shall determine.

(b) The Postmaster General is hereby authorized to accord the use of the facilities of the Post Office Department for the distribution of registration forms required of this act.

(c) The Federal Bureau of Investigation shall investigate violations of this act and shall have access to the files and records of the Commissioner relating to the administration of the act.

SEC. 11. This act shall not apply (1) to transfers of firearms to the United States; or to any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof; or to the District of Columbia; (2) to transfers of firearms to any peace officer or any officer or employee of the United States, designated by regulations of the Commissioner; or (3) to transfers of any firearms which are unserviceable and which are transferred as a curiosity or ornament. The provisions of section 5 of this act shall not apply to any transfer referred to in clauses (1) or (2) of this section.

SEC. 12. Any person who violates or fails to comply with any provision of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, or 9 of this act shall be fined not more than $500 or be imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 13. The provisions of this act shall apply to the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territory of Alaska, and the Territory of Hawaii.

SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 15. This act shall become effective 90 days after the date of its approval.

SEC. 16. This act may be cited as the "National Firearms Act of 1947."

The letter presented by Mr. WILEY is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 10, 1947.

HON. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to bring to the attention of the Congress an important problem arising out of the traffic in firearms.

One of the principal difficulties confronting law enforcement agencies is the comparative ease with which criminals procure deadly weapons. Recent developments have accentuated this condition. At present, thousands of small arms, principally revolvers and automatic pistols, originally issued to the members of the armed forces, are in the possession of persons who do not appear to have acquired them legitimately. This situation is, in part, due to the fact that prior to August 6, 1940, the War Department authorized the sale of such weapons to officers of the Army and Navy and the Marine Corps, to officers of the Reserve Corps, to members of the National Guard, and to members of the National Rifle Association. While one of the conditions of these sales was that the firearms were not transferable, nevertheless, a great many of them were sold by original purchasers and changed hands many times.

During World War II, thousands of firearms have been brought into the United States by soldiers returning from abroad, or have been stolen from various units of the armed forces within the United States and from National Guard armories. Moreover, the armed forces have reported that a tremendous number of small arms have been lost or unaccounted for. For example, between November 1941 and December 1944, the War and Navy Departments have submitted to the Federal Bureau of Investigation over 1,300 reports of losses of firearms, such as revolvers, automatic pistols, machine guns, rifles, and the like. Recently a considerable number of various types of firearms, frequently of foreign origin, have been found in the possession of members of the underworld. Investigation has shown that many of these weapons have been smuggled into the United States, either by returning soldiers and sailors or by merchant seamen on return voyages from foreign countries, and eventually have found their way into illicit channels. These conditions constitute a potential menace and danger, and may lead to an increase in crime. The problem is Nation-wide in character, and adequately can be attacked only on a national basis.

At present, there are two Federal statutes partially regulating and limiting traffic in firearms. The first is the National Firearms Act (act of June 26, 1934, 48 Stat. 1237; 26 U. S. C. 2720–2733). This statute relates to machine guns, submachine guns, sawed-off shotguns, and silencers. This act imposed a tax on all transfers of firearms of the foregoing type. It also required all persons possessing such firearms to register them with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In addition, the act imposed a tax on importers, manufacturers of, and dealers in such firearms. The constitutionality of this act, as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress, was sustained in Sonzinski v. United States (300 U. S. 506), and United States v. Miller (307 U. S. 174). Experience has shown that the act is exceedingly effective within its sphere. Nevertheless, the fact that its scope is restricted to firearms of specified limited types and does not reach such weapons as pistols, rifles, semiautomatic rifles, ordinary rifles, and shotguns, renders it inadequate.

The Federal Firearms Act (act of June 30, 1938, 52 Stat. 1250; 15 U. S. C. 901–909) relates to interstate and foreign commerce in firearms. It created a license system in respect to manufacturers and dealers who transport, ship, or receive firearms or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce. In addition, it prohibits the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of any firearms by any person who is known to be under indictment or as having been convicted in any Federal or State court of a crime of violence, or is known to be a fugitive from justice. It is made unlawful for any such person to ship, transport, or cause to be shipped or transported, any firearm or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce. This act does not solve the problem confronting law enforcement agencies in view of the fact that it is based upon the commerce clause and, therefore, is confined to transactions in interstate or foreign commerce. This circumstance renders the act inapplicable to numerous situations involving improper possession and use of firearms.

I recommend enactment of legislation requiring the general registration of firearms and the levying of a tax on the transfer of such firearms in the United States. I would, however, exempt from these requirements all shotguns and rifles with a caliber of .22 or smaller designed to fire rim-fire ammunition, unless they are already covered by the provisions of the National Firearms Act of June 26, 1934. Firearms of these calibers are used for sporting purposes and would seem not ordinarily to come within the purposes of the proposed legislation.

The result to be achieved can be accomplished by extending the scheme of the National Firearms Act. The application for registration and the record of the transfer should be accompanied by the fingerprints of the applicant. Copies of such fingerprints should be transmitted to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In addition, all importers, manufacturers, and dealers in firearms should be required to register and pay a tax. In order not to impose an undue financial burden on owners of firearms, I suggest that the tax on transfers of firearms be fixed at only $1.

The proposed legislation would result in a record of firearms in the United States and would make it possible to observe traffic in and the flow of firearms. Persons failing to comply with the requirements of the act would be subject to criminal penalties. The measure would place difficulties in the way of organized gangsters who may endeavor to equip themselves with firearms for the purpose of carrying on their criminal activities. It would make it more difficult for dealers to engage in illicit transactions in firearms. In addition, it would afford law enforcement agencies an effective means of tracing sources of supply and of detecting dealers who furnish firearms to criminals, as well as assisting in the identification of specific weapons.

For some years this Department has urged the enactment of legislation of the type here proposed. Because of the conditions described above, the necessity for it is even greater at this time than it has been heretofore.

Attention is called to the fact that the proposed legislation would not require a person purchasing or possessing a firearm to procure a license. It would merely require him to register the firearm and to record any transfer of the weapon. The burden imposed upon a law-abiding citizen who desires to possess a firearm would be inconsequential. It would be no greater than that involved in the registration of an automobile. Yet, laws requiring the registration of automobiles have never been regarded as unduly onerous. Registration of deadly weapons is at least as necessary as the registration of motor vehicles.

Nothing in the proposed legislation would impair the right of a State or local subdivision to pass laws regulating the carrying of concealed weapons or the licensing of traffic in firearms.

A draft of a proposed bill to effectuate this recommendation is enclosed. I urge its enactment.

I have been informed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this proposal.

Sincerely yours,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

NATIONAL AIR CORPS RESERVE

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, by request of the National Air Corps Reserve of the United States, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference three bills. This organization held a convention in Memphis, Tenn., in November, and adopted certain resolutions outlining their ideas respecting the Air Corps Reserve and setting forth how it should be established. I believe Congress should have the benefit of their ideas. I certainly should like to have them fully explored.

There being no objection, the bills were received, read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services, as follows:

S. 335. A bill to extend disability and death benefits to personnel of the reserve components of the armed services while on active duty or in training;

S. 336. A bill to provide for the distribution of nonappropriated moneys derived from the operation of officers clubs, and the distribution and disposal of property, furniture and fixtures, derived from and by the operation of officers clubs of the Army Air Forces; and

S. 337. A bill to amend the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended.

PROHIBITION IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE OF FLAMMABLE WEARING APPAREL AND FABRICS

Mr. CAPEHART. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to prohibit the introduction or movement in interstate commerce of articles of wearing apparel and fabrics which are so highly flammable as to be dangerous when worn by individuals, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 353) to prohibit the introduction or movement in interstate commerce of articles of wearing apparel and fabrics which are so highly flammable as to be dangerous when worn by individuals, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. CAPEHART, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I had intended to make on the floor of the Senate may now be printed in the body of the RECORD in order to save time. The statement deals with the bill I have just introduced.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CAPEHART

Mr. President, I have introduced today a bill that I feel confident will attract the immediate attention of every Member of the Senate.

I am sure all Senators read some months ago of the several deaths that resulted right here in the Washington area when children wearing so-called cowboy suits were fatally burned when their clothing became ignited. I do not know how many deaths have been caused throughout the country in the past several years by flammable garments, but I do know that from a preliminary survey the situation demands our immediate attention. Hence, I have introduced a bill that I believe it will be agreed is the type of legislation that is needed.

This bill has been drafted after nearly 2 years of study by the best technical minds in the country. Committees of the National Retail Dry Goods Association and the American Association of Textile Chemists and Colorists working in conjunction with manufacturers, processors, finishers, and retailers, have drafted a bill that will, I believe, cope adequately with the problem. I am happy to sponsor it here. Certainly the purpose of this measure is in the highest public interests, for it will rid the market place of dangerous wearing apparel.

That this problem is not confined to children's play suits, let me give a few examples of what is happening:

A Chicago woman was severely burned when a pair of slacks she was wearing ignited when she struck a match. Even the furniture in her apartment was damaged by the flames.

Here in Washington a woman received serious burns when the chenille lounging robe she was wearing caught fire and burned rapidly.

Last March in Berlin, N. H., a young expectant mother died 3 days after being critically burned when her clothes became ignited as she was preparing dinner. An apron she was wearing caught fire, turning her into a mass of flames.

An 18-year-old Texas co-ed died from burns that resulted when her dress caught fire at a sorority initiation. On and on go these horror stories. I cite these cases for you in order that you may realize the seriousness of this problem of flammable wearing apparel.

The bill I introduce is the culmination of long months of study on the part of the best technical minds in the country.

Briefly, this bill would prohibit the introduction or movement in interstate commerce of articles of wearing appareal and fabrics which are so highly flammable as to be dangerous when worn by individuals. It covers not only garments and piece goods, but also articles of personal adornment such as bracelets, buttons, brooches, and similar items. The administration of this measure would come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, an agency well qualified through experience in this general field to administer such an act.

Although I have always been, and still am, a stanch supporter of State rights, I believe in this instance that a Federal measure is the only solution to the problem. At the present time, California has on its statute books an act that has for its purpose the control of flammable wearing apparel, and I am informed that no less than 23 other States are studying the problem with a view toward enacting similar legislation. If this were to happen, it would result in an impossible situation for manufacturers and finishers of this type of merchandise. I think it goes without saying that there would be no uniformity among the States and that manufacturers would be placed in the position of trying to conform with 24 different regulations. For this reason, I believe a strong, but fair national statute is the only solution to this problem. In fact, I am advised that the California Legislature is watching with a great deal of interest the progress of this bill, and for the sake of uniformity may withhold the effective date of their measure until the Federal act becomes operative.

Let me say in closing that this bill is supported by the National Retail Dry Goods Association, an association of 7,000 department stores, and by the American Association of Textile Chemists and Colorists, as well as others interested in this problem. All are acting unselfishly in an effort to protect the useless waste of lives that has resulted from the manufacture and sale of wearing apparel made from flammable materials. Because of the urgency of the situation, I recommend that this bill be given serious consideration and attention.

Mr. AIKEN subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] asked to have printed in the body of the RECORD a speech which he would have delivered if he had had an opportunity to do so this afternoon. I am not objecting to this speech being printed in the RECORD today, but I wish to say that it is highly irregular to have speeches printed in the body of the RECORD unless they have been delivered on the floor of the Senate. I can recall one instance in which the printing of a speech in the body of the RECORD when it was not delivered on the floor contributed to the defeat of a Senator in the election which followed soon after.

It seems to me that we should not permit any more speeches to be printed in the body of the RECORD unless they are delivered on the floor of the Senate, because there might be something in such speeches to which other Senators would like to take exception, which they would not have an opportunity to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Vermont that the statement of the Senator from Indiana will be printed in small type, and not in the regular type. It is in the nature of a statement, and not a speech.

Mr. AIKEN. That is perfectly proper, as I understand; but I merely heard the request to have the speech printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not construe the request as the Senator from Vermont construed it. Otherwise the Chair would not have given his own consent.

POSTPONEMENT OF REDUCTION OF DUTIES UNDER RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and myself, I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution requesting the postponement of further reduction of duties under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the resolution just submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] for himself and the senior Senator from Nevada is, I think, or sufficient importance to be brought to the immediate attention of the Senate. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the resolution, which is very brief, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 69), submitted by Mr. DWORSHAK (for himself and Mr. MCCARRAN), was received, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That the President and all agencies of the Federal Government are hereby requested to postpone any action seeking the further reduction of duties under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act), as amended, until sufficient time has elapsed to permit (1) a complete study by the Committee on Finance of the necessity for further action under the reciprocal trade agreements policy, and (2) action by the Congress with respect to any legislation proposed by such committee as the result of such study.

GENERAL SURVEY OF CONDITION OF AMERICAN INDIANS

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 70), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed, during the Eightieth Congress, to exercise the authority conferred and perform the duties imposed upon the Committee on Indian Affairs by Senate Resolution 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States.

The expenses of the committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, out of funds heretofore authorized by the Senate for such study by the Committee on Indian Affairs, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

FEDERAL AID TO STATES IN CONNECTION WITH NONTAXABLE GOVERNMENT-OWNED LAND

Mr. KNOWLAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the burdens imposed upon the States, and political subdivisions thereof, by reason of the location within their boundaries of real property of the United States which is not subject to State and local taxation, and with respect to the extent, if any, to which the United States should contribute to the financial support of the governments of the States, and political subdivisions thereof, in which such real property is located.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. MILLIKIN, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the following bills, and they were referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

S. 112. A bill to increase the permitted rate of allowance and compensation for training on the job under Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended; and

S. 118. A bill to guarantee honorably discharged veterans their right to work regardless of whether they are members or nonmembers of any labor organization.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKIN, the Committee on Finance was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 304) to provide for the redemption of terminal-leave bonds by the use of any surplus of Federal receipts over Federal expenditures, and it was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Under authority of Senate Resolution 55, agreed to January 17, 1947, the Secretary, on January 23, 1947, presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) relating to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SETTLEMENT OF GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY—HYMN OF THE PIONEER

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this is 1947. On July 24, 1847, the Mormon pioneers entered the Great Salt Lake Valley to make their home. The one hundredth anniversary of this event will be recognized by community and State-wide celebrations throughout this centennial year.

In 1909 the Grand Army of the Republic held its annual national encampment in Salt Lake City. In order that the Civil War veterans might catch the spirit which directed the hearts and the purposes of the Utah pioneers, Kate Thomas wrote the Hymn of the Pioneer. This poem reflects an idealization of the hope which inspired the hearts and the minds of the founders of Utah. Because of the Nation-wide interest in this year's celebration, I deem it not out of place to ask unanimous consent that the poem be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the poem was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE HYMN OF THE PIONEER

(By Kate Thomas)

Courage, my soul! All is not barren plain.
What tho' the way be long and strewed with dead.
His word is sure who knoweth all thy pain.
Lift up thine eyes, His heaven is overhead.
Praise God! Praise God!
His sun broke thro' the night
On—on—press on—
His love is all His might.

Courage, my soul! Yon is the Promised Land.
There shall white winter make thee no more cold;
There shalt thou rest thee of the burning sand;
Sweet streams shall lave thee, smiling dreams enfold.
Praise God! Praise God!
Deem not the conquest vain.
On—on—press on—
Thy sorrow is thy gain.

Courage, my soul! The Promised Land is drear?
Still fruitless desert, bitter, burning sun?
Still must thy back bend to a task severe?
Lift up thine eyes! Thy glory is begun.
Praise God! Praise God!
Thy burden is thy crown,
On—on—press on—
Nor stoop to lay it down.

Praise God, my soul! Behold the desert flowers.
Nations and tongues and peoples turn their feet
Towards a fair land, made fair by weary hours.
Lift up thine eyes! Thy triumph is complete.
Praise God! Praise God!
His love makes trial light.
On—on—press on—
The Promised Land is bright!

Praise God, my soul! My children reap the seed
Sowed by my faith and watered by my tears.
God of the nations, God of every creed,
Let them be just to what my soul reveres!
Praise God! Praise God!
Omnipotent above!
On—on—press on—
Till all the world is love!

INADEQUACY OF TEACHERS' SALARIES—SERMON BY DR. J. WARREN HASTINGS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced a bill which is now pending before a committee of this body looking toward assistance from the Federal Government to the teachers of America. Just a few days ago a sermon was delivered by the Reverend Dr. J. Warren Hastings, minister, National City Christian Church of Washington, D. C., in which, among other things, he said:

The situation is tragic. Public-school teachers are leaving the teaching profession in droves. The average school-teacher salary in 1941 was $1,470. The average salary for lawyers in independent practice for the same year was $4,794. Birth-rate statistics, the highest on record in our history, indicate that the public school now, and in the next 20 years, is more important to the preservation and dissemination of our democratic ideals than ever before in our history.

The sermon is so illuminating and apt to the subject, that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the sermon was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CALLED TO TEACH

"And He gave some teachers * * * for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." (Ephesians 4: 11, 12.)

Jesus believed in teaching. To Him life evolved around the twin principles of teaching and learning. He who had knowledge taught, and the uninformed learned. That was, and is, the way life progresses. Jesus picked up a little child and said: "Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little child shall in nowise enter therein." He would begin teaching children at a younger age than we do in our public schools.

COLONIAL EDUCATION FOR RELIGIOUS PURPOSES

There is no greater responsibility than that of awakening the personality of another person, of trying to direct his footsteps along the right pathway. To the Pilgrim Fathers, following the basic tenets of religion to the best of their ability, teaching was the main undergirt of their religion. In the beginning of the life of the colony, the children gathered in the kitchen of one of the village homes. Here they were taught from the Hornbook. One learned his letters, and so to read, in order to be able to study the Bible. A stands for Adam who sinned in the fall, and then they had what B stands for and C, etc.

Religion and education were closely allied in early America. The mind was to be informed and quickened and character was to be formed. Horace Mann (1796–1859) contended that just so far and so fast as education is extended, true democracy is ascendant. He believed that proper teaching would awaken an individual personality. Jesus would agree with that position.

Our first universities were founded by the Church. Harvard College, William and Mary College, King's College (now Columbia), Yale—all stemmed from religious sources.

PUBLIC SCHOOL THE FOUNDATION OF DEMOCRACY

The sociologists tell us that the world can be completely changed in three generations if people are taught correctly. Believing in public education as we do, we are prone to say: "Well, let the school do the proper job and be done with this terribly slow process of kingdom building." But that is not happening, for our public-school system is suffering from many ills. Admittedly the public schools are of the very warp and woof of America but at this moment they are ailing.

Most of us are products of the public-school system. The melting-pot experience which Zangwill talked about, and which is a vital, fundamental part of American life, took place in the public school. The children of the poor sat by and fellowshipped with the children of the rich. Clean and unclean played together until the teacher helped the unclean to be otherwise. The youngster who was not too brilliant had a degree of fellowship with the boy who had a high I. Q. The thing that made democracy was the fact that boys and girls from all sorts of homes and backgrounds could come together in a give-and-take, fair, and sportsmanship experience. This was the public-school system.

Where did you first learn your ideas of democracy? In the public schools. Where did you first learn the meaning of the Stars and Stripes and have a loyalty for the flag? In the public schools. Where did you first learn that "a man's a man for a' that"? In the public schools. Where did you first learn that a foreigner could come to our shores, learn our way of life, seek and secure citizenship, and then be one of us? In the public schools.

Recall these lines from the Ballad for Americans: "I'm just an Irish, Negro, Jewish, Italian, French and English, Spanish, Russian, Chinese, Polish, Scotch, Hungarian, Litvak, Swedish, Finnish, Canadian, Greek and Turk, and Czech and double Czech American. And that ain't all. I was baptized Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Lutheran, Atheist, Roman Catholic, Orthodox Jewish, Presbyterian, Seventh-Day Adventist, Mormon, Quaker, Christian Scientist, and lots more."

TODAY'S TRAGIC DECLINE IN PUBLIC-SCHOOL SYSTEM

Something strange has happened to us. The public-school system which was the Nation's melting pot and which really made democracy possible is waning. The public schools can do more to mold the people of this Nation together than any other of our institutions, but it cannot be the vital factor for building America that it might be without our support. Since 1939, 350,000 public-school teachers have quit. Nine hundred thousand teachers are required to staff our schools. It has been impossible to replace many of the teachers who have turned elsewhere for employment, with the result that our schools are at present understaffed.

There are 5,000,000 children of school age in this country who are not in school. In one State 36 percent of the people have not been to school more than 4 years. Most people seem to care very little about these deplorable conditions.

It will shock you to learn that there are 10,000,000 illiterate people in the United States. The United States Army turned down 676,000 for educational deficiency. Three hundred and fifty thousand of them could sign only an X for their names. Even in the Nation's capital city we have a fraction less than 9 percent illiterate.

There is a strange decline in educational emphasis so far as the public schools are concerned. Those who have entered the teaching profession in the last few years have 1 year less preparation than did the group beginning to teach in 1940 and in the years immediately prior to it. In 1920 22 percent of the students in our institutions of higher learning were preparing to teach. What percent today? Seven percent. There are almost 800,000 GI's studying today in our colleges and universities; less than 18,000 of them are preparing to teach. Yet the public schools are the very foundation of our democracy.

What do you think is the average educational level in the United States? The ninth grade, that is the first year of high school.

The situation is tragic. Public-school teachers are leaving the teaching profession in droves. The average teacher salary in 1941 was $1,470. The average salary for lawyers in independent practice for the same year was $4,794. Birthrate statistics, the highest on record in our history, indicate that the public-school teacher now and in the next 20 years is more important to the preservation and dissemination of our democratic ideals than ever before in our history.

SOME ANSWERS TO THE PROBLEM

What can we do about this situation? I trust that some of you who have left teaching will return to the profession. A former high-school teacher sat in my office not long ago and said: "You know, I often get homesick for the classroom, but I am making several hundred dollars a year more working for the Government than I can teaching school." Exactly so. And there are thousands in the same category.

How can you produce character unless you do it with people early in their lives? You are a churchman. When did you get the roots of your character? Did your mother bring you up to do as you pleased until you were 25 and then tell you to decide for yourself what your character would be? She did not.

Many of you received your early education in one- or two-room schoolhouses, and it was in them that your character was bent in the right direction. Today there are 9,000,000 school children living in the country areas of this land. Their teachers are the poorest paid of all public-school teachers. More than 40,000 of them get less than $600 for their year's work.

The people who played a major part in building character in my life were public-school teachers—Miss Dare in the fourth grade; Miss Baker, the strict disciplinarian, in the sixth grade; and Miss King in the eighth grade—to mention a few of them. Miss King was in her late fifties or early sixties when it was my privilege to sit under her. She had white hair and she was as straight as an arrow. The memory of her is an inspiration to me to this day. The very heart of my boyhood was my public-school experience.

The public-school system and all that it means was part of the religious life of this Nation. We were putting into practice the philosophy of Jesus, which was that in every personality there were tremendous potential possibilities. The only way those potential powers could be awakened and aroused was for the teacher to brood over the pupil and thus bring out the best there was in him. That is true today. This principle lies at the heart of the existence of our democracy.

You say it costs too much to have an adequate public-school system. Bear in mind the fact that we spend five times as much in the segregation and rehabilitation of our criminal group, which is about 2 percent of our population, than we do on public education for our children. As Horace Mann said: "If you do not improve the schools you must enlarge the prisons."

We spent billions for military equipment, training men to fight, and for war. It is not asking too much to ask that the public-school system be adequately and properly financed.

Every well-meaning citizen of this land has a responsibility in this matter. Let us awaken from our long sleep and do something about it. Let us do our utmost to give to posterity the kind of government which we call democracy. Only by everyone having some part in this effort can our labors meet with success.

CONDITIONS IN JAPAN—ARTICLE FROM NEWSWEEK

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in the January 27 issue of Newsweek, which is on the news stands today, there appears a very thought-provoking report by a reporter respecting the general economic situation in Japan in connection with our administration of that government. The article is entitled "Behind the Japanese Purge—American Military Rivalries." I ask that this short news story may be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEHIND THE JAPANESE PURGE—AMERICAN MILITARY RIVALRIES

"All I can do now is make a good black-market connection or join the Communist Party."

That was what a typical Japanese businessman last week told Compton Pakenham, chief of Newsweek's Tokyo bureau. He was bewildered. Some 25,000 to 30,000 of his nation's businessmen, financiers, and industrialists faced removal from their jobs. Furthermore, all their relatives to the third degree were also forbidden to hold such posts, thus making a total of 250,000 victims. In effect, the brains of the entire Japanese economic structure were being removed. The inevitable result—to turn Japanese economic life over to shinyen (new yen) millionaires, black marketeers, and speculators. The extreme left could capitalize on such a situation to the advantage of the ever-watchful Russians, the advocates of severe purges.

The Japanese businessman was bewildered because these things were being done under the orders of the only remaining great capitalist power, the United States. The original purge directive had been issued by General of the Army MacArthur, and was largely used for a political house cleaning. But now the economic application of the purge cuts off the most active, efficient, experienced, cultured, and cosmopolitan section of the nation—the very section that has always been the best disposed toward cooperation with the United States. These classes consider that they helped make the occupation one in which the United States has been able to reduce its occupying forces to a minimum because resistance to them has been practically nil. Now these Japanese are concerned about the growth of a possible underground with Soviet connections.

Many occupation officers on all levels shared the bewilderment of the Japs. Some felt that instead of pressing for an investigation in Germany, Congress should send a committee to Japan to discover why American capitalist principles are being undermined by American occupation authorities.

They felt that such an investigation would help clear General MacArthur of any blame and would repair the damage already inflicted on his dignity in the eyes of the Japanese. Finally, these officers believed that only a congressional investigation could clear up the mystery of American occupation policy.

Insofar as could be ascertained by Newsweek's sources, this was what lay behind the current purge: The original purge order was issued on January 4, 1946, by General MacArthur. Theoretically it was designed to eliminate from Japanese life those who had aided militarism and plans of conquest. On November 21, 1946, and January 4, 1947, MacArthur's original directive was deepened and broadened in the economic field by Japanese ordinances. Because of the structure of Japanese business this worked out as would a similar order in the United States purging all businessmen who contributed to the war effort and members of the National Association of Manufacturers. It was thus nearly all-inclusive, unlike denazification in Germany which has a specifically political basis. It was given to the Japanese Government to implement but its execution was closely supervised by occupation authorities.

A HOUSE DIVIDED

The purge originated in the military government branch of the occupation. This branch has long been involved in a four-cornered fight for authority with the G–2 section of Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby, the economic and scientific section of Maj. Gen. William F. Marquat, and the civilian information and education section under Lt. Col. Donald R. Nugent. The relations between these four sections of military government have progressively degenerated as their aims and methods diverged.

Both Willoughby and Marquat are professional soldiers accustomed to operating through channels. They therefore make their recommendations through a chief of staff, who is primarily interested in the occupation force rather than Japanese internal affairs. Their opinions were thus often shelved. This has been particularly irking to G–2, which observers account the most efficient and effective of any of the occupation sections in the art of dealing firmly with the Japanese.

On the other hand, the chief of the military government section, Brig. Gen. Courtney Whitney, went straight to MacArthur with his ideas. Thus in the occupation a curious feature of prewar Jap Government was revived: The man with direct access to the throne had the best chance of gaining his objectives. Whitney also had the advantage of coming from Manila, a city with which MacArthur has long been associated. There Whitney was a lawyer, a skilled county-courthouse type of orator with the ability to turn dramatics off and on. He is a red-faced man of about 5 feet 6, inclined to be portly and short-tempered.

One odd development: Even though Whitney's MG fathered the purge, some MG officers are already claiming that it had to be undertaken because of direct orders from the 11-nation Far Eastern Commission sitting in Washington, where the Russians put something over. This alibi was not borne out in Washington, where neither the FEC nor the War Department even possesses up-to-date information on the purge—although the State Department knows of the extent of recent developments.

THE BEATEN WONDER

Such is the background of the purge. The mystery remains as to why an American military government fell into this confusion of motives and actions. One possible reason was cabled by Pakenham: "Military government officers arrived expecting to run Japan and were disappointed at finding the Japanese Government functioning, although guided by MG. The MG contains many theoretical experts in limited phases, but otherwise they are immature, untrained for local conditions, blindly unconscious of their tremendous power, and unconcerned over the practical consequences."

It is an open question as to the extent to which General MacArthur is aware of the ideological implications of the actions of his military government. The very aloofness that made him a virtual god to the Japanese and was at least partly responsible for the original success of the occupation has also insulated him from contact with many developments.

There has, however, been no mystery about the results of the purge. One Japanese put it this way: "We know better than any that we have been beaten. We know the United States is entitled to impose any punishment it wants and to force us to make any amends it sets. But we can't understand why, when America could have all Japan working in its own interest, it is now engaged in wrecking the country so as to leave it as an eventual prize to the Russians."

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I suggest that in connection with any consideration of this general subject which might be had as a result of the questions raised in the article, consideration also be given to certain things of a disquieting nature which have been reported in connection with our administration of and our activities in Korea.

Hershey, Director of the Selective Service System, at a dinner given by the National Jewish Welfare Boards in New York City on January 9, 1947, which appear in the Appendix.]

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 20) appointing a Special Committee To Study the Problems of American Small Business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to state the parliamentary situation. The Senate is proceeding today under a unanimous-consent agreement. At the hour of 2 o'clock the time will be equally divided between the proponents and the opponents of the pending resolution, under the control of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] on one side and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] on the other.

The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to Senate Resolution 20, as printed and on the desk.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the question is on the adoption of the two amendments which I have proposed to Senate Resolution 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the Senator from Nebraska may wish to ask unanimous consent that the two amendments be considered together.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two amendments may be considered together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the two amendments which I have offered to Senate Resolution 20 are as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the words "Eightieth Congress", insert "for a period of 240 days after the date this resolution is agreed to."

On page 2, line 19, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "as of January 31, 1947: Provided, That the authority of such special committee to hold hearings and conduct investigations shall terminate on the date this resolution is agreed to."

By unanimous consent just granted the two amendments are to be considered together as one.

The mechanical result of the amendments is to change the termination date of the committee, and limit its life to 8 months. If the resolution, as proposed to be amended, is adopted, the committee's activities will terminate on approximately the 1st day of next October. In other words, the Special Committee To Study the Problems of American Small Business would operate during the time Congress is in session, and if it should happen to continue to be in session into the month of August, which is likely to happen, then the committee would have approximately 30 days in which to publish its report, clean up its work, and terminate its existence by the 1st day of October of this year. I want the Members of the Senate to understand that I am sincere in offering the amendments to the resolution. When the time for termination of the committee arrives, as provided by the amendments, if in the opinion of the Senate there then is no further need for the special committee, it will be perfectly agreeable to me that it terminate its work, with the hope that the standing committees will by that time be fully organized so they can take jurisdiction not only of matters dealing with finance, not only with transportation rates and other transportation matters, not only with questions of monopoly and centralization of business, but that all standing committees will be so organized that the small businessmen of the country will have some place to go, where they can present their problems and have their difficulties ironed out.

Mr. President, if there are any questions to be asked concerning the amendments, I should be glad to answer them now. The amendments are merely mechanical in their nature. As I stated, the purpose of the amendments is simply to provide that the special committee shall function from this time until the present session of Congress ends, and when that time comes it will be perfectly agreeable to me to have a standing committee of the Senate take over the work of the special committee, if the standing committees are then sufficiently organized, and to have the special committee dealing with matters affecting small business then terminated.

Mr. President, the second amendment simply gives the present committee the opportunity to file such reports as it may have which have not been filed, and to pay off its personnel. They are entitled to their wages until the 31st of January, under a resolution adopted by the previous Congress which continued the committee until that date. The old committee should be given an opportunity to clear off its desk so that the new committee will not have to take over any unfinished business. I think it is only proper mechanically that the old committee should wind up its own affairs, pay its own bills, and publish its own reports, and that the new committee should not be responsible for any of the bills of the old committee, or for any reports which are not filed, or for any unfinished business. That is simply a mechanical amendment, such as is usually made in the case of a committee when it is terminated and another committee is created.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Can the Senator tell us why he asks for the creation of a new committee, instead of extending the old committee?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to do so. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana that I tried in every way I could think of simply to extend the old committee.

At this point in the RECORD I should like to have printed as part of my remarks the original resolution creating the committee back in 1940.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows.

Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable, and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, during the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report the educational material and data on such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I asked to have the original resolution printed at this point in the RECORD in order to show that the language of Senate Resolution 20, which proposes to create a new committee, is identical with the language of the original resolution, with one exception. Senate Resolution 20 provides for the appointment of a committee of 12. The membership of the old committee consisted of 12—7 Democrats and 5 Republicans. If the old committee were to be continued, there would be no way to bring about the proper numerical representation on the majority side. The present membership consists of six Democrats—former Senator Mead not now being a member of the Senate—and five Republicans. Senate Resolution 20 provides that the President pro tempore shall appoint a new committee of 12, so that the representation may be 7 on the majority side and 5 on the minority side.

Mr. ELLENDER. Why could not that be done by a simple continuing resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. It could not be done by a simple continuing resolution because that would call upon the President pro tempore to take 2 members from the Democratic side and replace them by 2 Members from the Republican side. I feel that that is a matter for the majority to consider. The majority should submit the names of Members, as is done in connection with all other committees.

A simple continuing resolution, such as the Senator suggests, would place the President pro tempore in an embarrassing situation. In my judgment, this is the only proper way to do it. I consulted several lawyers, and also the Legislative Counsel, and was informed that this way the only proper way to accomplish the purposes for which I submitted the resolution. I trust that that explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. President, at this point in the RECORD I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks the colloquy engaged in on June 6, 1946, between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the distinguished former Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette. This colloquy is found on pages 6394 and 6395 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the colloquy was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question with reference to section 126 of the bill which reads:

"No bill or resolution, and no amendment to any bill or resolution, to establish or to continue a special or select committee, including a joint committee, shall be received or considered in either the Senate or the House of Representatives."

My first question to the Senator is this: If that were the present law, would it have been impossible for the Senate to have set up, for example, a special committee to deal with the subject of atomic energy?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; except as the Senate has suspended the rules for that purpose. While the Senator was at lunch today at the White House, I discussed this matter with other persons. It does not, of course, affect any joint committees which may now be in existence, such as, for example, the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. It would not affect the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. However, if we were confronted today with this rule, and the subject of atomic energy suddenly loomed on the horizon, and it was felt to be necessary to create a select or a special committee of either the Senate or of the other House, or a joint committee of both Houses to consider that highly important subject, it would be necessary for the Senate and the House, if the committee were to be a joint committee, to suspend their rules or, if the committee were to be a special committee of either House, it would be necessary for the House concerned to suspend its rules.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, the purpose of section 126 is to frown, so far as it can upon that method of approach to legislation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The committee came to the conclusion that if we could reorganize the committees, and staff them adequately, it would be in the interest of orderly and efficient legislative procedure to have the standing committees or subcommittees thereof conduct studies and investigations, because, after all, if legislation is to flow from these activities, normally the select or joint committees do not have legislative power, and it is often necessary for the standing committee to thresh over much of the straw and the wheat that has been threshed over by a special or select joint committee, as the case may be.

However, I express it as my opinion, for whatever it may be worth, that at any time when a matter of great consequence, such as atomic energy was when it first became a subject for consideration, and still is, for that matter, I have no doubt that the Senate and the House would suspend the rules to meet a situation of that kind.

The reason why we have drawn this tight ban is that we know full well, from long experience, that unless there is a ban, to obviate which very extraordinary action such as suspending the rules is required, we will not check the tendency to appoint select committees of both the House and the Senate, and joint select committees, of which we now have a considerable number in both Houses, and I anticipate that as time goes on, unless the action here proposed is taken, they will multiply in geometric progression.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can understand the purpose the Senator and his committee had in mind. Among other purposes, I assume, it is in line with the purpose to limit and concentrate the service which individual Senators themselves give to the problems assigned to their responsibility. On the other hand, I think this is one of the few places in the bill where I am not sure I agree with the philosophy of my able friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Assuming that there eventually will be some kind of reorganization of the House committees, or even if there is not, the bill does encourage joint action by the committees of opposite number in the two Houses.

The Senator has put his finger on one aspect of the situation, and I tried to mention the other. If he will look at the committee assignments of Senators in the directory, he will find that a great many Senators are now serving on select and special committees and joint committees. Our effort in this bill is to reduce the committee burden of Senators, so far as the multiplicity of committees is concerned, to the point where they will have sufficient time to discharge their full responsibilities to the committees upon which they serve.

I hope the Senator will give further consideration to the statement which I have made, which may not be a complete answer from his standpoint, but I think if a subject of vital importance comes up, and it is obvious that a special committee should be created, there will not be undue difficulty in having the rules of either House suspended for that purpose. But I fear that if we did not have this ban we might conceivably reorganize and reduce the Senate committees, and find our whole purpose and object defeated by a rash of select and special committees in the future, which would put us right back where we started.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator give me the citation in the bill where joint hearings are encouraged?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Section 122 provides:

"The standing committees of the two Houses are authorized to hold joint hearings with respect to the subject matter within their respective jurisdictions."

Mr. VANDENBERG. I had not seen section 122. That goes a long way toward answering the thought I had in mind, for it seemed to me that in attempting to streamline the efficiency of congressional action there were many points at which the only possible practical approach was through an elimination of needless duplication between the House and Senate of activities in respect to legislation.

I particularly had in mind the precise point which is covered by section 122. So that my distinguished friend disarms me substantially by his reference to that section. However, I would not want section 126 to be read as meaning that we do not recognize that there may be extraordinary situations, of which the best illustration at the moment is the control of atomic energy, which are better served by special and select committees, and perhaps by joint committees.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to point out this particular passage in the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, when he stated, in reply to the former Senator from Wisconsin.

On the other hand, this is one of the few places in the bill—

The Senator from Michigan was speaking of section 126—

where I am not sure I agree with the philosophy of my able friend from Wisconsin.

The colloquy continues to the next page. These are the words of the then Senator from Wisconsin in reply to that observation:

I hope the Senator will give further consideration to the statement which I have made, which may not be a complete answer from his standpoint, but I think if a subject of vital importance comes up when it is obvious that a special committee should be created, there will not be undue difficulty in having the rules of either the House or the Senate suspended for that purpose.

I point out once more to Members of the Senate that those were the words of the then Senator from Wisconsin, who drafted the bill and sponsored it on the floor of the Senate. He was speaking in reply to the query of the Senator from Michigan, who inquired of the Senator from Wisconsin whether it was his intention, in view of the elimination of section 126 prohibiting special committees, that such committees should ever be created. The Senator from Wisconsin stated that they should be created whenever a majority of the Senate felt that it was important that they be created. I think it is important to have that colloquy in the RECORD at this point. We now have a precedent, inasmuch as the Senate has adopted the resolution continuing the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. I claim that that precedent is supported by the spirit of the interpretation given by former Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the colloquy engaged in on January 20 of this year between the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] and the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. This colloquy is found on page 455 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the colloquy was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The able Senator from Illinois referred to my record on the Reorganization Act with great kindness and hopefulness. He indicated, however, that, on the basis of the record, unless I declined to approve an extension of this special committee, I would not be in harmony with my original position.

I know the Senator would not wish to do the record any injustice, and, therefore, with his permission, I should like to call his attention to the remainder of my colloquy with the able former Senator from Wisconsin, on the prior page of the RECORD from which he read.

Mr. LUCAS. What page is that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Page 6394 of the RECORD for June 6, 1946. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that after I had interrogated the Senator from Wisconsin about my belief that there were sometimes situations which could better be served by special or select committees than by regular committees, and he had made his reply substantially conceding that such a situation could arise, I said—and I read from the RECORD:

"I think this is one of the few places in the bill where I am not sure I agree with the philosophy of my able friend from Wisconsin."

Then I call the able Senator's attention to the additional statement in the following colloquy, when I again said:

"However, I would not want section 126"—

The section proscribing special committees—

"I would not want section 126 to be read as meaning that we do not recognize that there may be extraordinary situations, of which the best illustration at the moment is the control of atomic energy, which are better served by special and select committees, and perhaps by joint committees."

To which the able Senator from Wisconsin, the author of the bill, replied:

"I grant that point, and have conceded it in the brief time we have been able to devote to the consideration of the bill today."

I am not entering this controversy on the pending resolution. I am merely indicating to my able friend from Illinois that I think a fair interpretation of the RECORD will show that my position with respect to special committees, as indicated in the debate from which the Senator quoted, is that if there is a situation which in my judgment recommends a special committee as the more useful approach to a successful conclusion, it is my interpretation, and was at the time, that I would be free so to vote; and I think the Senator from Wisconsin concurred that I would enjoy that freedom.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I invite special attention to the answer which the Senator from Michigan made to the Senator from Illinois relative to whether or not we have authority to create special committees. The distinguished Senator from Michigan called the attention of the distinguished Senator from Illinois to the words of Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, stating that if and when the Senate felt it to be sufficiently important it could by a majority vote, create a special committee for any purpose which the Senate might desire.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Nebraska brought my name into the discussion by referring to the colloquy with the able Senator from Michigan. The Senator from Michigan took the very definite position in the colloquy he had with the Senator from Illinois that when he felt that a subject matter was of extraordinary importance—I believe he referred to the Atomic Energy Committee by way of example—he would feel justified in supporting a proposal to create a special committee to investigate such a subject. I think he used the word extraordinary. Certainly the Senator from Nebraska will not contend that the continuation of the Small Business Committee comes within the category to which the Senator from Michigan referred the other day. If he does so contend, then Senators on the other side of the aisle must support a request of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] for a special petroleum committee. They must support the request of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] for a special wool committee. They must support requests for practically every other special committee. In my judgment the Small Business Committee is not as important from the standpoint of national defense and from the standpoint of national economy as is the Special Petroleum Committee, which, from those standpoints, is really worth while.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that the speech made by the distinguished Senator from Illionis be printed at the end of my remarks, because I am trying to make a record that will be of interest to other Senators. If the Senator from Illinois would like to engage me in a colloquy at the end of this speech, I will be glad to answer any interpretation that he might place on the remarks of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Mr. LUCAS. I object to that, because I want my remarks to appear in this part of the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield further.

Mr. WHERRY. I would like to say, in answer to the observation just made by the Senator from Illinois, that he has a perfect right to interpret what was said by the Senator from Michigan in any way he wishes; but I submit, upon the RECORD—and I am only speaking on the RECORD with reference to what the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette, pointed out in no uncertain terms: That if the membership of the Senate felt that a subject matter was sufficiently important to be submitted to a special committee, such a special committee might be created. I am simply following the RECORD.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I decline to yield at this point.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I decline to yield at this time. I shall be glad to answer any questions when I have concluded. I never refuse to yield to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

We are going to hear our friends across the aisle say "This is not important." I wish the RECORD to show that Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, who sponsored the reorganization bill, stated that under the provisions of section 126 if, in the opinion of the Senate, subject matter was of sufficient importance to call for such action, that the Senate could suspend the rules without violating the provisions of the La Follette-Monroney Act. The Senator from Illinois has a perfect right to interpret the act in any way he sees fit; I am not questioning that; but, as I read the remarks of Senator La Follette, that is exactly what he said.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], in the colloquy last Wednesday with the distinguished Senator from Illinois, again stated his position in the matter, and I propose to quote his words:

I am not entering this controversy on the pending resolution. I am merely indicating to my able friend from Illinois that I think a fair interpretation of the RECORD will show that my position with respect to special committees, as indicated in the debate from which the Senator quoted, is that if there is a situation which in my judgment recommends a special committee as the more useful approach to a successful conclusion, it is my interpretation, and as at the time, that I would be free so to vote; and I think the Senator from Wisconsin concurred that I would enjoy that freedom.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I will yield in a moment.

That was the answer of the Senator from Michigan; and certainly he has the right to interpret his own viewpoint with regard to the La Follette-Monroney Act. It is written in the RECORD. It is my interpretation, as I stated when the resolution was submitted, that it resolves itself down to this simple equation, that the resolution which is before the Senate, creating or continuing the special committee, involves a matter of sufficient importance as to justify the Senate in continuing the Small Business Committee for a period of 8 months. That is the only question before the Senate.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is no doubt in the world, I think, that the Senate can create a special committee if it cares to do so. It took such action on Wednesday last. But I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he does not feel that it is a reflection on the able, competent, and outstanding Committee on Banking and Currency to take away from that committee a function which is specifically set out in the Reorganization Act as being a part of the work of that committee, namely, the problem of small businessmen. That is set forth in the act as one of the specific functions of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask the able Senator from Nebraska, is it not a reflection upon the mentality, the competence, and the standing of this committee, so recently created and given this particular work, to say, "No; it cannot do this work. Another committee can do it better, and therefore we are going to ignore the specific language of the Reorganization Act."

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to answer the question. It is a perfectly fair question and it is asked in good faith, and I shall answer it in that way.

We are not reflecting, in this resolution, upon the mentality or the ability of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, or of any member of that committee to which any problem of small business might be submitted. I point out to the distinguished Senator from Maryland the fact that when the resolution creating or extending the Small Business Committee was brought before the Senate there was some discussion about it. Does the Senator recall that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] asked a parliamentary question? He said, "I believe that this resolution extending the Small Business Committee should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce." Does the Senator remember that? He then took his seat, and the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] arose and said that he had a parliamentary inquiry. The occupant of the chair said, "The Senator will state it." The Senator from Georgia said, "If the present occupant of the chair were now to rule as to the committee to which this resolution should be referred, to what committee would it be referred?" Does the Senator recall what he said?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not.

Mr. WHERRY. I will tell the Senator. He was present that afternoon. The Chair stated that if it were left to him and he were to refer the resolution, he would refer it to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Does the Senator remember that colloquy, now that I have called it to his attention?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. WHERRY. It is in the RECORD. The Senator can read it.

Another thing happened. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has been here longer than most of us have and knows more about the rules than does the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Maryland together. He rose to his feet and said he objected to the opinion of the Parliamentarian, and that the resolution should go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. I suggested that the Committee on the Judiciary might have an interest in the subject matter, inasmuch as I understood that the purpose of the Small Business Committee was to prevent monopolies, and that that was a matter under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary. I did not express the opinion exactly as attributed to me, because, obviously, there are many phases of the question. That was one phase of it.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the statement of the distinguished Senator from Arizona be placed in full in the RECORD at this point, because his remarks are self-explanatory and will answer the question.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, on Wednesday, on behalf of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and myself, I submitted a resolution, Senate Resolution 40, providing for the extension of the Special Committee To Investigate Petroleum Resources. It had been my expectation that that resolution would be referred, as these other two resolutions were referred, to the Committee on Rules and Administration; but I notice that it has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which I believe to be an erroneous reference. I should like to have unanimous consent, since there has been no action on the resolution, that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAYDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to point out that the rule of the Senate up to this time has been that no special investigating committee could be created unless a resolution had been reported by the appropriate standing committee of the Senate and then referred to the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The functions of the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have been absorbed by the Committee on Rules and Administration. When the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] introduced his resolution on Wednesday he asked unanimous consent to have it referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that is how that committee got it. In suggesting references, normally the Parliamentarian is perfectly right.

The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska reads as follows:

"Resolved, That paragraph (o) (1) (A) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That any resolution proposing to establish or to continue a special or select committee, including a special or select joint committee, shall not be referred to any other standing committee of the Senate but shall be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration for consideration of all phases thereof, including the substantive matter.' "

Until the Senate adopts such a rule, under the rule of the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. That is where it belongs. I object to its reference to the Committee on Rules and Administration until the Committee on Public Lands has considered it.

* * * * *

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Chair to paragraph 7, on page 7, of the Reorganization Act, under the heading "Committee on the Judiciary." It provides that that committee shall have jurisdiction of the "protection of trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

I understand that the real purpose of the Small Business Committee is to assure protection of small business against restraints and monopolies. So I think that the question hinges upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has asked me a question and I am trying to answer it. The Senator has said that the action referred to was a reflection, and I say it is not a reflection. Under the La Follette-Monroney Act the Committee on Banking and Currency would take jurisdiction of matters affecting small business only when a financial question was involved. The Committee on the Judiciary would take jurisdiction of monopoly and centralization questions. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would take jurisdiction of freight rates and transportation matters. So the answer is that when a special committee cuts across the lines of the Committee on Banking and Currency it is no reflection upon that committee because that committee, if it stays within the jurisdiction which the act assigns to it, does not have jurisdiction of two-thirds of the matters that come before other standing committees of the Senate which would have to handle those problems.

So if the work were centralized in one special committee, such committee would simply do the work of the full committees which have been mentioned as having some interest in that field. On the committee, probably, there would be not only some of the members of the Banking and Currency Committee's subcommittees which deal with the problems confronting small business but also some of the members of the Judiciary Committee and some of the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Such a membership would enable the special committee to function all the way along the line.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am not through yet. The Senator from Maryland asked me a question, and I wish to answer it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I thought the Senator from Nebraska had answered my question.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I also wish to say that I am not asking that the special committee be made a permanent special committee. I see no reason why, in the future, the Senate cannot use for such purposes the Banking and Currency Committee and the other committees which otherwise would handle such problems. For instance, I refer to the Judiciary Committee and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee as well. When those committees are properly organized they can take care of the subject matter, and then the Senate can terminate the work of the special committee which is proposed by Senate Resolution 20. Because of that fact I have amended the resolution so as to provide for the continuation of the special committee for only 240 days.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his answer; but let me state that questions as to where a bill is to go or is not to go, or what was said, or what was not said, are irrelevant to this debate, because, I point out to the Senator from Nebraska, that the argument adverted to took place on the floor of the Senate before the Reorganization Act went into effect. Today we have the Reorganization Act, under which 15 committees have been set up.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the colloquy I have mentioned occurred last Monday on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to finish?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am speaking of the creation of the original Special Committee on Small Business, at which time the Reorganization Act had not gone into effect.

Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the very argument he now makes for the Special Committee on Small Business could not likewise be made for the continuation of the Special Committee on Wool, which has to do with freight rates and with Government finance, direct or indirect, and with small business dealing with all the things the Senator has mentioned. Could not the same arguments be made for the continuation of the Special Committee on Silver, because related to silver are questions regarding the private manufacture or use of silver, in connection with the making of silverware, as well as a variety of other things, such as the medical and scientific uses of silver?

So, Mr. President, every argument which is being made for the Special Committee on Small Business could be made equally well with respect to the need for the continuation of every other special committee which is or will be sought to be established despite the existence of the Reorganization Act.

Therefore, if we set up a special committee for small business, we would be committed to set up other special committees for all the other special subjects which have been mentioned; and the result would be the destruction of the machinery of the Reorganization Act, which was so widely heralded by the Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Maryland whether what he has just stated is a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a question. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether it is true that the same argument which he is making for the continuation of the Special Committee on Small Business could be made with equal force in favor of the continuation or creation of the Special Committee on Wool or a special committee on gold, or a special committee on petroleum, or a special committee to deal with any other subject with which a special committee might concern itself?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in answer to that question, I wish to state in all sincerity that I believe that the Special Committee on Small Business is the most important special committee which could be organized by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall answer the Senator's question now. I have the floor.

Let me say that I have been on the Special Committee on Small Business for a number of years.

Mr. TYDINGS. I simply wished to point out to the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not yield at this point. I am going to answer the question the Senator from Maryland has asked me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I was about to say, I have been a member of the Committee on Small Business for 4 years. I have handled complaint after complaint, some of them coming right from the State of the Senator from Maryland. I have handled many complaints arising because of priorities and because of control regulations. At this time the special committee has 20 applications for investigations. One of them is for an investigation into the newsprint situation. We have already set that matter for a hearing. It involves every small newspaper in the State of Maryland, as well as every other small newspaper in the United States of America.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not choose to yield at this point. I am answering the question which has been asked me by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. President, in the past 4 years there have come before the Senate's Special Committee on Small Business more than 200,000 letters, more than 200,000 messages from small business throughout the United States, asking for aid. In the consideration of those requests, the Special Committee on Small Business during the last 4 years has conducted 3,000 open hearings, at which people from all the States of the Union have appeared. Representatives of tire manufacturers, of furniture makers and dealers, of bakers, and of various other industries, of almost every industry in the United States, have appeared at those hearings. Representatives of practically all industries have come to the Special Committee on Small Business requesting relief and seeking the removal from their backs of Government controls.

I remember very well the hearings on the meat situation. Does not the Senator from Maryland also remember them? They were held in the days when the Senate was deciding whether the Government should continue the controls on meat. I wish to state that 90 percent of the evidence which was used on the floor of the Senate in the debate on the question of continuing or removing the controls from meat was obtained directly from the Special Committee on Small Business of the Senate. Let us not forget that. At that time we were convinced from the reports which we received from small businessmen, such as the butchers, the meat packers, and practically all the other businessmen concerned, that the controls on meat should be removed and must be removed; and when the question of the removal of the controls from meat was being discussed on the floor of the Senate for 31 days, I said that if the Congress removed those controls, it would be possible for the people to purchase meat. But the Senator from Maryland and many of his associates on the other side of the aisle said, "Oh, no. Leave the ceilings on. If they are removed prices will skyrocket, and people will not be able to buy meat." But, Mr. President, the ceilings were removed; and today our people can buy meat at prices comparable to those of June 1946. Today the question is whether the price of meat will have to be maintained rather than reduced.

So, Mr. President, if I am asked whether the Special Committee on Small Business is important, I say it is one of the most important committees in the Senate of the United States. It is all very well for the Government to prosecute the men who recently have been charged with improperly obtaining $400,000,000; but I say to you, Mr. President, that the ones who need special help during this postwar period are the small businessmen—the small grocers, the small druggists, and other small businessmen of their type.

So I shall refuse to permit myself to be talked down or to consent to a cessation of this activity for the next 8 months, merely because someone says it is in violation of the La Follette-Monroney Act. I was one of the Senators who voted for the passage of that act; and when I did so it was with the full knowledge that I could vote for the continuation of the Special Committee on Small Business, if I so desired. When I vote for the continuation of that special committee it certainly is not a breach of faith on my part. The continuation of the Small Business Committee certainly cannot be construed to be a precedent, and certainly it is not a step counter to the interpretation made by Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, or counter to the remarks and interpretation made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. The Special Committee on Small Business is important, and it should be continued for 8 months, for it is the only committee that will give the small businessmen of America the relief they need now, until the regular committees take over the work.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this time?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have listened to the Senator's remarks with great interest, but let me call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Maryland who now is speaking was absent on a mission, in accordance with a law passed by Congress, for a great deal of the time at the end of the last session of Congress, so probably the Senator from Nebraska is a little too inclusive in his statement of facts when he incorporates the Senator from Maryland in his assertions.

However, I have listened to the Senator from Nebraska with interest. He has not yet answered my point, which is that I am not able to understand why all the purposes he has mentioned could not be as well accomplished by the Committee on Banking and Currency as by the special committee which is proposed to be set up. Every argument he has made would apply with equal force to the efficiency of the Banking and Currency Committee under the able chairmanship of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], whose particular duty it is to handle that character of work. I do not deny that during the war the Special Committee on Small Business, on which the Senator from Nebraska served, has done everything it possibly could do to aid small business. But at present, the fact is that we have before the Senate the question whether the standing committee concerned can do the job or whether it cannot; and by inference the Senator from Nebraska has been arguing that the standing committee cannot do the job. Certainly there is no other reason for the continuation or creation of the special committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the colloquy and the observations, because, as he knows, I have great admiration for the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The feeling is mutual.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, let me say that continual reference by way of argument to special committees on this, that, or the other subject is beside the point. The only question now before the Senate is whether Senators in their judgment believe that the Special Committe on Small Business is of such importance that it should be continued for 8 months. That is the only issue before the Senate. If Senators do not wish to give small businessmen the protection they need, if Senators wish to cause chaos for the next 8 months, if Senators wish to drive the small businessmen here and there, and make it impossible for them to know where to go, Senators have a perfect right to do so. All Members of the Senate have a perfect right to do whatever they wish to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I desire to answer the Senator's other question. We hear the same old contentions urged as to this committee and that committee. I do not know about the special wool committee. I do not know what we will do about other special committees. The only question now before the Senate is whether the Small Business Committee is to be continued for 8 months.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. Not now. I shall yield when I conclude my answer to the Senator's question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the only question is as to the continuance of the Small Business Committee for 8 months, and in his "needling," if it may be called such, the Senator from Maryland is attempting to distract from what I am attempting to say, and he is not going to have very much luck, because the question to be decided is simply this, Is there a desire to continue the Small Business Committee? I say it is the most important committee in the United States Senate. I have a right to my interpretation, and the distinguished Senator has a right to his.

There is no reflection at all upon the standing committee, because if the Senator will take the Reorganization Act itself and turn to page 5, subparagraph (d), he will find the only jurisdiction the Committee on Banking and Currency has over small business; and that pertains merely to loans. Unfortunately, today, with the blanket termination policy announced by the RFC, there is not a place in the world for the small businessman to go to get a loan except to his banker.

Mr. TOBEY. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield, let me say that he is wrong in that respect.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not yield. I am answering a question.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not yield. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois after I finish the answer. There is no one to whom I would rather yield than the Senator from Illinois. If there is any provision for a loan, it is so difficult to get it that a small businessman cannot even start to get it. Under the Reorganization Act that is the only subject matter of which the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction. It does not, as the distinguished Senator knows, have jurisdiction of questions relating to the monopoly control of newspapers. Such matters go to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on Banking and Currency has no jurisdiction over rates, transportation, or 101 other things which come within the province of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I am merely saying, Mr. President, that today the only way problems of small business can be handled in a coordinated way, after 6 years in which the small businessmen have been taught to come to the Senate's Small Business Committee and the House Committee on Small Business, is by seeking that avenue of relief. They have been taught to come here, and the only thing I am asking is that we continue that relief and continue that avenue for 8 months, until in the meantime the standing committees can be organized.

If the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency desires to appoint a subcommittee to study these problems, he is entitled to do that, but certainly the distinguished Senator from Maryland will not contradict the statement that that committee, in the absence of broad authority conferred upon it, has no authority to take up matters relating to monopoly control, and centralization in interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator is making out a spendid case——

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. TYDINGS. For action by this body in the field of small business, but he is not making out a case showing why the standing committees which ought to have, and do have, jurisdiction over this subject matter should not do the job. It is to that point that I should like to have him address himself.

Mr. WHERRY. I have certainly gone over that point time and time again, and I do not want to take further time of the Senate to elucidate it. If the Senator from Maryland is not convinced, and will telephone me in my office, I will nave a private interview with him, and try to tell him what I have been attempting to tell the Senate for some time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I have here——

Mr. WHERRY. Is the Senator from Illinois going to talk about the Budget?

Mr. LUCAS. No; I am going to talk about small business.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator has the blue-bound volume before him.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Nebraska made a statement about the continuance of the Small Business Committee. I wish to call his attention to some remarks he made before the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate when there came up before that committee the question of the continuance——

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator is not asking me a question. I yielded only for a question. I shall be glad to take that up at the termination of my remarks. I shall not yield for any other purpose than for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. I am surprised that the Senator declines to yield.

REASONS WHY THE SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE SHOULD CONTINUE ITS WORK

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the prime reason for the continuance of the Senate Small Business Committee is to have a committee to which the small businessmen of the country can turn during this transition period. It is essential pending the time when the standing committees are organized and able to take over the work that has been done by the Small Business Committee.

It should continue to fill this gap, as I have stated many times, because the small businessmen of the country for 6 years have come to the Small Business Committee with their problems. So long as we have regulations and priorities to the extent that we have them now, there is a dire need for a committee to handle these problems until the standing committees are acquainted with them and can set up subcommittees to assume this burdensome work.

Even though the standing committees of the Senate made every effort to assume the problems of small business as a subcommittee function, the proof that delay would occur is found in the fact that small business had no special place in the regular committee system prior to 1940.

When the Senate created the Special Small Business Committee in 1940, it was the first official recognition of any agency of Government that the problems of small business must be dealt with separately and distinct from the general problems of national economic concern and business generally.

Today it is neither accurate nor wise to assume that the small businessmen no longer confront the problems growing out of Government control and unequal competition with big business. Certainly that cannot be assumed, because there is an acute situation today. Even with the release of controls, it is very difficult for small businessmen to get the commodities, the merchandise, and the building materials they desire.

No one will deny that small enterprises must be preserved as a basic part of our economic fabric. The United States is founded on freedom of enterprise and free competitive activity. We cannot maintain these without a healthy, militant, and dynamic small-business community.

True, some of the hazards and obstructions confronting small business during the wartime period have been removed and others are in the process of liquidation. But the small businessman is not yet out of the woods. He still is beset with artificial shortages, governmental red tape and regulation, and the very serious situation of a big-business system grown even bigger under the stimulus of wartime conditions.

I think it was the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] who, in a speech on the Senate floor, gave some figures relating to the part played by corporations in wartime activities. While I shall not attempt to quote the statistics accurately, if I recall correctly he made the statement that in the United States nearly 75 percent of the wartime tasks were performed by less than 100 corporations which were paid billions upon billions of dollars. That is the extent to which centralization developed under wartime controls.

As wartime controls are unwound, the need for a small business committee will become more and more apparent. Because of this, the Congress owes the small businessman the continued service of a special committee which is familiar with his problems and sympathetic with his objectives. I cannot see how that can be denied. I cannot see how a Senator on either side of the aisle can vote against the continuance, for 8 months, of the Small Business Committee. Of all the committees of the United States Senate, I think it is the one committee most needed. In my opinion we should have a standing committee that would do this work.

The importance of small business can be illustrated briefly in the field of manufacturing alone.

Prior to the war, small manufacturers operated 190,000 plants, employing 9,000,000 workers. Big industry, employing 500 or more workers, functioned through only 3,000 concerns, employing 6,000,000 workers. Need we have any other proof that so-called small business is a backbone of American life?

Small business does not need, nor am I here advocating, any form of paternalistic government protection. It only needs a fair chance to compete, to survive, and to prosper. The very life of small American communities depends on the small businessman—the independent merchant, and the man who publishes a weekly newspaper. It is from the weekly newspapers that we get the opinions of the people of the country; and we need to preserve the small newspapers throughout the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHERRY. For a question?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield gladly.

Mr. TAYLOR. A moment ago I understood the Senator to say he thought the committee should be made a standing committee. May I ask why he does not incorporate that principle in his resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that would be a complete violation of the La Follette-Monroney Act. The Senator from Idaho would not wish to have me do that; he is for the Monroney Act.

Mr. TAYLOR. If we are going to violate it, why not violate it completely?

Mr. WHERRY. Would the Senator vote for such a proposal?

Mr. TAYLOR. For a standing small-business committee?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. Would the Senator vote for it?

Mr. TAYLOR. I should be more inclined to vote for it than for this temporary extension. I might vote for a standing committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, the Senator from Idaho would not vote for that, and he is not going to vote for the pending proposal. We all understand that; and he has a perfect right not to do it. The Senator from Idaho may do as he pleases about it, but he has been on the Small Business Committee, and he knows as well as I do that the 3,000 problems we have handled cut across all standing committee lines. The Senator from Idaho, who sat in the hearings, over some of which he presided as chairman, will not controvert that statement. I think we all understand that the problems covered by the hearing related not only to banking and financial matters but to allocations, priorities, freight rates, and many other matters.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would not that be true of any committee that might be created?

Mr. WHERRY. I think not. I think there can be no doubt that the standing committees are given clearly outlined jurisdiction.

I admit that if this special committee is set up the Senate will be giving it authority, as has been done in the past, and I think properly so, to consider problems which, under the Monroney Act, come under the jurisdiction of various standing committees. But, in my opinion—and I think the Senator from Idaho should agree with me, because he is interested in small business——

Mr. TAYLOR. I am.

Mr. WHERRY. The continuation of the Small Business Committee for 8 months, until such time as its activities can be taken over by the standing committees where they belong, will serve to help those committees. It will assist them in getting started, and help in the determination of policy and jurisdiction, and thus enable businessmen to know what committees to consult in order to obtain needed relief. I cannot see how else it can be done.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot see the objective of extending temporarily the special committee, because sometime, and it might as well be now, its work will be taken over by the standing committees.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has a perfect right to his opinion, but small business needs a fair chance to compete and to survive. The very life of little American communities, as I have said, depends upon small business. It is the necessary complement to a prosperous agriculture.

In my section small communities are necessary and so are the small businessmen. Many persons who live in the country are dependent upon the small towns. Sometimes the nearest one is 25 or 50 miles away, but there they go to do their shopping. We cannot afford to lose these small communities and cannot afford to lose the small businessman. It means the difference between jobs and unemployment for millions of American workers.

Our aim is to keep small business functioning, for the employment problem is involved. Every little business that can be kept operating means that much more employment, that much more production; and that is what we need in this postwar era.

This is no emotional appeal which I am making to the Members of the Senate. It is a statement of cold, hard facts. Today there simply is no agency or department of government which can concern itself adequately with the problems of small business.

With all respect to the work of the Smaller War Plants Corporation in its time and the continuing activities in the Commerce Department in behalf of small business, there remains a real and pressing need for a Senate Special Small Business Committee to act as a guiding hand and a friend at court during the transitional period of the next 8 months.

I quote an expression of the President:

The antitrust laws should be implemented—

That is for the judiciary—and, simultaneously, small business and new enterprise should be encouraged by research and credit programs—

That is a matter for the Committee on Banking and Currency. I may add they should also be encouraged by an adequate study of freight rates and transportation problems, which is a matter for Interstate Commerce—this for the opponents of "bigness."

The President himself is interested in the small businessman, and certainly the President, so far as was in his power, would assist any committee, whether it were a special committee or a standing committee, in its efforts to help the small businessmen to obtain materials and merchandise which they could sell to those who wanted to buy.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I agree with the Senator that small business does need help; that is, their interests must be looked after, for they need protection more than help. But will not the Senator agree that if the Small Business Committee makes investigations to determine what should be done, that their findings will have to be referred to various standing committees, who in turn will have to investigate the matters all over again in order to familiarize themselves with the subject?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho well knows that any proposed legislation which develops as a result of hearings is referred to the standing committees; and properly so. But I submit to the Senator from Idaho that in the 3,000 complaints presented to and heard by the special committee questions of legislation were not primarily involved. There were involved questions of priorities, of controls, and other questions which it would be very difficult to siphon out and assign to any one particular committee. The Senator must know that to be so.

Until the Senate can establish one committee to handle the multitudinous problems of small business and make provision which will enable businessmen to continue at work, it seems to me, if we wish to be fair and honest about it in our own minds and eliminate politics and party-line votes, that every Member of the Senate should be glad to continue the Small Business Committee for 8 months.

In what we are undertaking to do for small business, I shall be the first man in the Senate to cooperate with other committees. I will cooperate with the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who is a very able man and whose ability I would not question. But some of us who have been on the special committee for 4 years, and have studied the problems presented to it, could be, I think, of real service to him in establishing a subcommittee to handle banking and financial matters for small business.

I am not on the Banking and Currency Committee, but I should be glad indeed to help the Senator from New Hampshire along that line.

I will say the same thing with regard to the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It is not my intention at all to continue the special committee 1 day longer than is necessary in order to provide for the period of transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy. I think there is a definite gap at this time, and I believe there is necessity that this resolution be passed so that the work of the committee may be extended for the next 8 months.

Mr. President, in conclusion I should like to place certain communications in the RECORD. I have here, I estimate, nearly 50 or 60 telegrams and letters. During the past 3 weeks since this discussion began businessmen from all over the country, business associations, and groups have come forward and asked that the Small Business Committee be continued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am not proposing to read them all. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have understood that the telegrams and letters to which the Senator refers were solicited by the Small Business Committee.

Mr. WHERRY. By the Small Business Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the Senator how many telegrams were sent and how many telephone calls were made at Government expense by the Small Business Committee, soliciting support throughout the Nation for the continuation of this committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not believe one dime was spent by the Small Business Committee itself. I shall be glad to check with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. No request was ever made by me or my office. What telegrams I have had and the Business Committee has had, I am very well satisfied, have come from businessmen many of whom were personal acquaintances. I shall be glad to ask the Senator from Montana, or the clerk of the committee, if any solicitation was made. As the Senator must know, I do not favor pressure campaigns. If desired, I shall be glad to read every one of these communications.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; I will read them in the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to place them in the RECORD. To the best of my knowledge, I do not believe that the Senate Small Business Committee made solicitations whatsoever. There is one committee of which Dewey Anderson is chairman, but I did not receive a communication from him. I am satisfied that these telegrams reflect honestly the opinions and the desires of the business associations throughout the country, in the interest of small business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Small businessmen in my State say they have been solicited——

Mr. WHERRY. I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. By the Senator——

Mr. WHERRY. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And by representatives of the Senate, and that is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. WHERRY. I believe the Senator will find that if there has been any solicitation it has been by small business associations among themselves, who are interested in having the special committee continue its work. To my knowledge—and I believe I can speak with authority—the Small Business Committee of the Senate itself has not solicited one of these telegrams.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Have any of the employees of the Small Business Committee done any soliciting among the Senators?

Mr. WHERRY. No; I do not believe so. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have been so solicited.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator mean that he has been solicited by an employee of the Small Business Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; by an employee of the Small Business Committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Who is the employee of the Small Business Committee that solicited telegrams from the Senator?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is unnecessary for me to give names. I am telling the Senator that I have been solicited by employees of the Small Business Committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest to the distinguished Senator fron Colorado that someone else, aside from those connected with the committee, who is interested in the continuation of the Small Business Committee, may have done so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Colorado is not mistaken.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not mean to imply, Mr. President, that the Senator was not giving his honest opinion, but to my knowledge there has been no such effort made.

I ask to have the telegrams, to which I have referred, printed in the RECORD for what they are worth. Senators can read them and judge them for themselves. There are probably 33 from a majority of the small-business associations of the country or individuals interested in small business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegrams will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegrams are as follows:

The heated debates and long delay in approving your Senate Resolution 20 by the Senate is causing great concern among small businessmen. Comments being received from different parts of the Nation wanting to know if Members of Congress running for public office meant what they said from the platform last November when they stressed the importance of taking action to protect and promote small business. Last month we sent out 109,000 ballots to Nation-wide membership on issue of continuing Special Small Business Committees in House and Senate. A tabulation of the vote shows 93 percent for, 4 percent against, and 3 percent no vote. We sincerely trust you will convey to every possible Member of Senate that unless all possible action in Congress is taken to promote small business welfare the Eightieth Congress might be the last Congress to vote upon this important American principle. Continued failure to promote small-business security can result in a socialistic government. Best regards and wishes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. A while ago, during the colloquy between the Senator from Nebraska and me, the Senator stated that there was no other way by which the work of the committee could be extended, than by creating an entirely new committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I said there was no other way, in my opinion.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understood the Senator to say that he had consulted the legislative draftsmen to determine whether any other way could be found than by the creation of an entirely new committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understood the Senator, he said the only way it could be done, to give the Republicans a majority, was by creating an entirely new committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, no; the Senator did not catch correctly the import of my answer.

Mr. ELLENDER. I probably misunderstood.

Mr. WHERRY. I said that the parliamentarian stated that the committee could be extended, but, if it were done, it would be mandatory upon the President pro tempore to name the personnel of the committee, remove surplus Democrats from the committee, and place two new Republicans on the committee. I said I thought that would be embarrassing, and that the majority should have something to say about that matter. I was informed as I recall—I know the Senator will not question my word—that the only other way to accomplish the purpose was by the creation of a new committee.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was only trying to ascertain what the motive was.

Mr. WHERRY. That is the only motive.

Mr. ELLENDER. When the committee was extended during the Seventy-eighth Congress the resolution previously adopted was amended so as to provide for an additional 5 members, making a total of 12.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. The Democrats then had seven.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator desire to continue the members of the old committee as they now are?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that as I understand—I may be wrong—ordinarily a special committee is appointed by——

Mr. ELLENDER. I am merely asking the Senator a simple question.

Mr. WHERRY. I will explain. It is my understanding that ordinarily a special committee is appointed by the President pro tempore, but he does not select the chairman. When the 12 members are named, they themselves meet and organize the committee. That is my understanding, and it will be perfectly agreeable to me that the President pro tempore appoint any Senators he wants to appoint as members of the committee. If in his wisdom he feels that the old personnel did a good job and he wishes them to continue, that is perfectly agreeable to me. I have not consulted the President pro tempore, nor the majority leader, and it is perfectly agreeable to me for them to appoint anyone they wish to appoint from this side of the aisle or from the other side of the aisle. I am not asking for the appointment of anyone.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is aware of what happened 2 or 3 years ago, when a resolution was adopted extending the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. Then the same personnel continued to serve. If the same membership is now appointed, the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], who is the senior member on the Republican side, would be chairman.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator knows why that is. That is the result of the election in November. The Republican side now has the majority.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that; but I wish to give the Senator the privilege of doing the same thing as was done when the life of the other committee was extended. May I suggest that if the Senator desired to continue the same membership the committee now has, he could simply move to extend the present committee, and increase the number of Senators on it from 12 to 13. By so doing it would give the Republicans a majority.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the suggestion, but I think we are merely talking about a technicality.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; it is not a technicality.

Mr. WHERRY. It is my opinion that the distinguished President pro tempore will select the most able Senators he can for membership on the committee. I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that the Senator from Nebraska will be perfectly satisfied with whomever the President pro tempore may select.

Mr. ELLENDER. My suspicion is that the Senator wants a new resolution adopted so that he can be chairman of the committee, and not permit the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], who is the ranking member, to be chairman.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I knew the Senator from Louisiana would bring that out on the floor; I knew he would make that statement. He was not serious in the question he put to me at all. He wanted to bring out on the floor that I wish to be chairman of the committee. In the resolution I have presented I have not included such a suggestion. If I wanted to do so I would have incorporated in it a provision authorizing the President pro tempore to appoint the chairman of the committee and a vice chairman, as the President pro tempore did in connection with the Atomic Energy Committee. Such a provision was contained in the resolution dealing with that committee. I did not do so, however. I am perfectly frank when I say that no matter who is named to the committee I shall be perfectly satisfied. The President pro tempore can leave me off the committee and I shall be satisfied. I am interested in small business. I am not interested in personalities or in trying to get ahead, as the Senator from Louisiana has suggested.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; but I think I have seen quite a few articles in the press in which such a suggestion is made.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; in Drew Pearson's column.

Mr. ELLENDER. And we can make a pretty good guess about it.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; Drew Pearson; Drew Pearson!

Mr. TOBEY obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The Senator from New Hampshire is going to say something quite worth while, and we should have a greater attendance of Senators on the floor when he speaks.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, as I turn and look around on this side I see Republican Senators present to the number of five or so. There are those few of the faithful. What I shall have to say might be useful; it might be stimulating to the minds of absent Senators; they might be interested; so let the quorum call proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I shall speak very frankly this afternoon, using language to convey thought and not to conceal it.

There is sometimes, and too often, a wide and deep abyss between partisanship and government. The motivations behind partisanship may at times be different from the motivations behind the struggle for good government. As a Senate we are engaged in transacting Government business. One or both of the parties, or a group in one party or another in the Senate, may at times be serving their own partisan purposes, in doing something for the sake of a partisan group, contrary to the requirements of good government.

The country has just witnessed an example of the difference between votes in the interests of clean government and votes to carry out the program of a special group.

In considering this question it is not so important whether a group which succeeds in serving its partisan or special purposes, rather than the purposes of government, succeeds by a big majority vote, or just barely noses through by one vote, and by refusing to provide a pair for a Member of the Senate, who has been called away by serious illness in his family.

In this instance it was so clear that the program before the Senate was in the service of a special group, rather than of the country as a whole, that utmost pressure and effort could get them victory by only a mere hair's breadth.

Today the country is faced with the spectacle of a second attempt to break down the efficiency statute.

I should like to show how such major steps for the defeat of good government bring with them many lesser, though important, other defeats for good government. The record of the past 3 weeks shows a whole series of inefficiencies in the operation of the affairs of the Senate, at the very beginning of the Eightieth Congress.

The Eightieth Congress opened for the conduct of public affairs under bright auspices. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 had finally gone into effect. It provided Congress with the mechanics for efficiency. It gave us, to use the language of my colleague [Mr. BRIDGES], the opportunity to operate on a streamlined basis. We opened for business with full power to transact the public business competently.

Our Eightieth Congress has so far been subjected to incompetent operations. This is so serious that I feel it my duty to present in detail the cumulative evidence of the incompetent administration of important business to date.

Competence in the conduct of Government business is the least that the public is entitled to get from us. It makes no difference whether a Government body is run on democratic principles, or is run by a boss. Both ways, the minimum required is competence. It is well known that even some of the big city bosses present in their defense, the claim that they provide competent administration of government for their cities. Even foreign dictators have resorted to this defense to show that at least they do something for the people they rule. So it was that Mussolini was widely advertised as the man who made trains run on time. But in our Senate, in the last 3 weeks, our leaders have been running the train off the rails.

The insistence in our country on competence in any work, public or private, is in the long standing tradition of our people. It has been handed down to us from the earliest days of colonization in America. The earliest colonists know that they had to build their houses solidly. They expected from the cabinet maker a solid and durable chair or other article of household furniture. They expected from the cobbler a first-rate job of leather. They knew that slap-dash work was no good.

I think the record will show that the Senate in the opening days of this Congress has already been subjected to slap-dash work.

Inefficiency in the Senate in the Eightieth Congress has not been due to any lack of ability in the leaders of the party which controls the Senate at the present time. On the contrary, the ability of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is such that he is renowned everywhere for talent, industry, and intelligence. The same may be said of others, who are taking part in conducting affairs on the majority side at the present time—the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE].

In others, who have participated in the making of plans and the taking of action on the particular subject matter to which I shall refer, one will find also outstanding ability—for example, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. The country is getting, from the leadership of the majority party in the Senate, ability that is as good as the country can expect.

The causes of the incompetence, as a careful perusal of the record will reveal to any reader, are due to something else. A group which starts on the wrong road will blunder and blunder and blunder.

That I shall develop in the course of this statement.

I shall take, as the example, that which was made the No. 1 business of the Senate by the leaders of the majority in the Senate. Turn to the calendar of business of the United States Senate, which is on the desk of every Member of this body. What do we find as the first order of business under general orders? We find that the first order of business is the consideration by the Senate of Senate Resolution 20, a resolution offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska to create a new special committee having to do with small business.

What did we find as the second order of business? It was the consideration by the Senate of Senate Resolution 46, the resolution offered by the junior Senator from Maine for the continuation of the War Investigating Committee.

It is particularly appropriate to consider the inefficiencies in the operation of Senate business in the last few weeks, in connection with this latter resolution, on which the Senate voted on Wednesday, January 22. That resolution provides for an investigation of certain things in the executive branch of the Government—inefficiency, incompetence, and mismanagement. At the same time that we are engaged in throwing a stone, no matter how deservedly, against inefficiencies and incompetence in the executive branch of the Government, we should not be placed in a senatorial glass house of senatorial inefficiency and incompetence.

I shall now compare the inefficient methods used in the last few weeks in handling this first business which came before the Senate in the present Congress, with the long-established and efficient methods which have been used by the Senate in the past. A study of the record will show that in the course of the current major efforts to break down the efficiency provided by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, a number of older efficiencies which the Senate possessed, even before that statute was enacted, were thrown overboard.

A discussion of the conduct of business in the Senate is, to some extent, of a technical nature, just as would be the discussion of the conduct of business in the manufacture of automobiles. Nevertheless, every intelligent person understands how the assembly line in an automobile plant functions. If you told an intelligent person that the manager of an automobile factory, without providing a satisfactory substitute for the established assembly-line procedure, ordered his men to scrap two or three of the operations for the preparation of parts, until the entire automobile was assembled, it would be clear at once that inefficiency had been substituted for sound operation in the conduct of the business of that factory.

There is a certain order of business in handling resolutions in the Senate. It is long established. The steps which are involved are the introduction of a resolution, the referring of that resolution to the appropriate committee, the careful consideration by committees of the issues involved, and the holding, if necessary, of hearings on those issues, the vote of the committees on those resolutions, the filing of a report to the Senate which conveys to the Senate adequately the reasons for the report of the committees, and deliberations on the floor of the Senate and the final voting on those resolutions.

That is the established way of doing business on such matters in the Senate.

Unquestionably, improved methods of doing business can be developed and should then be used. But it is a very different thing to throw overboard the established methods of doing business in order to substitute a mere slap-dash method—one which has not been carefully thought through and one which is bound to result in confusion, delay, inefficiency, and waste.

That is exactly what took place in connection with the two resolutions which the Senate has been asked to consider as its first order of business.

In outlining the established steps in the handling of business on such matters, methods which have been tried for decades and have been found the best way of doing such legislative business, I do not mean to say that the members of the majority party may not hold their own caucuses for the purpose of considering what they should do in connection with legislative questions. But this is additional to the appropriate action by the Senate and the Senate committees. When we legislate by passing a resolution or a bill and when our committees consider and report bills or resolutions to the Senate, that is done not in the name of the majority party of the moment, but in the name of the entire committee and the entire Senate made up of both parties.

Now let us see how the No. 1 and No. 2 businesses which have been placed before the Senate have been handled.

I am going to take, by way of example, five of the inefficiencies which have marked our course this month.

I want to repeat that I am discussing the question, not of efficiency in a partisan operation, but efficiency in the conduct of the affairs of the Senate.

The first misstep was the deliberate bypassing of the standing committees to which should have been referred the resolutions for the creation or continuation of the special committees under

Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46. The resolutions were sent directly, not to the committees which have jurisidiction over the subject matter of the proposed investigation, but to the Committee on Rules and Administration. Even the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] acknowledged on the floor of the Senate in the debate on January 15 that another committee than the one to which his resolution was sent had the primary jurisdiction.

I should like to read a few words from the discussion on January 13 on the floor of the Senate between the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] said:

I think I can show the Senate how the spirit of the Reorganization Act has been violated in this instance. Under the Rules of the Senate as they now exist, the creation of a special committee requires the submission of a resolution and the reference of the resolution to the committee of the Senate having jurisdiction of the subject matter. * * * In this instance, when the Brewster resoloution and the Wherry resolution were submitted they should have been referred to the proper standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject matters.

The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], in the course of his ensuing remarks, said:

If the Senator wants to say that we are violating the rules of the Senate, that is another question; and I am willing, when the resolution comes up, to postpone it so that the situation may be straightened out in that respect.

We all know that since there was a violation, not only of the established practices of the Senate, but of the requirements of efficiency in the conduct of Senate business, the restoration to efficiency which the senior Senator from Ohio offered to make, should then have been made. We all know that this was not done, but that instead the supporters of Senate Resolution 46 wanted no such interference with their group purposes.

On the floor of the Senate on January 22, the senior Senator from Ohio recognized that there had been inefficiency in this first piece of business to come before the Eightieth Congress. He gave notice that he intended to introduce a resolution which would require that the efficient method of doing business should be followed in the future. That method has been followed for so many years, that no resolution was needed to protect the efficient conduct of business in the Senate from those partisans who arranged in advance to bypass the proper standing committees, and to proceed by inefficient and wasteful methods.

As I read the statement and the proposed resolution of the senior Senator from Ohio, it is in the nature of putting the Senate on notice for the future that no Senator should try to induce the senior Senator from Ohio to permit the incompetence, the inefficiency, and the mismanagement which were part of the program of the persons seeking to assure for themselves the creation of special committees, before the Senate in the Eightieth Congress even had a chance to look around and to realize what was being attempted.

The second example of inefficiency introduced into the affairs of the Senate in connection with Senate Resolution 46 and Senate Resolution 20 is related to the first. It has been part of the efficient handling of business in the Senate that, when a resolution for the creation or continuation of a special investigating committee is to come before the Senate for consideration, it shall first receive the views and recommendations of the standing committee which has jurisdiction over the subject matter. As the senior Senator from Ohio said on January 13:

I think that any standing committee has a right to object to the creation of a special committee which will take jurisdiction from the standing committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the able Senator from New Hampshire that ordinarily if a resolution in the exact language of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska were submitted for appropriate reference, it would be referred by the Chair to a standing committee.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Maryland is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. There is no doubt that it would go to a standing committee. Therefore, the resolution now before the Senate is only a subterfuge to take away from the Chair his right of correct reference. No other correct interpretation can be placed on the matter.

Mr. TOBEY. I so agree.

Mr. President, the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter knows a great deal more about it than does any other committee, and in particular it knows more about it than does the Committee on Rules and Administration, and therefore the committee which has jurisdiction is in a far better position to advise the Senate on the proper action which it should take with respect to the resolution.

There is another and even more potent reason for doing business in the long-established, efficient way. That relates to the subject of legislation.

Between investigation and legislation, there should be the least possible gap. Yet, when a special committee undertakes an investigation, there is a gap between its work and the subsequent work that will have to be done by the standing committee for the purpose of legislation. The special committee does not have the power to hold hearings on proposed or needed legislation, and, as the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] said in the course of the debate on January 15, special committees are for that very reason weak.

When the Legislative Reorganization Act was under consideration in the Senate in June 1946, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] said:

I wished to refer to the question of special committees and the proper functions of our standing legislative committees. I think I am stating the fact accurately when I say that, in the case of most of our special committees, they have no legislative authority whatsoever, but are investigatory in character and in some instances are permitted to make recommendations, and that is all. That does not relieve the standing committees of the Senate of the obligation of study and of reaching conclusions. In a sense, it involves a duplication of effort.

In view of this circumstance, a standing committee which will have to legislate on the subject matter of the proposed investigation should consider how wide the gap is likely to be between the special committee's work and the standing committee's subsequent work, and whether the labor of bridging this gap will be great or small.

This fact is one which the Senate must have before it, in order to judge whether a special committee should be created or continued. Even if it were true, as argued by the supporters of Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46, that there were any advantages in permitting a special committee rather than a standing committee to investigate certain subjects under Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46, it was essential that the Senate should be able to ascertain, from the best qualified sources, whether there were any offsetting disadvantages, and the nature and seriousness of those offsetting disadvantages. Only the standing committee could really advise the Senate adequately on this point. Certainly the Committee on Rules has no qualification, for that purpose, at all comparable with the qualification of the standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the proposed investigations.

The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] stated on the floor of the Senate that he had dealt with the Committee on Armed Services. But most of his dealing, as became clear in the course of the debate, was only with the Republican members of that committee, and was obviously for purposes of making concessions, in order to get his resolution through the Senate, rather than for the purpose of getting the Committee on Armed Services to tell the Senate all the considerations which it should have in mind in its deliberations on Senate Resolution 46. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] amply developed this point in the course of the debate, with a clarity that made his statement wholly unanswerable.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Hampshire has already passed the point about which I wished to inquire. He was referring to the exchange between the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Committee on Armed Services. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from New Hampshire is saying that a trade was made, a surrender of jurisdiction by the special committee, in order to obtain votes to continue it?

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from New Mexico puts the matter rather baldly, but I think it is rather near a bull's-eye.

When, in the course of this negotiating process, part of the jurisdiction which the supporters of Senate Resolution 46 wanted to give to their special committee had to be thrown overboard, and only part was left in their hands, there was still the question of getting the views of the best-qualified standing committee with respect to the subject matter that was still retained under Senate Resolution 46. To be sure the supporters of that resolution were very much in doubt whether they could get that resolution through the Senate, as indicated by the refusal to arrange a pair for a Member of the Senate who had been called away by illness in his family. At that stage the supporters of the resolution were in a position where they could not negotiate with the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department, because that would involve a surrender by the supporters of Senate Resolution 46 of the remainder of the jurisdiction which they sought to obtain for themselves.

In any event, negotiation for position, trading for jurisdictional power, bargaining for a piece of the jurisdiction which by statute has been assigned to a standing committee, is not the same thing as careful consideration by that committee of the merits and demerits of a resolution to assign jurisdiction to some special committee. The Senate is entitled to a careful report, from the standing committee, on the merits and demerits of the proposal for creation of a special committee. Instead, we witnessed simply a bargaining in the corridors and committee rooms and senatorial offices, and even that bargaining was conducted simply between majority party members of a special committee and majority party members of a standing committee. That does not permit of the type of consideration and reporting which one can expect to get from a committee, rather than from a partisan section of a committee that is not meeting in any respect as part of the Senate or as a Senate committee organization.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire prefer not to be interrupted by other Senators?

Mr. TOBEY. I wish to be fair to those who also wish to speak, and my remarks will consume some time. However, when I conclude, if the distinguished Senator from Maryland cares to ask questions, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I shall not interfere with the very cogent address of the Senator from New Hampshire, except to say, while I am on my feet—and what I shall now state is not what I wished to say when I rose in the first place—that in my opinion the overwhelming logic of his entire argument is absolutely devastating to anyone who would support a special committee, in the face of the facts which the Senator from New Hampshire has so well developed.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator.

I simply wish to rise to make a correction in regard to a statement of fact about which I think my brother Senators are inaccurate, though I certainly do not infer intentionally so. The inference has been drawn that there was an arrangement between the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Republican members of the Armed Services Committee. I am willing to say that at the first conference held between some members of the Armed Services Committee and the Senator from Maine, the chief purpose of the Republican members of the committee was to point out to the Senator from Maine that, as members of that committee, we did not look kindly upon an encroachment upon our power and jurisdiction, and we wished to know what limitations he was willing to place upon the purport and breadth of his investigation, if the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program were continued.

As a result of that conference, another conference was held, at which the Senator from Maine likewise was present, as were practically all the Republican members, and at least several of the Democratic members, of the Armed Services Committee. At that time the matter was most thoroughly and completely discussed, and an effort was made to arrive at some sort of limitation on the scope and breadth of the investigation which would be conducted by the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. The matter was discussed openly, fairly, and fully, with both Democratic and Republican members of the Armed Services Committee present, in an effort to arrive at a conclusion limiting the scope of the investigation.

As a member of the committee, Mr. President—and other than the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], I believe I am the only Republican member of the committee present in the Senate Chamber at this time—I have felt constrained to make this statement. It seems to me that the Committee on Armed Forces needs no defense, but I have wished to make this explanation in behalf of the committee, in order to detail what actually happened, according to the best of my recollection.

I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for yielding to me.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will now proceed under the unanimous-consent agreement, which divides the time from now to 5 o'clock between the proponents and opponents of the pending resolution. The time for the proponents is under the control of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and for the opponents under the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield time to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield time to the Senator from New Hampshire. How much time does he desire?

Mr. TOBEY. I should hesitate to say, not knowing what interruptions there will be, but I should like to make my address in continuity, in sequence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield the Senator 30 minutes.

Mr. TOBEY. "The quality of mercy is not strained," I may say to the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. In the confusion I did not understand in whose time the Senator from New Hampshire is speaking.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is speaking in the time of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, what I have to say will take me but a moment. I am very glad that my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] has pointed out that when the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] met with the Armed Services Committee, he met with the full committee, at least all members of the committee who had opportunity to attend, and there were some Democratic members of the committee present.

I am glad that the Senator from Connecticut also pointed out that there was an earlier conference held by the Republican members of the Armed Services Committee. I am sure that no one would question that the distinguished junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] would have had greater difficulty in getting a majority vote for the adoption of his resolution had he not been willing to limit the jurisdiction of the committee so as not to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee. I am convinced that he would have lost a sufficient number of Republican votes for his resolution if he had not made that arrangement.

The main point I desire to make on this subject is that I think that if such an arrangement was to be made in regard to one standing committee, it should have been made in regard to all standing committees. It is my position and one of my reasons for voting against the Brewster committee that if a fraud needs to be investigated, it should be investigated no matter where the fraud leads us. I think the arrangement made on the jurisdiction of the committee necessary in order to get votes to continue it was one good reason for voting against it.

I do think the Senator from Connecticut makes his point well when for the RECORD he makes the statement that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] met with the Armed Services Committee as a committee, and the Democrats as well as Republicans were present. However, the fact remains that most of the Democrats and a few of us on the Republican side did not approve of the principle inherent in the arrangement made for limiting the jurisdiction of the Brewster committee, which arrangement resulted in receiving a majority vote for the continuation of a special committee.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for the remainder of 30 minutes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the third example which I shall present of the cutting of corners and resulting inefficiency relates to the unavoidable requirement that committees of the Senate shall do their work thoroughly. This was true even before the passage of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

The Legislative Reorganization Act sought to give greater opportunity for thorough work by the committees, which means thorough work by the Senators who serve on committees. The Reorganization Act provides that, with a very few exceptions, Senators should serve on only two standing committees.

The Committee on Rules and Administration is such a committee. Ten of its 13 members have only two committee assignments and the other three have three committee assignments each. So on this committee, under the terms of the Reorganization Act, the members had been so limited in their number of committee assignments that they would be sure to have time to consider carefully every important matter coming before that committee.

Yet, on the important question of two resolutions, each of which has a serious bearing on the operation of business in the Senate, on the work of other standing committees; and on the reform statute of 1946, the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration did the very opposite of that which the Senate has a right to expect from every one of its committees.

The committee held no hearings. It had no knowledge of the views held by the standing committees in whose jurisdiction belongs the subject matter of the proposed special committee investigations. In fact, the Committee on Rules had no knowledge of whether the standing committees had considered the subject and had as yet arrived at any view on the subject.

The Committee on Rules and Administration gave no notice to the public that it was about to consider those resolutions and dispose of them immediately. No one of the large number of Members of Congress, and of the large number of experts who have made through studies of the subject of committee work in Congress, was called on to present views or was given an opportunity to indicate whether he would want to present views to the Committee on Rules.

What happened in the Committee on Rules was stated by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] on the floor of the Senate on the following day, January 10, 1947, and no member of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration has challenged the accuracy of what he then said. He said that, first that committee in its meeting of January 9 disposed of considerable other business. I now quote from his statement to the Senate:

> Then, toward the close of the meeting, much to the surprise of some of us, action was taken on the two resolutions which have been reported by the Senator from Illinois to create special committees of the Senate. * * * Those of us who knew nothing about the resolutions and did not expect them to come up at the committee meeting requested they go over for a day of two—
> A reasonable request—
> so that we might give consideration to the major problem of whether or not the Senate should at this time attempt to wreck the system of jurisdiction that had been imposed upon its various standing committees.
> However, our request was very courteously but very firmly denied, and the majority of the committee decided to report the two resolutions immediately.

When a Senate committee refuses the request of the members of its own committee for time to consider a matter which they had not expected to come before the committee and refuses to do its job of thoroughly considering the merits of a resolution referred to it, there must be some especially and exigent reason for such a refusal. The need for speedy action must be imperative, because such a request of members of the committee is denied.

In fact, such was the confusion and mismanagement into which the supporters of the two resolutions were thrown by their attempt to substitute rush for efficiency that the Committee on Rules had almost an entire week in which it could have considered Senate Resolution 46, prior to the time when its supporters at long last wanted to have it even considered on the floor of the Senate, and at least 2 weeks before the supporters of Senate Resolution 20 had it up for debate.

Here is a lesson about cutting corners for partisan advantage. It introduces inefficiency, waste, and delay. We have proof positive in this instance that primrose paths are bad, not only for the conduct of Senate business, but also for those who would draw the Senate down such a path; the example that they have provided shows that they will trip themselves up.

They tried to rush Senate Resolution 46. They were stopped in their tracks by a revolt in their own party, a revolt against the attempt to steamroller one of the standing committees of the Senate. As a result, they conducted in the corridors and cloakrooms a substitute for business in committee and on the floor of the Senate. Meantime, they in effect were saying to the Senate, "Don't rush any consideration of our resolutions; we, the authors of these resolutions, are not ready; the Rules Committee was all wrong in thinking that it had no time to do its duty; the Rules Committee could have taken plenty of time; they could have done a good job rather than no job at all."

Negotiations in corridors and cloakrooms and elsewhere are permissible as an addition to the conduct of proper Senate committee business but not as a substitute.

I refer now to the record of our proceedings and its ample evidence of the unsuccessful attempt to rush the Senate, and the delays which the authors of the successful attempt to rush the Rules Committee thereby brought on themselves and on the Senate as a whole.

On the assumption that there was an emergency requiring the Rules Committee to throw overboard its duty of careful consideration of legislative proposals referred to it by the Senate, the time to begin debate in the Senate on the resolutions was at the earliest possible moment after the Rules Committee had reported those resolutions to the Senate. That debate could have begun on January 10, when the Rules Committee hurriedly reported Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46 to the Senate. To be sure, objection could have been made by any Member to the beginning of debate on these resolutions on January 10. But such objection could hardly have been expected from the group which had rushed the resolutions through the Rules Committee, without giving it a chance to create even a pretense of careful deliberation. Yet, the attempt to begin and expedite debate on that and succeeding days came from the opponents of the resolutions, and the supporters of the resolutions were the ones who delayed and procrastinated.

On January 10 various opponents of the resolutions tried to open and continue the debate. The debate would have continued except that the proponent of Senate Resolution 46, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and others of its supporters stood in the way.

The junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] several times intimated that debate was not appropriate on that day. Finally, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] made the point of order which brought the debate on the two resolutions to an end for that day.

It was expected by opponents of the resolution and by the entire public that the debate would begin immediately on Monday, January 13. In fact, on Friday, January 10, the junior Senator from Maine said:

> I anticipate that on Monday, when this matter will be in order for discussion, there will be ample opportunity for the discussion which its importance merits.

On January 13, I presented a full statement in opposition to the resolutions. This was followed by some desultory remarks, and then after referring to negotiations under way between the junior Senator from Maine and the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made this significant remark:

> I trust that before the resolution comes before us there will be complete agreement.

Neither the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], who introduced Senate Resolution 46, nor the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who introduced Senate Resolution 20, brought before the Senate on January 13 the resolutions they had respectively introduced. Neither of them, nor any supporter of either of these resolutions, asked that the debate begin on that day. They wanted to wait to have the subject come before us at some later date.

This brings me to the fourth example of the inefficiencies imposed on the conduct of Senate business, as a result of the attempt to cut corners in the effort to rush Senate Resolution 46 and Senate Resolution 20 through the Senate.

The committee system, as well known and as detailed in the reports of the Reorganization Act, was set up to get as much as possible of the work of the Senate done before the entire membership is called in. This is a screening process, using the time of a small number of men to do all that can be done before the attention and energies of the entire membership are required.

We all know that when bills or resolutions are reported out of committee to the Senate, they may still be subject to amendment, and there may still be conferences in order to reconcile differences of opinions. But so far as possible, the efficient conduct of the Senate demands that everything that can be ironed out in the course of committee hearings and committee deliberations should be ironed out in committee. Otherwise, we will convert the entire Senate into one large committee which must take over all the business of the standing committees, and turn them into mere figureheads. The Senate will be unable to conduct its business efficiently or even to conduct its business at all, if the consideration of the merits of the proposed legislation, the ascertainment of what amendments, if any, are desirable, and the screening of the subject matter, are all transferred from the period of committee consideration to the period after the proposed legislation has been reported.

That is exactly what happened with respect to the two resolutions.

On January 13, the Senate was informed by the senior Senator from Ohio that the matter was in process of negotiation. Thereafter, on January 15, the Senate witnessed a strange and unusual and, I may say, mortifying spectacle. On January 15 it became impossible to debate any resolution which could be relied on as the resolution which was going to be urged on the Senate by its supporters. Five different drafts of resolution, amendments, and substitute amendments, each to take the place of its predecessor, were rushed to the floor of the Senate on that day. The resolution which was to be debated was not introduced until the close of the day, and was not even read to the Senate. So that most Senators did not know until Thursday, January 16, what "final" draft of the resolution was to be actually considered and debated.

We found that the business of Congress, which could have been done in an orderly manner, where all the press could have been present to see and to hear, was being conducted, instead, in corridors by press interviews. We found that instead of enabling the Senate to receive the views of the standing committees and enabling the Committee on Rules and Administration to receive the views of the standing committees which have jurisdiction over the subject matter of the proposed investigations, those views were reaching the Senate, as well as its Committee on Rules and Administration, through articles in the press. Even then, the views of the standing committees which have jurisdiction in the matter, and which are entitled to be consulted, were not being obtained. All that we had were the views of a chairman of one of those committees, or some individual members of one of those committees, or some of the majority members of one of those committees. There was a running around in little caucuses and little gatherings. Here was confusion worse confounded. To be sure, a caucus of the majority members of one committee has a right to confer with a caucus of the majority of another, or with the author of a resolution, or with one or more of the leaders of the majority party. But that alone does not constitute the conduct of congressional business in a businesslike manner. This is topsy-turvy operation of the affairs of the Senate, with a vengeance.

One might be able to see some slight reason for disregarding the competent way of doing Senate business, if one could point to any satisfactory results. But all that one can point to is confusion, disagreement, dissension, and irregularity.

The Senate is a legislative chamber with a long history. The present standing committees of the Senate are consolidations of prior standing committees, also with a long history. We do not have to do what has been done on this No. 1 business of the Senate. We have been groping in the dark. We have been throwing overboard the established and successful ways of conducting the affairs of the Senate. We have been substituting slap-dash methods of conducting our legislative business.

I now present another example of the confusion, the inefficiency, and the explanations which do not explain, introduced into the proceedings of the Senate by the roundabout devices employed to achieve the undisclosed purposes for which the resolutions to create these special committees were introduced. I refer to the effect of all such inefficiency on the leadership of the Senate. They cannot admit that what is really involved is the creation of chairmanships for the faithful, and the indication to those who are not first in line that there may be more lollipops for others later. The consequence not alone on our present leadership, but on any leadership, is bound to be unfair to it, costly to its prestige as well as to the prestige of the Senate as a whole, and costly to the welfare of the country.

We should not conduct our deliberations and the business of the Senate on the basis of rewards to subleaders and to those whom it may be useful to draw into the fold of subleaders. We should proceed on the basis of logic and reasoning. When it comes to logic and reasoning, I yield to no man in my respect for the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who has been acclaimed by many as the ablest intellect, not alone in the present Senate, but in this Chamber for many years past. I yield to no man in my admiration for the intellectual capacity of others of the leadership in this Senate. Yet they have been placed in the position, by some of the faithful, of defending an indefensible blow at the efficiency statute, struck by indefensible inefficiencies in the procedures used for that purpose. In short, they are in an indefensible position. I can illustrate this fact by examples drawn from the arguments made on the floor of the Senate by the mind acclaimed as the ablest in my party's leadership in the Senate. The senior Senator from Ohio told the Senate in the course of the debate on Senate Resolution 46 that he favors the principle of sending resolutions for special investigating committees to the standing committees which have jurisdiction of the subject matter—but. He said he does not like special committees—but. He said he voted for the Legislative Reorganization Act—but. I want to discuss some of those "buts."

He wants all the Senators to be put on notice, by a resolution he plans to introduce, that resolutions for special investigating committees must go not to the Rules Committee in the first instance but to the standing committee whose jurisdiction would be invaded by the proposed special committee investigation. He wants all the faithful to know, for the future, that they must not expect the kind of special dispensation and improper interference with efficient operations of the Senate that two of the faithful got as soon as the doors of the Eightieth Congress were open for business. It has not been the practice to grant such dispensations. Even in this, the Eightieth Congress, the general practice has been to refer resolutions for investigations to the standing committee having jurisdiction.

I have prepared a list of 14 resolutions introduced in the Senate up to the close of our proceedings on January 13, which demonstrate that even in this session in which irregular procedure on this point was attempted, the contrary, long-established rightful procedure has been generally followed. I ask that the list and other explanatory material on this point shall be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the foot of my remarks.

It has long been the practice to do exactly what the senior Senator from Ohio says shall be done in the future. Why not do it right now? On January 10 he said he would be glad to straighten out this irregularity, this impropriety, this violation of the efficiency requirements, when the resolution came before the Senate. I, therefore, ask him and the others in the leadership to send Senate Resolution 20 to the Committee on Banking and Currency now. As chairman of that committee, I promise them that I shall place this resolution as the first order of the committee's business. I shall ask the committee to give Senate Resolution 20 immediate, thorough, and careful consideration. I shall ask the committee to make a careful, thorough, and full report to the Senate with the utmost promptness compatible with the discharge of its duty to the country and to the Senate, the duty of careful deliberation and consideration.

Let me take up another one of the "buts" which stud the defense of the able and intellectually brilliant senior Senator from Ohio. He told us on January 13 that there is no violation of the spirit of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

The purposes, the policy, and the spirit of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 are plain for every man to see. There are several aspects. One is the question whether there shall be a larger number of committees or a smaller number of committees. Every witness who discussed this phase of the matter urged that there should be a small number of committees. Every report submitted to the Senate said that there should be a small number of committees. The statute itself specifies a small number of committees and names them.

Does the senior Senator from Ohio favor a smaller number of committees or a larger number of committees? That is a simple, plain, and clear issue on which Congress spoke in 1946, on which the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 has taken a clear stand. Does the senior Senator from Ohio want to depart from this unmistakable policy adopted by the Senate in 1946?

Now, there is a second aspect of the policy, the purpose and the meaning of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. The act was directed to the elimination of overlapping jurisdiction and duplication of the jurisdiction of the committees in the Senate. At that time there were a number of situations in which part of the jurisdiction of one committee was duplicated in another committee. That was one of the largest difficulties in the operations of the Senate. Against this, the press throughout the country, witnesses before the joint congressional committee, and the debates on the floor of the Senate directed vigorous criticism. It was one of the chief difficulties which the criticism and the legislation sought to eliminate.

Does the leadership of my party disagree with the spirit and purposes of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 on this point? Either they do or they do not. If we do not, then they cannot justify resolutions to create committees which duplicate to any extent the jurisdiction of committees already in existence. That is exactly what Senate Resolution 46 and Senate Resolution 20 do—they would grant to a committee to be headed by the junior Senator from Maine and to a committee to be headed by the junior Senator from Nebraska jurisdiction which was last year placed by legislation in the jurisdiction of committees now in existence, committees for whose continuance or creation no further resolution is required at all. The two resolutions that were introduced sought to duplicate committee jurisdiction. Those resolutions set up, in effect, a conflict of jurisdiction between committees.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. TOBEY. I should be delighted to yield, but my time is limited, and I am under pressure.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to make a brief observation, which I have wanted to make many times during the debate. There has been a great deal of criticism of Senators who speak of the "spirit of the law" as though there was no such thing as the spirit of the law. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that when he speaks of the spirit of the law he is standing upon solid ground and is supported by rulings which have been recognized by the courts and the leading jurists of this country and of all other English-speaking countries since the sixteenth century.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, "the letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I may say that it has been almost the unanimous decision of the courts of last resort that if there is a conflict between the spirit and the letter of a law, the spirit of the law will prevail. The Senator need not apologize to anybody for the position which he takes.

Mr. TOBEY. Thank you, sir.

Mr. President, these are two specific aspects of the policy and purposes and meaning of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. On these two specific phases—the question whether there shall be a larger number of committees or a smaller number of committees, and the question as to whether there shall be duplicated, overlapping, and conflicting jurisdiction of committees in the Senate, the Senate should take a stand. Either we stand with the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 on those issues, or we take a stand against that act on those issues.

I come to the third of the "buts" which I have drawn as examples of the difficulty which one of the ablest minds in the history of the Senate experienced in defending the indefensible introduction of inefficiency into the affairs of the Senate. He now tells us that although he joined with the overwhelming majority of the Senate in voting last year for the reorganization bill, when it contained an express legislative condemnation of special committees, he cast his vote not for that provision, but only because there was much else of value in the bill. As far as I can remember, this is the first time that anyone has pronounced such a severe criticism of the senior Senator from Ohio. No one else has ever dared say that the senior Senator from Ohio would fail to point out on the floor of the Senate that legislation which he in general favored nevertheless contained a provision which he deemed bad. The debate in the Senate on the legislative reorganization bill ran for many days. The senior Senator from Ohio was there. He participated in the discussion and commended the legislation. Many other Senators proposed numerous amendments—for example, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], and the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] was one of many who joined in supporting amendments. The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] referred early in that debate to the subject of amendments. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] asked numerous questions about the section of the bill dealing with special committees. Throughout, if my friend, the senior Senator from Ohio, had any doubts about that provision in the bill, he did not give voice to those doubts, a reticence which no other person would have dared openly charge against the senior Senator from Ohio.

But not only he and the others now leading the Senate but any and every leadership would find themselves in difficulties in any attempt to defend these resolutions, Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46. Their position really comes down to this: they tell the Senate that they do not like to have the standing committees by-passed when such resolutions are referred from the Senate, but they ask that they be permitted to do this wrongful action just once more. They say that they do not like special committees, but they hope that they will be permitted to undermine the Reorganization Act just this one more time. They say that they do not like any of the inefficiencies which have marked the course of these two resolutions in the Senate this year, but they hope that the Senate will indulge them in this little peccadillo just once more.

With many more of the faithful hoping for similar treatment for themselves, it is going to be interesting to see whether the leaders can withstand the demands by some of their followers for more of the same.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TOBEY. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that I have been given this limited time, and I should like to finish my statement. I am endeavoring to develop a continuity of thought which I at least think is worth while.

Mr. LUCAS. I am sure what the Senator has to say is very much worth while. The only reason I rose and asked the Senator to yield was that I wanted to read into the RECORD at that point something which the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] said last year before the Committee To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which committee the Senator from New Hampshire was a member. It was during the debate on the resolution which was submitted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] asking for a considerable amount of money, which he did not receive because of the persistent opposition, primarily, from the Senator from Nebraska. This is what the Senator from Nebraska said:

Senator WHERRY. Just let me tell you, I supported the small-business appropriation because I felt that the showing was made that the Small Business Committee should continue as long as we have these Government agencies such as OPA and CPA.

Everyone knows they are now out the window for all intents and purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not going to inject myself into that.

Senator WHERRY. The same way with the O'Mahoney committee.

The CHAIRMAN—

And the chairman was the Senator from Illinois who is now addressing the Senate—

From the standpoint of permanency, the Small Business Committee could continue on forever, and probably do some good work.

Mr. WHERRY. I feel they ought to go on a permanent committee and not a special committee. The sooner you put them there, the more satisfactory it will be with me, if it is to be that long range.

I merely wanted to put that into the RECORD at this point to show the position of the Senator from Nebraska last year when he was fighting practically all special committees and made the statement he did about the proposed continuation of the Small Business Committee. Mr. President, oh, how times have changed, one might say almost overnight, since the Republicans came into the majority.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

One impossible intellectual task has not yet been essayed by any of the Senate leaders, with the exception of the author of Senate Resolution 20. That resolution calls for the termination of the existing Small Business Committee and the establishment of a new small-business committee. Get that! According to the statements of the junior Senator from Nebraska in the Senate on January 13, 1947, when he was asked about this burial-and-birth procedure, the powers which his resolution would grant to the new special committee on small business are exactly the same as the powers of the existing special committee which he proposes to kill. Also, according to the answers given by the junior Senator from Nebraska, the committee he would create has exactly the same number of members as the committee his resolution would terminate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me? I will yield him additional time.

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the remark the Senator has just made, I wonder what the explanation is of the fact that Senate Resolution 46 continued the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program as it was in the last session, which automatically made the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] the chairman because of his rank on that committee, while the pending resolution, Senate Resolution 20, terminates the resolution under which the Small Business Committee was set up, and creates a new committee, which automatically eliminates the ranking Republican, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], from the chairmanship of that committee altogether? Can the Senator explain why that inconsistency exists between the two resolutions?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes; I am coming to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well. I am sorry I interrupted the Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, if the answers given by the junior Senator from Nebraska indicate the reason for terminating the existing special committee and creating a new special committee in its place, then the very same reasons are applicable in equal measure to the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense. If the junior Senator from Nebraska is right in the unusual method he has proposed in his resolution, then the junior Senator from Maine was wrong in the kind of method that he proposed in his resolution. If the method used by the junior Senator from Nebraska was as necessary as he says it was, then the failure to use the same method in the resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Maine is bound to get his special committee and the Senate into a mix-up, a jam.

On the floor of the Senate, there was some evidence that the resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Nebraska had been prepared and rushed through with such speed that not even the present chairman of the existing special committee dealing with small business had been given an opportunity to acquaint himself adequately with the terms of that resolution. I submit that that is not the efficient way of carrying on legislative business.

The laudable purpose of aiding small business has been put forward as a screen behind which to carry out the less popular purpose of undermining the reforms of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

I do not raise the question that persons whose statements confuse the issue in this way are aware that they are in fact promoting confusion, and have not thought the problem through with thoroughness.

Few, if any, people will disagree about the desirability of having an agency in the Senate that is concerned with the problems of small business and looking out for the interests of small business. Obviously, the best way to accomplish that result is by a permanent committee or subcommittee. Obviously, the thing to do is to have a subcommittee of a standing committee responsible for that work—responsible thoroughly, continuously, and constantly. If that is done, small business will not have to come to the Senate, hat in hand, every few months and have to ask for the creation or continuance of a small-business committee.

Let me say that the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has already acted. On January 22, 1947, our committee, a standing committee, approved the formation of a subcommittee to deal with problems of small business, and I appointed a subcommittee of five. Three of those five Senators are now members of the existing special committee on small business. So, a majority of the subcommittee of this standing committee, appointed, pursuant to the Legislative Reorganization Act and the jurisdiction it confers on the standing Committee on Banking and Currency, to deal with the problems of small business, are men who have been and are members of the present special committee on small business.

The real reason for now trying to create a special committee on this subject through Senate Resolution 20 has not yet been stated in the course of the debate. It is fair to ask what lies behind this strange way of doing business. It is not clear from the explanation given by the junior Senator from Nebraska. He talked about the necessity of doing in this manner what he is trying to accomplish, because of the fact that the representation on the committee must be changed.

But why is not the same thing true of the War Investigating Committee, where the resolution of the junior Senator from Maine does not propose to kill the existing committee and create a new one, but proposes to continue the existing committee.

This whole method of trying to pass a resolution with respect to small business has been wrapped around in mystery by the very terms of Senate Resolution 20, the resolution offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska. If there is a clear reason for trying to do business that way, it should be stated clearly on the floor of the Senate. When the senior Senator from New Mexico, in the course of the debate in the Senate on January 13, 1947, asked the senior Senator from Montana, outgoing chairman of the Small Business Committee, about this curious way of doing business through Senate Resolution 20, the junior Senator from Nebraska obviously thought that the senior Senator from Montana, despite his long service as chairman of the committee, might not be able to answer the question. No one can give the real answer, without giving the show away. The junior Senator from Nebraska interrupted and said that he wanted to explain what it was all about. But he failed to explain it.

I challenge any Senator in this Chamber to show any word, any phrase, any sentence, any paragraph, any column, or any page in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which the reason for this manner of doing legislative business, as proposed in Senate Resolution 20, is stated clearly, plainly, directly, and forthrightly.

The members of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration considered Senate Resolution 20, and a majority of them voted to report it favorably to the Senate. But they have given us no explanation in any report or in any statement on the floor of the Senate for the curious method of conducting legislative business, arranged like a jigsaw puzzle, in Senate Resolution 20. Perhaps the present chairman of that committee or some other member who voted for Senate Resolution 20 will solve for us the legislative puzzle which has been deposited in our midst by Senate Resolution 20, and which no man has yet told us that he deems himself capable of solving.

I ask once more for the reason for subjecting the Senate and its committees in the early days of this Congress to irregular and wasteful procedures in the conduct of Senate business with reference to the two resolutions. Surely we are entitled to some clear explanations on this head. Lacking that, let me give the real motivation behind it all, and that was to provide a committee chairmanship for the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Nebraska. That, Mr. President, is reducing it to the lowest terms. But it is not good enough. The price is too high.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired. The Chair does not see the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] in the Chamber.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am authorized to yield an additional 10 minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Only yesterday the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio told me that last November those Senators came before the steering committee and pleaded the cause of special committees, before the Eightieth Congress was born.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. Not until I am through. I ask, why would they have come here and pleaded for the committees to be continued had they not known in their hearts that the terms and spirit of the Reorganization Act prohibited it? Surely we are entitled to some clear explanation under this head.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. When the Senator had the floor I courteously asked him to yield and he declined. I shall heap coals of fire on his head. I yield to him, provided he uses his own time.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. I will resume my seat.

Mr. TOBEY. It makes a difference. The Senator is not a good trader.

In the case of Senate Resolution 20, the chairmanship is far removed from the aspirant to that office. He has to do more than get the Senate to vote for a special committee. He has to oust the present ranking Republican member of the present Small Business Committee from access to the chairmanship to which he would succeed if not ousted. So the present ranking Republican is steamrollered out of his position, to make room for the Senator whom the leaders favor.

The Senator who is to be steamrollered by Senate Resolution 20 introduced his own resolutions, to offset the threat to his position. But his resolutions have been filed away by the leadership in innocuous desuetude and remain, forgotten and unreported, while Senate Resolution 20 was hurried to the Senate from the Rules Committee so fast that no one had a chance to examine it in committee. Such procedure does not add to the prestige of the Senate or of the majority party.

One sometimes hears talk of party regularity. Regularity for what? To confer some benefit on the party in majority power? What benefit accrues to my party now in control of the Senate, from the creation of these special committees? The party will control all investigations, whether they are assigned to special committees or conducted by standing committees; the Republican Party has a majority in all the committees, standing, and special—if any special committees be created. So the party gains nothing from the creation or continuation of special committees. The only gain which accrues to anyone is to some individual who acquires a chairmanship, or to some other individual who gets a place on a special committee, conflicting thereby with some other Senator of his own party who has a place on a standing committee empowered by statute to investigate the selfsame subject.

So when there is talk of party regularity in these matters, it is not something for the good of the party in control, but for the gain of some individual. Many remarks about party regularity have been directed at me since my speech of January 13. There has been talk of party regularity requiring that Republican Senators shall remain silent about what is being done here. But that "regularity" is not something for the benefit of the Republican Party. Rather it is an attempt to use the party to advance the interests of a few individuals.

There has been talk that regularity requires that Republicans shall vote for these special committees. Again, this is something to help individuals at the expense of the party.

There has been talk that discussion of these issues hurts the party. No; the damage to the party is at the hands of those who seek to use it for their own advancement, through the acquisition of chairmanships and the like. The airing of these issues by Republicans is for the ultimate, long-term good of the party. The public realizes that there are in our party men who adhere to principle, however much true principle is shunted aside for the moment.

I appeal to my fellow Republicans in the Senate to follow their own convictions, to refuse to follow those who are using the party for their own advancement. I appeal to my fellow Republicans to place our party before the people in the light which properly belongs to our party, not in the shadow in which a few men arrange chairmanships and other perquisites.

Speaking of party regularity, I call attention to one circumstance which will greatly interest the State of Iowa. The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] stated in the course of the debate that in the Rules Committee, of which he is a member, he refrained from voting in favor of Senate Resolution 20. That resolution in effect shoves to one side the senior Senator who represents Iowa in the Senate [Mr. WILSON], and in effect says that he is not fit to be the chairman of a committee.

It will be interesting to see how members of my party vote on such an issue and why they think that the smearing in this matter of the senior Senator from Iowa and the great State of Iowa is consistent with party regularity.

The senior Senator from Iowa is a distinguished public servant who has been honored by the State of Iowa in a long series of public offices over a long period of time. He attended rural schools and high school in Iowa. He attended Grinnell College in Iowa and is a graduate of the Law School of the State University of Iowa. He served as county attorney in that State and as district judge in Iowa. He was elected and reelected and reelected to the State Senate in Iowa. He was Governor of the State of Iowa for 4 years. He was elected to the United States Senate by the great State of Iowa.

And now there is pending before the Senate a resolution which would pointedly remove him and discredit him—this man who has been so signally and so justly honored by his own State.

I turn now from this digression. I am almost through. I turn from the discussion of the subject of competence and efficiency in the operation of the affairs of the Senate.

I should like to discuss one other problem raised by the recent proceedings with respect to the two resolutions to create or continue the special committee. Earlier in the course of this statement, I referred to the importance of remembering that we are conducting the business of the Senate and Senate committees, and not merely of those members of the Senate and its committees who belong to the majority party.

I am a Republican, and I desire that my party shall be the majority voice in guiding the ship of state. But I do not wish its guidance to be in disregard of our form of government and of the principles vital to the preservation of our form of government. I would not see them harmed to the extent of one iota. I would not have our form of government subjected to a danger even as narrow as a hair.

Some of the committee and other proceedings with respect to the two resolutions, Senate Resolution 20 and Senate Resolution 46, have involved occasional lapses so that it would almost appear as if only the Republicans in the Senate have anything to do with the business of the Senate, and the Democrats might be brushed to one side. I have already referred to the fact that unnecessarily the minority members of the Committee on Rules and Administration were given no opportunity to have a genuine participation, on the basis of actual study of those resolutions, although they urgently requested that opportunity, which was their right.

Similarly, when the standing committees which had jurisdiction over the subject matter were bypassed, and thereafter negotiations were undertaken with the chairman, or several of the majority members of those standing committees, this was more than a neglect of the Democratic members of those committees. It was really a substitution of activities by Republicans alone, for activities which, under the Constitution as well as under the rules of the Senate, belong to the committees as a whole and not to any one party in them.

And when, after a while, negotiations began between the author of one of these resolutions and the chairman of one of the committees which was bypassed, this was no proper substitute for action of that committee as a whole.

I refer to this matter because of the danger such procedure may bring in its wake. If the majority in power in the Senate on more than one occasion refuses to give the minority members an opportunity for adequate participation or bypasses them altogether, the way is clear for some person or small group in the Senate, of the Republican or Democratic Party, whichever happens to be in power at the moment, to begin to neglect and bypass the members of their own party in the Senate who refuse to be yes men. And once that stage is reached, it would not be long before a ruling clique would begin to brush aside those members of their own party who have been willing to be yes men.

Mr. President, it is better to have these problems out in the open, where the entire public can know about them and express their views on them.

In conclusion, Mr. President, once we get off the hard surface of the right way to do legislative business, onto the soft shoulders, we may end in the mire.

There is just one way of clean government in this matter. Stand by both the letter and spirit of the epochal legislation, the Legislative Reorganization Act, the La Follette-Monroney Act. Let us give it a chance to prove its worth. Let us march with the American people, who from one end of the country to the other have approved this statute, and expect of us and demand of us that we keep the faith.

I submit an amendment to Senate Resolution 20, in the nature of a substitute for it, and I will ask the clerk at the conclusion of my remarks to read my amendment.

Two principal differences between Senate Resolution 20, offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska, and my substitute deserve mention.

My substitute would have the subject of inquiry of small business remain in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, where the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 placed jurisdiction over such subject matter. The junior Senator from Nebraska proposes the creation of a new special committee.

The second difference requires some discussion. The resolution offered by the junior Senator from Nebraska would give his new committee $50,000. My substitute amendment does not call for any appropriation at all at the present moment.

There are two serious objections to the $50,000 provision in the resolution submitted by the junior Senator from Nebraska. I speak on these points, out of the experience which I had as the ranking Republican member on the standing Committee on Audit and Control of the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. My fellow Republicans on that committee were the junior Senator from Illinois and the junior Senator from Nebraska. I am troubled that they should have taken the action they did with respect to Senate Resolution 20, one as its proposer and the other as the chairman of the Rules Committee, in approving the $50,000 request in the face of the ample experience we three received on the Audit and Control Committee.

It was the practice of the Audit and Control Committee to examine requests of investigating committees for funds. We found that the old practice permitted scandalous use and waste of funds and that the old practice in and of itself amounted almost to a scandal. Under the old practice, an investigating committee would ask for $5,000, or $10,000, or $25,000, or $50,000 without making any disclosure such as is necessary in the proper conduct of public affairs and in the grant of public funds. We realized in the Audit and Control Committee that it was imperative, for the protection of the public purse, that any investigating committee which asked for money should give to our committee and to the Senate, and thus to the American taxpayers, a full and detailed statement of why the money was needed, how it was going to use the money required, the salaries involved, the number of days or months to be devoted to the work, the specific subjects of inquiry, and full details justifying every penny of the proposed expenditure.

Under the old, scandalous practice money was granted to investigating committees as the result of a deal, or a trade consummated in the cloakroom, or any back room. That method of doing business made for patronage, not for economy or efficiency.

Our Audit and Control Committee, on which, as I said before, the junior Senator from Nebraska and the junior Senator from Illinois were my colleagues on the Republican side, made great forward steps toward stamping out this practice and to substitute sound methods for the protection of Government money. We began to require full details from all investigating committees before they got their money, as well as after they got their money. Our progress was substantial, although the reform on which we were engaged had not been completed at the time when that committee came to an end, and the present Senate Committee on Rules and Administration took over these functions.

I am appalled to observe that the first action of the Committee on Rules and Administration constitutes a return to the old practice. If the junior Senator from Nebraska has any detailed information, such as should be supplied, let him produce it on the floor of the Senate. Certainly the present Committee on Rules and Administration under the chairmanship of my former colleague [Mr. BROOKS] in safeguarding the funds of the Senate demanded no such details from the junior Senator from Nebraska, and received no such full explanation and justification as we would have required last year and in prior years from any investigating committee that asked for $50,000, or even $5,000.

The second reason for my omission, in my substitute proposal, of any request for funds at this moment, and for my criticism of the request of the junior Senator from Nebraska for $50,000, arises out of a well-known fact about investigations. Those investigations which have continued for some years have collected a large body of data and documents, not yet introduced in hearings. For example, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] told us that his committee has 90 percent of its data. We have learned that at such a stage, it is practicable to analyze and put those documents in their logical order, and publish them without the necessity of formal hearings. Persons affected by the documents which are thus to be published are given full opportunity to offer any supplementary data they deem appropriate, and this also is included in the volumes published by the investigating committee. In this manner, the total cost to the Senate is reduced to $5,000 or less, as against the $50,000 or ultimate expenditure of $100,000 necessitated by public hearings of the ordinary kind and by trips or junkets for any hearings conducted outside of Washington. For the spread or difference in expenditure of public funds, of anywhere from $45,000 to $95,000, the public gets no gain; only a committee chairman or others get the publicity which helps them personally, and the patronage involved in keeping people on the pay roll of the investigating committee.

Why did not the junior Senator from Nebraska ask for $5,000 at this time? If his committee is created, and needs more money, they can get it. I want to see our investigations conducted effectively and thoroughly, and provided with all the funds they need for that purpose, but not to help someone's publicity and patronage needs.

At this time, as many of us know, some of the regular Senate employees, including some of the ablest, are being subjected to a pinchpenny policy. While this is being done to the regulars, are we to let special committees bring in irregulars and pay them as those committees, or more often their chairmen, may desire?

We require every department in the executive branch of the Government, every bureau, every division, every section, every smallest unit, to justify to our appropriation committees every bit of their proposed expenditure, with the most detailed agenda, budget, and details of every description. Can we do that successfully, and at the same time throw all such safeguards of the public purse out of the window when we give funds to a Senator or a few Senators to spend as they will?

If a small business tried to run its affairs on such a basis it would land in the bankruptcy court. So would a big corporation.

We have been crying economy, we have said we are an economy-minded Congress. While we distract the multitude with our breast beating and our speeches for economy, we are asked to take, as our first step, the road of lush and luxurious and unbudgeted and unscrutinized grants of large sums to some favored committee chairmen. We can spend every cent needed for a study of small-business problems, we can spend every cent needed for any and every worthy investigation, without profligacy and without those reckless methods which result in profligacy. Are we ushering in the era of economy, or a period when anything goes?

I shall ask that the material I mentioned earlier be appended at the close of my remarks, and that my amendment be read by the clerk. I have prepared numerous copies of my amendment, so that Senators may have copies before them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 1 and 2, on page 1, and the first two words of line 3, on page 1, and substitute therefor the words "Resolved, That the Banking and Currency Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof."; strike out lines 1 to 16, inclusive, on page 2; strike out the digit "3", in line 17, on page 2, and substituting the digit "2"; and strike out the last three words in line 19, on page 2, and substituting the words "shall give all its data and information to the Banking and Currency Committee", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Banking and Currency Committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. The special committee created pursuant to Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to October 8, 1940, as extended and supplemented, shall give all its data and information to the Banking and Currency Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that his time has expired.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I will give the Senator 5 minutes of my time.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds, will he yield for one question?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I inquire in whose time is the Senator speaking?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] sufficient time to answer the question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Do I not have a right to ask in whose time a Senator is speaking, when the time has been allotted?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Nebraska will not be charged with any time he does not yield to another Senator; so he need not worry.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I think it ought to be made perfectly clear that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has appointed a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency to study the problems of small business.

Mr. TOBEY. The statement of the Senator from Illinois is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In the event the Senate should adopt the pending resolution, there will be a special committee studying small business problems, and a subcommittee of a standing committee studying the same problems. In other words, we shall have the very duplication of effort and overlapping of jurisdiction that caused the passage of the Reorganization Act. That was one of the major factors in bringing about this congressional reform.

Mr. TOBEY. And by that action we make a mockery of the Reorganization Act. I should like to say that on the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee are the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] Three of them, or a majority, are already members of the Small Business Committee.

My amendment asks that the files and data be returned to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the supplementary material referred to a few moments ago by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Resolutions for investigation in 80th Cong. to close of session Jan. 13, 1947

Name of Senator	Number of resolution	Subject matter of investigation	Name of standing committee to which resolution was referred
Senator Downey (for himself and Senator Knowland).	21	Water resources	Public Lands.
Senator McKellar	26	Nashville newspaper acquisition	Judiciary.
Senator Lucas	29	Labor relations	Labor and Public Welfare.
Senator Morse (for himself and Senator Young).	34	Courts martial	Judiciary.
Senator Kilgore	38	Military discipline and justice	Armed Services.
Senator Morse (for himself and Senator Brewster).	40	Petroleum resources	Public Lands.
Senator Langer	41	Number of Federal employees	Civil Service.
Do	42	Cafeteria operations in Government buildings.	Do.
Do	43	Classification of mailable matter	Do.
Senator Revercomb	44	Adequacy of coal car supply	Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
Senator Reed	47	Adequacy of boxcar supply	Do.
Senator Baldwin	51	Sources of sugar supply	Finance.
Senator Morse (for himself and Senator Young).	56	Investigation of courts martial	Armed Services.
Senator Robertson o Wyoming	53	Resolution to continue investigation of wool production, etc., by a special committee, and to obtain additional appropriation.	Rules and Administration.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the investigating committee involved in some of these resolutions was a special committee. Nevertheless in all but one case the resolutions were referred to standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject matter of the investigation, rather than in the first instance to the standing Committee on Rules and Administration.

The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], when he introduced Senate Resolution 34, proposed the creation of a special committee. But on January 13 he stated specifically that he desired to substitute a resolution for the purpose of requiring that the investigation he proposed should be conducted not by a special committee but by the standing committee of the Senate which has jurisdiction over the subject matter under the rules of the Senate. I might add, incidentally, that the exposition he gave of the reasons for avoiding the creation of special committees cannot be surpassed for lucidity.

After Senate Resolution 20, dealing with the investigation of small business, had been introduced by the junior Senator from Nebraska and had been, at his request, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] introduced two resolutions on the selfsame subject. The adoption of either resolution would have automatically ruled out the adoption of the resolution introduced by the junior Senator from Nebraska. Since he had already conferred jurisdiction over his resolution on the Committee on Rules and Administration, the competing resolutions introduced by the senior Senator from Iowa were also sent to that committee. But that committee reported out only the resolution introduced by the junior Senator from Nebraska and took no action on either of the resolutions on the same subject introduced by the senior Senator from Iowa. I might add that both Senators are members of the existing special committee on small business problems.

Two resolutions which do not call for investigations by any committee of the Senate have thus far been introduced and have been referred to the standing committees having jurisdiction over the subject matter rather than to the Committee on Rules and Administration. I present the facts on these two resolutions:

Name of Senator	Number of resolution	Subject matter of investigation	Name of standing committee to which resolution was referred
Senator Hawkes	28	Purchase of military installations	Armed Services.
Senator Wiley	36	International agreements	Foreign Relations.

The appropriate cases in which resolutions are referred, directly after their introduction, to the standing committee on Rules and Administration are illustrated in the transactions of the Senate to date.

Resolutions for amendment of the rules of the Senate are, of course, sent to that standing committee. Twelve such resolutions have been introduced up to the close of the session of January 13 and all were referred to that committee—Nos. 25, 30, 31, 32, 33, 39, 45, 49, 50, 54, 55, and 57.

In addition, resolutions calling for the payment of money for the expenses of Senate committees attending the funerals of former Members of the Senate and for the payment of compensation to employees or their representatives were referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. In this aspect of the work it is the successor to the jurisdiction of the former Audit and Control Committee. Four resolutions of this nature were introduced in the Senate up to the close of the session of January 13 and were referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration—Nos. 22, 27, 37, and 48.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate at this time if the Senator from Nebraska has in mind a Senator on his side who would like to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In whose time is the Senator speaking?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I wish to extend every proper courtesy. Inasmuch as the Senator from New Mexico is on his feet and had addressed the Chair, I am glad to have him proceed and to use his time now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me inquire how the time stands at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has 42 minutes remaining, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] has 90 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, unless the Senator from New Mexico wishes to proceed at this time, I suggest that the Senator from Nebraska use some of his time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall reserve my time until later. I wish to show every courtesy to the Senator from New Mexico, who already has addressed the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Nebraska desire to use some of his time now?

Mr. WHERRY. No; I shall reserve my time.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New Mexico has now taken his seat. So I suggest that the Senator from Nebraska use some of his time now.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that no Senator now asks me to yield time to him, I shall reserve my time until later.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To which side shall the time required by the quorum call be charged?

Mr. LUCAS. If the Chair rules as did the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] the other day, the time required by the quorum call will be charged equally to the two sides. That very question arose the other day at the hour of 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, half of the time required for the quorum call will be charged to each of the two sides; and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Buck	Cooper
Baldwin	Bushfield	Cordon
Ball	Butler	Donnell
Barkley	Cain	Downey
Brewster	Capehart	Dworshak
Bricker	Capper	Eastland

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. To whom does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as a rule I do not like to indulge in what might be termed a post mortem. Day before yesterday the Senate voted to continue the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. During the course of the debate many things were said about that committee, and many things were said about Senators who had no knowledge or information about the committee, its origin or its work. Now today, at the beginning of the discussion of the pending resolution, which is akin to the one the Senate adopted day before yesterday, I wish to refer to the origin and history of the so-called Truman committee. It has been referred to in the Senate as an investigating committee as though it had been designed and created to inquire into fraud and corruption in war contracts.

Mr. President, I was a member of the Truman committee. For 4 years I served with the distinguished Senator who was the first chairman of that committee, the man who is now President of the United States. My service did not begin immediately with the organization of the committee, but it did begin within a month or so afterward.

It has been said the committee was organized during the war. That, Mr. President, is not accurate. I may say in passing that our former colleague, the then Senator from Missouri, Mr. Truman, long before the war, many months before Pearl Harbor, realized that danger was approaching and that the war which was raging abroad would without question involve this country, and, being a man of military experience, having served as captain of artillery in the First World War, Senator Truman wanted to serve his country. It is a matter of common knowledge that he offered his services for active duty to General Marshall, and that General Marshall, diplomat that he was, and is, declined the offer, saying that Senator Truman could better serve his country in the Senate. Senator Truman laughingly said that General Marshall was most kind. The truth of the matter was that Senator Truman was too old to serve as an active officer in the war, and for that reason his services were declined.

Being a man of determination, of altogether patriotic design and motive, Senator Truman studied and thought as to how he could best serve his country. He came to the conclusion that there was a necessity for a Senate committee to be constituted to serve in the national defense. I emphasize the words "the national defense," because that was the name of the committee and service in the national defense was its purpose.

It may be asked why Senator Truman did not seek to have the Committee on Military Affairs conduct the study and research and undertake the work which his special committee was authorized to cover. I think I may say I had the confidence of Senator Truman, and that I can answer that question accurately, because we discussed it many times.

At the time Senator Truman offered his resolution, the Reorganization Act had not been passed. Jurisdictions of standing committees had not been defined, standing committees had not been consolidated, and Senator Truman knew that if the Committee on Military Affairs attempted the investigation and the work, there would be conflict with the Committee on Naval Affairs. So he conceived the idea of a special committee, with jurisdiction authorized by the Senate, to investigate into, and to strengthen, if you please, the war effort.

Mr. President, that was the purpose of the Truman committee, and that was the reason why it was authorized. I regretted to see the incoming chairman of the committee surrender and throw away, as he did, the main purpose of the Committee on the National Defense. I make no charge, but it is perfectly obvious that the amendment limiting the jurisdiction of the special committee to expenditures was offered in order to obtain the necessary votes to continue the special committee. In my opinion, those who advocated this change went too far. I believe the surrender was too great. I think they gave away jurisdiction which the special committee should have if it is to function as a true investigating committee.

Let me give one instance in point. Members of the committee, I am sure, will bear me out in the statement I am about to make. When I was a member I insisted that the special committee devote a great deal of its time and a great deal of its talent to investigating the disposal of surplus property which arose from the war effort. That is an essential part of the committee's activities if it is to be continued. Yet under the limitation of authority which has now been imposed on it, I do not think the committee can do that work. It is not involved in a question of expenditure at all, and the proponents of a continuation of the committee have surrendered one of the most valuable functions and parts of their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, the Senate has already acted on and adopted the resolution; it has already authorized the continuation of the special committee. I think its jurisdiction should be sufficiently broad and sufficiently strong to enable it to do good work. So if the Senators on the committee will study their resolution, and the limitation which they themselves proposed, and come here and say, "We gave away too much jurisdiction"—as they did, if they are to do good work—"and we want to broaden our jurisdiction at least so as to take in the question of surplus property," I shall vote for such an extension of authority, because if the Senate is to have a special committee, the special committee should be a good committee, it should be a strong committee, and it should not be hampered or hindered by restrictions upon its jurisdiction.

So I suggest to the members of the majority party that they come forward and frankly say, "We went too far; we gave away too much jurisdiction. We would like to have our jurisdiction extended." If they will do that, I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator referred to surplus property. Was he referring to the investigation of the disposition of surplus property?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. AIKEN. If he was, I should like to advise him, as well as the Senate, that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has already made arrangements, under the authority granted it by the law, to make a comprehensive investigation of the disposal of surplus property, and the able junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is the chairman of the group which will make the investigation.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator. I am very happy to have that information from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, but that is merely one more example of what is taking place in the Senate now in violation of the Reorganization Act. I do not think the Committee on Expenditures has jurisdiction of the subject we have been discussing, but it is immaterial whether it has or not. I know the special committee will very likely go into that subject, and, as was pointed out awhile ago, we are going to have two or three committees investigating the same subject, going over the same matter. That is what I meant when I said it was in violation of the spirit and intent and object of the Reorganization Act.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator, although I am speaking under a limitation of time.

Mr. AIKEN. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is vested with the authority to do this work under the law, and there will be no need whatsoever for any other committee to undertake to duplicate the work which our committee is going to do.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield for merely one remark?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I wish to advise the Senator that it is the purpose of the subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to cooperate with the House Committee on Executive Expenditures, so there will not be a duplication, but the work will be done jointly, as if by one committee.

Mr. HATCH. As I have said, Mr. President, I do not desire to argue matters of that kind. The inadvisability of designating special committees has already developed. There is no question about what was intended by the Legislative Reorganization Act. That has been debated so long and so effectively that it is hardly necessary to renew the old arguments. But as a lawyer and as one who has made some study of and research into the terms of the Reorganization Act and into the general law covering the subject, I should like to have the opportunity of standing before a court, arguing the intent and purpose of the Reorganization Act, and obtaining an unbiased and unprejudiced opinion from men trained in the law, whether or not special committees are authorized or intended by that act. I should welcome such an opportunity.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, Senators speak glibly—and I use that term inoffensively—as though no Reorganization Act had been passed. They do not realize that a complete revolution has occurred in the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], chairman of the steering committee, argued that it had been the custom in the past to set up special committees, and he enumerated as, I recall, about four. Of course that had been the custom. Of course it had been done. Of course the Democrats had done it during the time they were in power; but those were the very evils at which the Reorganization Act was directed. Can there be any doubt about that, Mr. President? Any person who reads the debates that took place, who reads the reports of the committees, who reads the newspapers, knows that that was what was intended.

The committee work of the Senate has been so heavy throughout the years that, under the old rules and the old practice, none of us could properly discharge our duties on all the committees to which we had been assigned. It was to get away from that evil, to get away from that very condition, that the law was passed and the limitation provided that no Senator should serve on more than two committees, with the exception of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, whose members might serve on three committees.

One may argue until he is black in the face that it was not intended to do away with special committees, but nevertheless reason and intelligence and knowledge of the conditions that existed all must lead to the conviction that it was the intention that Senators should serve upon two committees only. Whether they be standing committees or whether they be special committees the result is the same. If a Senator served on two standing committees and on five special committees—which I understand is contemplated—there would recur the same old evil which resulted from the former practice, and nothing would have been accomplished through the passage of the Reorganization Act except to increase the salaries of the Senators themselves and to create for themselves a retirement fund.

Perhaps, Mr. President, those are harsh words. They are plain words, and I speak what I believe to be the absolute truth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield further time to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield 5 minutes more to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I could not finish what I might say on this subject in 5 minutes or 50 minutes. I think probably I should now conclude my remarks and let some other Senator take the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I respectfully submit to the Senator from Nebraska, inasmuch as he has an hour and a half and I have, I think, about 22 minutes only, that he use some of his remaining time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] would now like to take 10 minutes of the time allotted to this side, if that is agreeable.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is very agreeable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska yields 10 minutes to the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall consume 10 minutes, but I have some very definite views on the pending resolution. Reference has been made to the activity of the Republican steering committee and what happened there, and likewise to the impropriety, as alleged, of submitting and urging the adoption of this resolution, because of the Congressional Reorganization Act.

I wish to assume my full share of responsibility in both instances. I was on the committee that helped draft the Reorganization Act, and I am a member of the Republican steering committee. I was glad to be recorded as being in favor of continuation of the Small Business Committee. That committee was brought into being as a result of the war. It was established as a result of the necessities of war channeling into big business the greatest opportunity to control the industry of this Nation that has ever occurred within my entire lifetime.

When I hear the Democrats on the other side, or Republicans on this side, complaining because Republicans wish to continue the Small Business Committee, I desire to remind every Member of the Senate that ever since 1932 I have heard the deluge of propaganda that came like the rain, year in and year out, charging that the Republican Party represented only big business. We were charged constantly with representing the "upper 10 percent." There was a theme that was followed in the press, on the platform, on the radio—everywhere—that the Republican Party represented the "upper 10 percent," the "well-entrenched minority," "the earls of privilege," "the barons of finance," the "60 families," the "200 corporations." Now, when the Republican Party, and I as a member of the steering committee, taking my share of the responsibility, wish to continue the fine activity of the Small Business Committee, it is amazing to see those on the other side solidly desiring to stop us from representing and giving small business its ample opportunity to have a forum where it and the myriad businessmen who conduct it may come to present their cause.

Why should there be a special committee for that purpose? I would state this as my reason—that during the war it was the big corporations that the Government supported. The Government gave to big corporations any number of millions of dollars to increase their plants. The Government constructed their buildings; it supplied their machinery; everything was channeled through the big corporations of the country to speed war production. Who got hurt? It was the little corporation, the small business, bound up in edicts, and directives, and regulations, and restrictions, and restraints, and rationings. Through the channeling of available material small business was tangled and strangled. Then the small corporations, the small businesses of the Nation, said, "Give us a voice. Give us a forum where we may be heard."

No standing committee could have represented or could have heard their cause. We set up, under the then majority leadership, when the Democratic Party was in the majority, this special committee. We supported the Special Small Business Committee, so that the small companies could come to the Nation's capital and not be forced to appeal to individual Senators or to the limited jurisdiction of any one committee, but could go to a committee set up for their protection, where they might present their cause. So long as the administration hangs on to the wartime regulations and restrictions, and so long as there are the bureaus still issuing their edicts and their restraining orders, it would be better to keep this committee alive, if we are going to keep small business alive in America.

That is my reason for wanting this special committee to continue. I do not want it to continue forever, but I believe it should continue until we change the bureaucratic policy of retaining war controls on small business in America. No standing committee can hear all the complaints that small business may have to make, but the special committee has done an excellent job. That was while the majority of the committee represented the other side of the Chamber. I say that now is the time for the Republican Party to represent the small business of the Nation. It ill befits the party which has condemned the Republican Party all these years for representing what they call property rights instead of human rights, big business instead of small business, now in effect to say, "No, we do not want to let you Republicans go forward with this work and represent little business, to erect a forum where the little businessmen of America may present their case."

When the vote is cast today we will ascertain who stands for the survival of that life blood of America—small business. Small business cannot have the benefit of machines and buildings we paid for with Government money. Small business is not large enough to buy them.

In the last 15 years, under the Democratic regime, industry has become more concentrated and powerful than at any other time in the history of America. I for one, Mr. President, want to assume my full responsibility as a member of the Republican Party, as a member of the steering committee, and as a member of the committee which drafted the Reorganization Act. I hope the special committee shall be permitted to live and to function.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire how much time I have?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has 19 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had 42 minutes a while ago and yielded 20. What has become of the other 3 minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were used for the calling of the roll to establish a quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was the calling of the roll for a quorum taken out of my time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That time was divided half and half.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not complaining. I may not even use the 19 minutes I have.

It is interesting to observe the reason given by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] for his enthusiasm for the continuance of this committee—not the continuance of the committee by the way, but for the creation of a new committee. I do not know whether his enthusiastic advocacy of this particular resolution will absolve him or his associates from any responsibility for heretofore being too friendly to big business. I am not concerned about that. If it does, well and good. But I have not yet had a sufficient answer to satisfy me as to why the two resolutions which have caused so much controversy in the Senate during the last 2 weeks were not based upon the same idea. Those of us on this side of the Chamber, and on the other side also, who have opposed these resolutions, as I have undertaken to point out heretofore, have not done so on account of any fear or any desire, ulterior or otherwise, to conceal something from anybody.

I do not wish to indulge in any partisan references, but constantly the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who seems to be entering a beauty contest of some kind, judging from the reports in the newspapers the last day or two, as between Republican pulchritude and Democratic lack of it, have constantly intimated that there is something ulterior in our attitude on this side of the aisle in regard to these resolutions. I do not think it can be correctly stated that the party which had the majority in the Senate for so long, and which initiated and inaugurated all these committees and all these investigations, the result of which is well known, has now suddenly been overcome with fear and trepidation lest something may be revealed.

In Senate Resolution 46 the Republican majority continued the existing Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. They did not create a new committee. They did not fire the old committee, as they are doing in this resolution with respect to the old Small Business Committee. They extended its power and thereby automatically provided that the chairmanship of that committee should go to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

If the Republican majority had done the same thing with respect to Senate Resolution 20 and had continued the Small Business Committee, automatically the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] would have become the chairman of that committee. But in order to get around that, in order to sidetrack him, in order to shelve him as the chairman of the committee, which he would have become if it had been continued, they propose to abolish that committee and create a new one with the understanding that the author of the resolution will be the chairman of the committee. The usual custom followed here is that when a committee is created the author of the resolution creating it is made the chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, probably it is regarded as none of my business as to who should be chairman of the committees of the Senate when the majority on the other side will determine that matter. I am not mentioning it in order that I may have any influence or any control over that matter, because I have no such intention or purpose; but there is not a finer type of gentleman in the Senate of the United States than the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. Why should he have been sidetracked? Why should this legislative legerdemain, to use no worse term, have been indulged in in order to get rid of him as the automatic chairman? It may be a matter wholly within the jurisdiction of the present Republican majority, but nevertheless it is a matter of some curiosity to me. If there is any other reason why the existing Small Business Committee should not have been continued, I have not heard it. I doubt whether we will. So much for that.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield briefly.

Mr. HATCH. I have heard it rumored that there were too many Democrats on the Small Business Committee as now constituted; that the Republicans would not have had a majority, and, therefore, in order to get rid of the Democrats on the committee it was necessary to create a new committee. That is mere rumor and gossip. I do not know whether it is true. I am authorized, however, by at least two or three Democratic members of the Small Business Committee to say that they would have been perfectly willing to have resigned so as to have given the Republican Party its necessary majority on that committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the absence of any satisfactory explanation for the different treatment of this committee from that of the other, the reason offered by the Senator from New Mexico is as logical as any other that has been given or probably that could be given. So much, Mr. President, for that.

The Senator from Nebraska has offered an amendment to his resolution modifying it by limiting the committee in time to 240 days as I recall. I suppose he was attempting to approximate 8 months. I do not know whether it occurred to him or not, but it seems to me that if the resolution is to be adopted it ought to provide that the life of the committee shall end when under the Reorganization Act the first session of the Eightieth Congress must end, not later than the 31st day of July. Under the Reorganization Act, unless the Nation is engaged in war or there is an emergency declared by the President, the sessions of Congress automatically terminate on the 31st day of July. I see no reason why, even if this committee is continued, or a new one is established, it should go beyond the session of Congress in which we are now engaged. I offer that as a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska, in the matter of fixing the time.

The resolution requires the committee to report to Congress its findings and recommendations for legislation; but after it has made its findings and recommendations it cannot report a bill to the Senate. Whatever legislation it recommends must be properly introduced and then referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The special committee is not a legislative committee. It cannot report a bill. It may make a recommendation for legislation, but it cannot report a bill; and no bill introduced can be referred to it. Every proposal for legislation recommended by the committee at the termination of its life must then be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which the Senator from New Hampshire is chairman. That committee must then consider the legislative proposal, taking advantage of whatever information the Small Business Committee may assemble. But it must consider the legislation ab initio. It may hold additional hearings. If a bill dealing with small business were introduced while the Committee on Small Business was still in existence, under the rules that bill would have to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, even though the bill were introduced before the Committee on Small Business had reported.

The Committee on Small Business, as proposed to be established, could not lend money to any small business enterprise. That is the function of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency in regard to legislation. The Committee on Small Business could not enforce the antitrust laws against large combinations which are seeking to drive small business out of the field. Legislation on that subject would go to the Committee on the Judiciary. The enforcement of the antitrust laws now upon the statute books is a problem of the Department of Justice, or the Federal Trade Commission, under certain circumstances, when matters are brought before that Commission.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. That is one of the things which has impressed me. At least half a dozen committees or agencies are required in order to handle the jurisdictional problems of small business.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Small Business Committee cannot be a part of the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Neither can subcommittees of the standing committees.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. Neither can the Small Business Committee act on legislation. It can only submit a report recommending legislation, and its report and recommendation must go to some standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. That is true. There are several other committees which would have to make separate reports.

Mr. BARKLEY. It all depends upon the legislation proposed. I suppose from now on antitrust legislation will go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Legislation undertaking to help business, or to make loans to business through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation, or any other agency for lending money, must be handled by the Committee on Banking and Currency. No matter what the special committee might report, the legislation would have to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency for consideration. Inasmuch as that committee must consider legislation, inasmuch as no committee of the Senate can take charge of an executive department and become a part of the executive branch of the Government, and inasmuch as all investigations are theoretically based upon the idea that legislation will come out of them, why not refer such questions to the committee which must deal with the legislation? It seems to me that the position taken by the Senator from New Hampshire, who is the very active, able, and conscientious chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is eminently sound. It has been my pleasure to serve with him on that committee for a long time. I wish to pay tribute to the Senator from New Hampshire by saying that in the consideration of all questions which have come before the Committee on Banking and Currency he has taken a broad, American, statesmanlike view of them, without regard to partisan differences. I have faith enough in him to believe that he will continue that course. It is the proper course for the great Committee on Banking and Currency, which is more economic than political in its make-up, its thought, and its jurisdiction. For that reason I shall vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, how much time have I?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Six minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield if the Senator from Missouri will be very brief.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall try to be brief.

I observe that in his proposed substitute the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] authorizes the Committee on Banking and Currency "to study and survey by means of research all problems of American small business enterprises." However, I understand that the Senator from Kentucky, who proposes to support this amendment, has indicated that various subdivisions of the problems of American small business would go to numerous subcommittees of the various standing committees—perhaps the Committee on the Judiciary, perhaps the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and perhaps other committees which might be mentioned. Does the Senator from Kentucky consider that all the problems of American small business enterprises, to use the language of the Tobey amendment, belong to the subject matter embraced in the description of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency, as outlined in the La Follette-Monroney Act?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator had been listening to me he would have heard me say that, so far as the antitrust laws are concerned, or any amendments thereto, dealing not only with small business but with any business, such questions would come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary, which has always handled such legislation. Of course, the resolution would authorize the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate all phases of small business. When it comes to actual legislation it would have jurisdiction of only that part of the legislation set out in the rules.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Tobey proposal provide for a study and survey of all the problems pertaining to American small business enterprises? In the judgment of the Senator, does not a very large part of the problems of American small business relate to problems other than fiscal problems, which are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency? I can give numerous illustrations if the Senator desires.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not time for the Senator to give numerous illustrations. I suppose the Senator from New Hampshire had in mind that while the Committee on Banking and Currency should have jurisdiction under his resolution to investigate all subjects connected with small business, that committee would report only such legislation dealing with those subjects as the committee had jurisdiction to report, and it would not undertake to invade the jurisdiction of other committees.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator if he will be kind enough to yield for a further question along the same line?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator has yielded to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield a little time, I shall be glad to yield further.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. That will not do me much good.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator when I had only 6 minutes remaining, on the condition that he would ask a brief question. He has not complied with that requirement.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall try to comply with the requirement of brevity.

I ask the Senator whether it is a fact that in the Tobey resolution or amendment there is no limitation whatsoever as to the scope of the legislation with respect to which the Committee on Banking and Currency is to make recommendations. In that connection I read this language——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I know what the amendment provides. I have read it; and I am sure that the great constitutional lawyer from Missouri can understand it as well as I can. It will not be necessary to explain it.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate the compliment.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that what the Senator says is true, that it is an omnium gatherum, a sort of grab bag of investigation. It does not increase the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency to report legislation, which is its function.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I decline to yield further to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator from Kentucky that, regardless of the argument made by the Senator from Missouri, which I think is a sound argument, either of the two committees could go into all phases of the problems of small-business enterprises. But when the time came to legislate, the special committee could not report legislation on any phase of the problem. It would have to turn its report over to the standing committees; whereas if the investigation were made by the Committee on Banking and Currency, a large part of the field covered by the investigation could be handled within that committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot yield further. I have only another minute or two. Admitting that under the terms of the Tobey substitute, the Banking and Currency Committee could go into the entire field of troubles afflicting small business, when it came to legislate it would, out of the mass of testimony and proposed legislation which it covered, sift out that which was necessary for legislation and report it to the Senate.

On the other hand, under the resolution we are now considering, assuming that the Committee on Small Business went into the same field, if it recommended certain legislation to the Senate, even if it recommended a bill or a dozen bills, they would then have to be referred to the standing committee having jurisdiction of the subject.

So, Mr. President, in the interest of efficiency, economy, and orderly legislation, it seems to me to be common sense to refer to the committee having jurisdiction of substantive legislation the investigation necessary to bring out the facts which will show what legislation is needed; for, in the absence of legislation, neither the Small Business Committee nor any other committee can for very long do any legislative business or any other kind of business, because we must give our attention to the law, and not to an effort to substitute a committee of Congress for an executive department, whether it be the Department of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Export-Import Bank, or any other agency which deals with the financial set-up of business, whether it be large or small.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I have supported the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. If it be rejected, I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, there are no other Senators to speak on our side of the question. Therefore, we request an immediate vote on the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the announcement of the Senator from Nebraska, all time for both sides has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to Senate Resolution No. 20.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to Senate Resolution No. 20. The Senate has agreed to vote upon the amendments en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments offered by Mr. WHERRY, as agreed to, are as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the words "Eightieth Congress", insert "for a period of 240 days after the date this resolution is agreed to."

On page 2, line 19, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "as of January 31, 1947: Provided, That the authority of such special committee to hold hearings and conduct investigations shall terminate on the date this resolution is agreed to."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

Does the Senator from New Hampshire desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes; I shall appreciate having that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of 12 Senators, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, is hereby authorized and directed to study and survey by means of research all the problems of American small business enterprises, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest, but which would aid the Congress in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall begin its study and research survey as soon as practicable and shall continue and prosecute such study and research survey expeditiously and with all possible dispatch and shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable with recommendations for legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate during the Eightieth Congress for a period of 240 days after the date of this resolution is agreed to, to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to request such information from any departments and agencies of the Government, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report the educational material and data on such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expense of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

SEC. 3. The special committee created pursuant to Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to October 8, 1940, as extended and supplemented, is hereby terminated as of January 31, 1947: Provided, That the authority of such special committee to hold hearings and conduct investigations shall terminate on the date this resolution is agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I know of no legislative matter now ready for consideration by the Senate, and therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I may say that upon the disposition of the business on the Executive Calendar I propose to move that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if there is no further executive business, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the Senate has been regaled with a discussion of the manner in which our business has been conducted, with particular reference to the activities of the Senator from Maine and one or two others. I had the opportunity of looking at much of the material, and it seems to be primarily concerned with the discussion of the methods and the motives which prevailed in the consideration of the matter just disposed of.

The descent to a discussion of the motives of Senators immediately reduces the Senate to the scale of other bodies with which, in my judgment, we do not care to associate ourselves. So that for myself I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss the details of whether or not the motives of Senators are what they should be.

I do, however, want to read into the RECORD at this time what is my final and complete statement as to a descent of this character into the motive of Senators who come here presumably in the public interest and motivated on all sides by a desire to accomplish public good. Without arrogating to myself any resemblance to the distinguished citizen of America who uttered these words, even in a very minuscule manner, I should like to read them as expressing my attitude toward a discussion of motives, and what I hope and believe is the attitude of most of the other members of this body.

These are the words of Abraham Lincoln, when he was under considerable attack as to his motives:

> If I were to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the very best I know how, the very best I can, and I mean to keep on doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, 10 angels swearing I was right would make no difference.

With that I leave what I hope may be the end of the discussion of motives of Senators on either side of the aisle, and in the hope that we may go forward in the discussion of the public business without attributing to any Member of this body motives which are improper or low.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, previously during this debate I expressed myself about the Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program. I expressed the hope that that committee might continue. I expressed my own willingness to vote to give the committee additional authority which I thought the Senator from Maine had erroneously surrendered.

I do not know what the Senator means when he talks about motives. I certainly did not charge the Senator with any improper motives, but I am glad to say now——

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly had no reference whatsoever to anything the Senator from New Mexico said. I heard much of the remarks of the Senator, and I appreciated very deeply the suggestion as to the broadening of the scope of our committee and its responsibility. There was not a word which I heard the Senator utter—and I was quite in accord with his attitude at all times on public business—that would indicate in any way that he questioned the motives of any Member of this body.

Mr. HATCH. Anyway, Mr. President, regardless of that—and I do not know what the Senator from Maine meant—I wish to make a statement now, because I desire the Senator's committee to be strong; I desire it to be a good committee, and I am going to tell the Senator that the strength and the sinew of the Truman committee consisted in the complete nonpartisan approach which President Truman, then Senator Truman, gave to every problem that came before him.

I say very frankly to the Senator from Maine that when I heard here on the floor of the Senate for the first time the article published in the American magazine (sic) and read by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], an article which was based altogether upon an executive session of the committee, I thought the committee was stooping to party politics. I want to say further that when I also read that the Republican National Committee had released a so-called report which was given to it by the Senator from Maine 5 days before the election, and which had been prepared originally in 1942 by one investigator of the staff, and which had been rejected by the general counsel, Mr. Fulton, because it contained no factual data whatever, but was the mere opinion of the one investigator, and then later when a new general counsel was appointed, Mr. Halley, and the same investigator submitted the same inconclusive and unsupported report, Mr. Halley rejected it because it was not supported by factual data—when the Senator from Maine, through the Republican National Committee, then released that as a report of the committee, which had been suppressed—and that was the press statement——

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine will state the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that in what the Senator from New Mexico is now saying, directed at my colleague, the junior Senator from Maine, he is indulging in a reflection on him, prohibited by the rules. I think he is challenging the motives and the purposes of my colleague, and I make the point that he is out of order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, is the point of order debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I move that the Senator from New Mexico proceed in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is in order and is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico will proceed in order.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Maine. I am presently going to give some good advice. That is what I am leading up to.

Mr. BREWSTER. I appreciate the spirit in which the Senator from New Mexico always speaks.

I appreciate the interest of my colleague from Maine in his desire to protect what he felt were possibly my interests, and also his regard for the proprieties of this body; but while I might perhaps be more sensitive than anyone else, I am not prepared to challenge the Senator from New Mexico in what he has said.

I contemplated taking 2 or 3 minutes to answer what I felt was a very appropriate discussion by the Senator from New Mexico regarding the two episodes of which he speaks; but at this point I might say I think the suggestion that the publication in the Liberty magazine—I am sure the Senator from New Mexico does not wish to do an injustice to either Liberty or the American magazine—it was Liberty——

Mr. HATCH. Did I say American magazine?

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator did.

Mr. HATCH. I meant Liberty magazine.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator will stand corrected. "Liberty" is a very good name.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it less American than the other one?

Mr. BREWSTER. The publication was in Liberty. I am not in the class with the Senator from Kentucky, as yet.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was merely asking whether that was less American than the other one.

Mr. BREWSTER. The publication in Liberty certainly had a political connotation, as the Senator from New Mexico properly says, it having appeared 1 week before the election. The only point that I should enter in my own behalf in the situation is that for the preceding 3 months, as I stated on the floor the other day, the material represented in the charges of a colonel in our Intelligence Service who had spent the last 2 years in Germany had, as I felt, been unjustly and improperly suppressed by the committee, of which I was a member, by a committee which in the four preceding years of its history had never had a divided report, either when the Senator from New Mexico or his successors were serving on it, and that for the first time last summer, in the feverish days of the campaign, with the chairman of our committee a candidate for Governor of the great State of New York, what seemed to me the ugly head of politics obtruded itself; the decisions of that committee were unfortunately being involved in the campaign; whereas, in the two preceding campaigns, while the committee was under the chairmanship of Senator Truman, we had never had a question of politics raised, but our committee had remained comparatively inactive for the 2 or 3 months immediately before an election.

It was to me a matter of profound regret that the committee should have had its standard to some extent trailing in the dust.

Mr. HATCH. That is right. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. BREWSTER. For my part in it, I am ready to take full responsibility. Whether or not I performed my duty as a Senator or as a citizen must remain for each one to determine. I am ready to accept the opprobrium which the Senator may cast upon me, but I say to him that it was the Senator's own colleagues on his side of the aisle who in my judgment first precipitated the issue, and that I delayed 3 months before I felt the people of the United States were entitled to know those charges which had been made.

As to the other item, the housing report, as the Senator, himself, has said, it had been on file with our committee in one instance for 3 years; in the other instance, for 1 year.

Meanwhile in the State of New York the former chairman of our committee, the candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket, was making the welkin ring with charges against the Governor of New York, forsooth, because he did not solve the housing problem. Unlike some of our associates, I have read the records of our committee, so I do not accept the statement of either the first general counsel of the committee or the second general counsel as to whether the reports in question were of a character entitled to consideration. From my own experience I was convinced that they contained material fully documented in accordance with the experience of our committee, which entitled them to consideration by the members of the committee, which, on the statement of the Senator from New Mexico, they had not yet received though they had been disapproved by the first counsel of the committee and by the second counsel of the committee. Forsooth, for what does our committee exist? Certainly for the members of the committee to act upon such reports. I have read those reports. They were documented. In the final analysis it seems to me that the people were entitled to know what the reports contained before they were compelled to listen further to what seemed to me to be the unwarranted and the unfounded charges of one who had so recently been the chairman of our committee, who spoke from a forum here in Washington throughout the early days of the campaign, with the Mead committee constantly the medium through which these campaign documents were released.

The Senator from New Mexico spoke of the Republican National Committee. I would rather take upon myself the garments of the Republican National Committee, if I were going to enter the political arena, than to clothe myself in the habiliments of the Truman and the Mead committee, which was the guise under which the chairman of that committee at that time was running for political office in the State of New York.

So forsooth, I released the housing report, and for it I have no apology in this forum or elsewhere.

I regret that politics entered our ranks. I hope that we may now go forward and continue the record made prior to the last 6 months in the great spirit of that committee under the chairmanship of the man who is now President of the United States. It will be my earnest endeavor, with the cooperation of those who may be associated with me upon either side, to restore, so far as possible, the splendid record which that committee made prior to the last 6 months.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Do I have the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I was glad to yield to the Senator from Maine. I was very happy to give him the opportunity to make any explanation he might desire as to the reasons why he as a member of that committee wrote an article for a national publication, an article based upon facts which had not been verified, but which had only come to the committee by the unsupported testimony of one man, in executive session, information which the Senator from Maine heralded throughout the Nation as evidence that the Truman administration has failed.

Ah, Mr. President, the Senator may stand here on the floor of the Senate and make any explanation he desires, but I leave to him and to his own conscience the decision as to whether or not he injected party politics into the Truman committee.

Mr. President, I do not want anyone to charge me with being out of order, because as I stated in the beginning, what I rose to say was that the strength and sinew of the Truman committee had been its complete nonpartisanship. I served on it with the Senator from Maine and with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and we worked, I thought, with some degree of patriotism for the welfare of our country. Party politics did not enter into the question. I recall, as I look at the Senator from Michigan, that one time he and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] investigated an airplane factory in Ohio, and discovered methods of inspection which were so lax that motors were permitted to be installed in planes that carried our fighting men which were dangerous to the lives of those men. I recall that the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from West Virginia revealed those defects, which were almost criminal. I think that as a result of that work there are American boys at home now safe who might otherwise be resting in that last long sleep on foreign soil.

Mr. President, I am proud of the Truman committee. I am proud of my connection with it. I am proud of my work with the Republican members of it. I want that same attitude continued. I do not want partisan articles written for a national magazine. I do not want reports released through either the Republican National Committee or the Democratic National Committee. I rose to say to the new chairman that he has a great opportunity. The Senator from Maine has a chance to uncover fraud and corruption and wrongdoing wherever it exists, and be assured, sir, it will not be alone Democratic fraud, it will not be alone Democratic wrongdoing.

The only point I make is that I want a good job done. The Senator from Maine does have the opportunity to do it. I do not mean this offensively, but if he, as chairman of the committee, will follow in the footsteps of the man who was the committee's first chairman, he will not go wrong.

Mr. President, it has been said here that the publicity and the headlines given to Harry Truman made him Vice President and resulted in his becoming President of the United States. I do not choose to look upon it in that light. Rather I would say, as a tribute to a conscientious public servant, that the fine, nonpartisan, courageous manner in which Senator Truman conducted the affairs of the committee was recognized by a grateful people, and they gave him a just reward and said to him "Well done, good and faithful servant."

I hope the new chairman will conduct himself in that spirit and in the same way.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico, and I shall certainly heed his advice, as I want to continue the character of service which our former colleague rendered throughout the period he served on that committee. It will be my highest hope that the committee, under its new membership, with the four Members who will be associated with me from the other side of the aisle, may be able to recapture and to justify the confidence of the Senate and the country.

I think we all realize that graft and corruption are thoroughly nonpartisan.

STATEMENT BY WILLIAM B. ZIFF, COCHAIRMAN OF NATIONAL EXECUTIVE BOARD OF AMERICAN LEAGUE FOR A FREE PALESTINE

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a press release by William B. Ziff, cochairman of the National Executive Board of the American League for a Free Palestine. Mr. Ziff is perhaps the outstanding expert in the entire United States on questions dealing with Palestine.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have accepted the position of cochairman of the National Executive Board of the American League for a Free Palestine, in the belief that it affords me a very great opportunity to be of service to my fellow Americans and to the great cause of human freedom with which American world interests are directly related.

Mr. Truman, Mr. Byrnes, and all other spokesmen for our Republic have made it clear that we no longer can ignore unilateral acts of terror and despoliation imposed by force on small nations, and that the interests of our country demand an adherence to the principles of international law and international morality. The case of Palestine is a test case of these professions.

Hebrew Palestine is unique in the sense that it is the ward of all the nations. Under the assumption that international law existed, the charter for Hebrew Palestine was issued by unanimous agreement of 52 nations. These appointed one of their number, Great Britain, to be the guardian of Hebrew interests and to be responsible for an orderly repatriation of the dispossessed Hebrew people. American interests and consent were covered in a special treaty signed in 1922.

The object of the nations was to settle a terrible problem whose magnitude has since been shown in the mass murder of almost 8,000,000 Jews in Europe. Great Britain was instructed to facilitate the repatriation of the Hebrew people and their close settlement on the land of Palestine. Instead the emissaries of His Majesty's Government instituted a reign of terror in Palestine and made themselves a leading party to a gigantic conspiracy to nullify the very purposes for whose fulfillment Great Britain had been appointed.

Palestine is now the only nation in the world where officially promulgated anti-Semitic laws openly operate. Jews may be seized on the streets, shot, or exiled to concentration camps in far-away Africa without benefit of trial or even charge. A whole set of vicious regulations exist which deprive the Jewish population of basic human rights. Just as in the pale in Czarist Russia, because a man is a Jew he may not own or till land in his own country except in certain small, restricted areas. Looting and personal maltreatment by soldiers and police is an everyday occurrence.

The result was what might be expected. The answer to this terrorism was a counterviolence on the part of young patriots determined to remain free or die. In Palestine is being repeated all of the circumstances which a generation ago shook Ireland and which a century and a half ago resulted in the American Revolution. Just as the Irish and American resistance forces were libeled and traduced as terrorists, so are the young Hebrew patriots of Palestine.

It seems perfectly clear that the interests of America demand a pacification of the world based on an honest and honorable settlement of problems, and that the substitution of guns for law involves a frightening process which will one day inevitably involve the world in the most terrifying and destructive of all its wars.

There must now be an end to bloodshed and to the corruptions and terrors which proceed from oppression.

Each of the great British leaders has acknowledged for the record that the present British policy is dishonorable and violates fundamental law. Yet in an effort to justify this indefensible program, British officials are taking up where Hitler left off and are making themselves the spokesmen and organizers of world-wide anti-Semitic as well as anti-Zionist opinion.

No part of this grim situation may safely go unchallenged. The British rape of Palestine is no different in its relation to world peace than the German rape of Czechoslovakia. It is simply a case of cold greed and boundless ambition against the common rights and interests of humankind.

It is also a fact that any considered and sensible policy on the part of the United States demands the establishment in the Near and Middle East of a strong, industrialized republic built along western lines, whose self-interest compels an integration of its economy with the West. Otherwise the Near and Middle East will continue to function as a vacuum from which the West will ultimately be excluded.

The British will fail in this attempt to settle the Hebrew problem by means of Hitlerian force. The Hebrew patriots are certain to resist and to attempt to answer blow for blow. If, as has been threatened, the British attempt a massive campaign of suppression to crush Hebrew Palestine once and for all, there will be an equally massive reaction from the entire world of freemen. That is certain.

The economic and military weakness of present-day Britain is great, and may soon become desperate. Conscious of these facts, Britain is bending every energy to insure American sympathy and assistance, and is clamoring for morality in international relationships. In this respect the British must be reminded that they, too, must become moral, and that the world no longer is capable of supporting the shock of such terroristic and lawless tactics as His Majesty's Government has substituted for law in the Holy Land.

DETERIORATION OF ARMY TRUCKS AND JEEPS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to an article which appeared this morning in the New York Times. It contains an interview with Maj. Gen. Everett S. Hughes, of the United States Army. The article is entitled "General Hughes Cites Big Deterioration of Army Ordnance."

Ever since my distinguished colleague [Mr. YOUNG] came to the Senate he and I have worked hard to obtain trucks for the farmers of the United States. We have submitted hundreds of letters from veterans who want jeeps. We have been told time and again that none were available. Yet we find a general stating that in one field in Ogden, Utah, thousands of trucks and jeeps are rotting.

I do not know what standing committee ought to have jurisdiction of this subject. Perhaps it ought to be the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. However, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that trucks and jeeps are rotting in Utah at the very time when the farmers and veterans of the United States desire trucks and jeeps.

I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL HUGHES CITES BIG DETERIORATION OF ARMY ORDNANCE—HE ASSERTS 20,000 VEHICLES ARE RUSTING AWAY AT SINGLE FIELD AT OGDEN, UTAH—FURTHER JUNKING IS URGED—CHIEF REPORTS A THIRD OF HIS BUDGET IS CONSUMED BY "CARETAKING" EXPENSES

(By Sidney Shalett)

WASHINGTON, January 23.—Back from a 2-week field inspection during which he said he was shocked by the sight of 20,000 Army vehicles slowly rusting away at a single field, Maj. Gen. Everett S. Hughes, Army Chief of Ordnance, declared today he would urge a revision of plans for proper storage facilities, or junking of much matériel.

General Hughes stated that the Ordnance Department is unable, because of a lack of funds, warehouse facilities, and personnel, to give proper protection and maintenance to huge numbers of all types of vehicles.

At a time when it is vital to obtain the utmost value from every available dollar, General Hughes said he believed it imperative to subject the program for storage of reserve equipment to the closest scrutiny.

It is his personal conviction, he said, that quantities of the matériel being saved will be either obsolete before it can be used again or will go to ruin unless it is given better protection.

The general stated that he intends to suggest to Army Ground Forces that the reserve equipment requirements be reviewed and matériel that can be dispensed with be either sold as surplus or junked.

The 20,000 vehicles exposed to the elements are located at Ogden, Utah, General Hughes said. They included several thousand jeeps, trucks, some tanks, combat cars, and other types of vehicles.

General Hughes estimated that about one-third of the entire Ordnance Department budget was consumed by its "caretaker" responsibilities and still the job is not being properly done.

A proper program for storage of jeeps, for example, he stated, would be one which would guarantee that the vehicles would be immediately serviceable at any period. This would mean they should be under a roof and periodically inspected by maintenance men. Also that a replacement program for tires and batteries, which deteriorate with nonuse, be organized.

Ammunition storage is another serious problem, particularly since there is a safety problem involved. It can be preserved indefinitely, but not unless it is under cover. General Hughes said he is asking ground forces to indicate what they can do without, so we can get rid of the rest.

Army Ordnance has experimented with a program of "canning" certain ordnance items such as tanks and artillery—that is, placing them inside huge steel drums fitted with dehumidification equipment.

General Hughes said he is not convinced that this method is the best means of preservation. He favors storage in warehouses where the equipment can be periodically inspected.

Postwar ordnance studies have convinced General Hughes of the need for working out an industrial mobilization program which will keep the munitions industry in a standby basis so that, if war comes again, it will not be necesary for the industry to begin an all-out production grind. The danger of such a grind is that it consumes practically the entire effort of industry and leaves little time for development of new ideas and equipment, he said.

Unification of services will pose important problems to the Army, Navy, and Air Forces, such as deciding which ordnance facilities are to be scrapped in the consolidation, General Hughes said.

Bright spots in the ordnance picture, General Hughes declared, are the excellent progress being made in research through coordinated efforts of civilian scientists and Army ordnance experts, and the impressive cooperation of American industrialists.

CONDOLENCES TO FAMILIES OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE BYRD ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 58, tendering the condolences of the Senate to the families of certain members of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition killed in an airplane crash in the Antarctic was agreed to by the Senate on January 17 last. There appears an error in the name of one of the persons killed. The name is stated in the resolution as "Aviation Radioman Second Class Wendell Keith Henderson, of Portsmouth, Va." The name should be "Aviation Radioman First Class Wendell Keith Hendersin, of Portsmouth, Va."

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate Resolution 58 was agreed to be reconsidered, that it be amended as indicated, and that the resolution, as amended, be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the vote by which Senate Resolution 58 was agreed to on January 17 is reconsidered, the resolution is amended as indicated, and the resolution, as amended, is agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 58) as amended is as follows:

Whereas Ensign Maxwell Albert Lopez, of Newport, R. I.; Aviation Machinist's Mate First Class Frederick Warren Williams, of Huntingdon, Tenn.; and Aviation Radioman First Class Wendell Keith Hendersin, of Portsmouth, Va., lost their lives in the crash of a plane while on a photographic mission of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition;

Whereas the deaths of these men were the first casualties of this historic expedition; and

Whereas they were engaged in scientific investigations and extraordinary aerial explorations the results of which may possibly prove of inestimable scientific value to the future of mankind and of great national importance to the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby tenders its condolences to the families of the deceased and expresses its gratitude for the heroic services of these men: And be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of each of the deceased.

POLITICAL GLAMOUR CONTEST

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, night before last, I believe, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made certain statements regarding Members of his party and Members of the Democratic Party concerning relative pulchritude. Today I received a telegram which I should like to read. I have been waiting for the senior Senator from Ohio to appear, but apparently he has been unwilling to subject himself to requests for the privilege of making a decision as to which of the ladies is most beautiful. I have considered that perhaps a special committee might be appointed to take jurisdiction of this question; but I should like to read the telegram into the RECORD at this time. It is addressed to me.

NEW YORK, N. Y. January 24, 1947.

Hon. J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT,
United States Senate:

The Swim for Health Association willing to provide neutral jury to conduct glamour contest between Democratic and Republican Members of the United States Senate. Will provide necessary trunks. Will furnish beach sweaters or coats for modest Members if necessary, will be happy to conduct beauty contest among wives of Senators, providing bathing suits or sweaters for event. Have just completed annual national swim for health week queen beauty contest at Miami Beach. Please wire if you need assistance.

MARTIN STERN,
Executive Director, Swim for Health Association.

The question which I wish to submit to the senior Senator from Ohio was whether or not he proposed to decide this question by a party vote following a caucus, or whether he was willing to leave it to a neutral body, as suggested by the telegram. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator received any information from the Senator from Ohio as to whether he intends to enter the swimming contest or the beauty contest? [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not have the consent of the Senator from Ohio to announce this pair, but I wish to announce that in the beauty contest the senior Senator from Florida is paired with the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce that that pair is a tie. [Laughter.]

NOTICE OF HEARINGS ON NOMINATIONS TO ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I announce that open hearings on the question of the confirmation of the Presidential nominations to the Atomic Energy Commission, as well as that of the General Manager of that Commission, will begin on Monday next at 10:30 o'clock a. m. The first meeting will be held in the meeting room of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and the first witness will be Mr. David E. Lilienthal, who has been designated as Chairman of the Commission. Members of the Senate who have any pertinent information they would like to present, or who are interested in attending, are invited to be present and submit their information.

ANTILABOR LEGISLATION—EDITORIAL COMMENT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on January 9 of this year Mr. Robert W. Ruhl, editor of the Medford (Oreg.) Mail-Tribune, a newspaper in my State, published an editorial. Mr. Ruhl is recognized, not only in my State but throughout the Nation, as a brilliant editor, and one who has always been very friendly to the best interests of the Republican Party. The editorial which he wrote I think contains some very good advice to my party on the subject of labor legislation. The title of the editorial is "Political Suicide." I find myself in such complete agreement with the advice to my party which this great editor has given to it in this editorial that I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICAL SUICIDE

If the Republican Party wishes to commit political suicide, they have only to pass the Ball bill to do it.

This measure would prohibit both the closed and the union shop throughout the country.

We doubt if such a law would be constitutional. But if it did pass the courts it would not be workable.

And politically, as stated, it would be suicidal.

We venture to say it would not gain one vote for the GOP. Those who want a labor prohibition law of that type are mostly Republicans anyway.

Not only organized labor, but practically all labor, and a vast majority of liberal and independent voters would vote against any party seriously advocating such a measure.

We can't believe Republican leadership at Washington could be so foolhardy and so stupid as to endorse the passage of such radical antilabor legislation at this time. But perhaps it is.

If so, it is doomed to defeat 2 years hence, and will richly deserve it.

R. W. R.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 27, 1947

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, before whom all our pretenses fall away, who knowest our secret thoughts and our hidden fears, bless us this day with Thy Spirit and help us to discharge our duties faithfully and well. Ever sensitive to the hurting of our own feelings, may we be sensitive also to our grieving of Thy Holy Spirit when we give ourselves to the lesser loyalties and spend our time and our energies in that which is less than the highest and the best.

We pray for the President of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, the representatives of the people, the judges of the land, and all those in authority, that it may please Thee so to rule their hearts that they may rightly use the trust committed to them for the good of all people.

Raise up among us, we pray Thee, fearless men who know that only in the doing of Thy will can we find our peace. So make it plain to us this day, and give us the courage to do it. All this we beg for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, January 24, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF BILL CREATING A SINGLE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the President's message on the establishment of a single Department of National Defense was received, it was referred by the Chair to the Committee on Armed Services. The Chair is in receipt of a letter from the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], submitted on behalf of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which he is chairman, insisting that when the merger bill arrives it will belong in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The Chair wishes to state that this is one of those cases in which reference can be justified in either direction, and the final decision should be made by the Senate itself, inasmuch as it is a matter of policy.

Therefore the Chair is asking that the letter of the Senator from Vermont be printed in the RECORD, and the Chair is announcing that when the merger bill arrives and is introduced the Chair will be prepared to rule in open session, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to dissent from the decision of the Chair if it disagrees.

There being no objection, the letter of Mr. AIKEN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 23, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
President pro tempore of the Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: At a meeting of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments held this morning, there was considerable discussion regarding the jurisdiction of the committee, particularly with respect to bills relating to "reorganization of the executive branch of the Government," which, according to the provisions of section 102 (1) (g) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (Public Law 601, 79th Cong.), are to be referred to this committee.

It was noted that on Monday of this week the President's message on the establishment of a single Department of National Defense was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, while on the House side this communication was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The 11 committee members who were present this morning were unanimously of the opinion that their committee should have jurisdiction, under the statute, of any bill that may be introduced to carry out the President's proposals, and felt that the existence of this sentiment on the part of the committee should be made known before such a bill is presented. I am, therefore, taking this means of bringing the matter to your attention.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE D. AIKEN,
Chairman.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to announce that under the law two Members of the Senate are required to be appointed to act in connection with the committee of the House of Representatives in the matter of the disposition of useless executive papers, as recommended by the Archivist of the United States. The Archivist has transmitted three such reports to the Congress, and the Chair appoints as such committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], who are the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Civil Service, which has jurisdiction over the National Archives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to make a very brief statement as to the program. The Senate will have a morning hour and at the conclusion of the morning hour will automatically proceed to a call of the calendar. Then there are some nominations which ought to be disposed of; and when the call of the calendar has been concluded, I shall ask that there be an executive session for the disposition of nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Chair suggests that the Senator from Connecticut notified the Senate on Friday last that he would speak today at the conclusion of the call of the calendar.

TAX PROBLEMS OF THE FARMERS—RESOLUTION OF AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the American Farm Bureau Federation at its twenty-eighth annual convention, San Francisco, Calif., on the subject of tax problems of the farmers, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAXATION

The American Farm Bureau Federation believes that a sound national tax policy is essential to the welfare of our entire economy. Taxes should be not only equitable and fair, but also chosen with due regard to their effect upon the economy.

The American Farm Bureau Federation is opposed to any material reduction in the income tax rates as long as inflationary tendencies prevail and there is a high level of employment. We call upon the Congress to use discretion and not use an instrument as vital to our national welfare as a tax and fiscal program for political purposes. We believe that under present conditions all possible revenues should be applied to a reduction in our national debt. Furthermore, we believe that every effort should be made to eliminate all nonessential Government expenditures and reduce essential expenditures to the minimum necessary for good government and adequate national defense. Maintenance of revenue and reduction of expenses are essential to stabilize our economy under present conditions.

The magnitude of the national debt makes it imperative that our national fiscal policies be handled prudently. Long-range plans should be made for the gradual reduction of the national debt; however, the debt retirement should be handled in such manner as to promote a stable price level and prosperous economy which, in turn, may necessitate adjusting both the amount of revenues and the volume of expenditures of the Federal Government with reference to levels of employment and national income. If this Nation is to remain solvent and meet its obligations, it is imperative that we maintain a high national income and a heavy tax program for many years to come. A long-time stable Federal tax policy should be adopted with a tax rate which balances the Budget under normal business conditions. Such a program would allow for substantial payments on the national debt during periods of prosperity. Provisions should be made which will allow for prompt but temporary reduction of the lower bracket personal income-tax rate within certain limits during periods of low business activity. At least, a tax program should be adopted which would not increase tax rates during periods of depression, or lower them unduly during periods of prosperity. The appropriate machinery for conducting research and making recommendations in the Federal tax and expenditure field should be established.

The personal income tax should be the major source of revenue for the Federal Government. We favor keeping the personal income tax base as broad as practicable through the retention of low exemptions and the avoidance of a general Federal sales tax. All self-supporting persons should make a direct contribution to the support of government. The income from all future issues of Federal, State, and local government bonds should be subject to the same taxation as other income. The personal income tax rate should be as high as necessary so that, together with Federal revenues from other sources, they will provide the funds to meet the expenses of government and provide for the gradual reduction of the national debt, without destroying the incentive for greater business activity and production. This theory of taxation should be strictly adhered to except when its continuance might lead to serious unemployment.

We recognize that if full employment is maintained, the bulk of the jobs must be provided by free enterprise. Therefore, the following recommendations are made pertaining to corporate taxes. The corporation should be exempted on that portion of its annual earnings distributed to the stockholders as dividends, where such dividends are taxed in the hands of stockholders. A reasonable proportion of corporation earnings retained should be taxed at the rate used in the first income bracket of the personal income tax. The balance of any amount retained should be taxed at a rate sufficient to encourage, but not to compel the distribution of earnings. Corporation taxes should be put upon a pay-as-you-go basis, similar to individual income taxes at the present time. Proper safeguards must be developed, if the foregoing recommendations are adopted, to prevent abuses in tax avoidance by the corporate form of business.

We favor the principle of carrying forward and back losses to be offset against gains for a reasonable period of time, both with regard to individual and corporate taxation.

Federal excise taxes should be largely limited to amusements and taxes on the so-called luxury goods, including alcoholic liquors and tobacco. The transportation tax on the movement of goods and commodities should be repealed. The Federal gasoline tax should be reduced to 1 cent a gallon and it should not exceed that amount. This tax should be paid only on gasoline used for transportation purposes, and all of the money so raised should be expended for construction and maintenance of transportation facilities. The long-recognized historic formula of allocating the highway funds among the States; namely, one-third on the basis of population, one-third on area, and one-third on post-road mileage, should be continued.

The Federal Government should declare a definite public policy in regard to replacing taxes lost to local governments through the acquisition of property by the National Government. Federally owned property, operated on an earning basis in competition with private enterprise, should be subject to payments in lieu of taxes comparable with taxes based on similar property when privately owned. Property acquired by the Federal Government, even though it does not compete with private enterprise, often diminishes the tax base of local governments. The Federal Government should compensate the net tax loss thus caused to local taxing units where such action on the part of the Government does not reduce correspondingly the expenses of the local taxing unit. Legislation should be enacted to bring the estate tax offset law of 1926 up to date.

The Federal social-security taxes should not be increased until a study of the entire problem is made, showing the need for a change from the present rate. Taxes for unemployment compensation should be levied upon employer and employee alike.

AMENDMENT OF LAW RELATING TO LARCENY IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, by request of the Attorney General, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend section 3 of Public Law 534, Seventy-ninth Congress, relating to larceny in interstate or foreign commerce. The purpose of this bill is merely to correct an oversight in that law. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, together with a letter from the Attorney General addressed to me on the subject, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred and, without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD, as requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 363) to amend section 3 of the act of July 24, 1946 (Public Law 534, 79th Cong.), introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of July 24, 1946 (Public Law 534, 79th Cong.), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"To establish the interstate or foreign commerce character of any shipment in any prosecution under this act, the waybill, or other shipping document, of such shipment shall be prima facie evidence of the place from which and to which such shipment was made."

The letter presented by Mr. WILEY was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1947.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to invite your attention to an apparent oversight in the drafting of Public Law 534 (79th Cong., 2d sess), approved July 24, 1946, relating to larceny in interstate or foreign commerce, which, in my opinion, should be corrected by the enactment of an appropriate amendment.

Public Law 534, inter alia, amended section 3 of the act of February 13, 1913, as amended (47 Stat. 774; 18 U. S. C. 411), to read as follows:

"To establish the interstate or foreign commerce character of any shipment in any prosecution under this act the waybill, or other shipping document, of such shipment shall be prima facie evidence of the place from which [and to which] such shipment was made." (Sec. 3, Public Law 534.)

The portion in italic indicates the words which were added, and the portion in black brackets represents the words which were deleted, by the amendment.

It is submitted that the omission of the words "and to which" from the amended section was unintentional, and should be reinstated to avoid possible confusion or difficulties which may arise in the interpretation and operation of the statute.

Evidence that the omission was an oversight may be deduced from the reports of both the House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary (H. Rept. No. 1116; S. Rept. No. 1632, 79th Cong.), concerning the bill (H. R. 4180) which was enacted into Public Law 534. Comparing the construction of section 3, as it is now, with that of the section as it then existed, the reports (p. 2) stated:

"Section 3 differs only in that it adds the words 'or other shipping document' after the word 'waybill'."

The above reports made no mention of the deletion of the phrase "and to which."

Without the phrase, it may be contended that a waybill or other shipping document shall be prima facie evidence only of the place from which a shipment was made, thus requiring other evidence of the place to which the shipment was made, in establishing the interstate or foreign commerce character of such shipment in a prosecution under this statute.

Accordingly, I recommend that Public Law 354 be amended so as to restore the deleted phrase.

A draft of a proposed bill to accomplish this purpose is enclosed herewith.

I have been advised by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this recommendation.

Sincerely yours,

TOM C. CLARK,
Attorney General.

CONTROL OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I submit a resolution asking for the appointment of a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate the foot-and-mouth disease threat, and I request that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

The resolution (S. Res. 72) was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Whereas an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease occurred in Mexico several weeks ago and has already spread to some 10 states in the vicinity of Mexico City and Vera Cruz; and

Whereas if this disease should spread to the large cattle-raising States in northern Mexico, it would not be possible to prevent its further spread to the United States; and

Whereas the rapid spread of the disease makes prompt cooperative action on the part of the United States imperative, if the disease is to be stamped out in Mexico; and

Whereas officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture trained in combating the disease have already conducted a careful study of the situation in Mexico, and their report as to what action should be taken is expected to be submitted within a very few days: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed, upon receipt of the forthcoming report of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture concerning the outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Mexico, (1) to make an immediate study of such report and any recommendations contained therein, (2) to make such further studies as it may deem necessary concerning the subject matter of such report, (3) to report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of such study, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable.

DISPOSITION OF CLAIMS ARISING OUT OF COST-PLUS-A-FIXED-FEE CONTRACTS

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] and myself, I submit for appropriate reference a resolution to investigate the activities of the Department of Justice in the disposition of claims arising out of cost-plus-a-fixed-fee war contracts, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 73) was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas prior to and during the period of the war the United States Government acting through the War Department, the Navy Department, the War Shipping Administration, and the Maritime Commission, as contracting agencies, entered into a great many agreements commonly referred to as "cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts," with private corporations and individual citizens as war contractors for the operation and management of Army and naval ordnance works, shipbuilding yards, dry docks, factories, plants, shops, and other war establishments; and

Whereas such war facilities and all lands, materials, and equipment used in connection therewith were owned, leased, or controlled by the United States Government and all products produced, manufactured, constructed, or assembled in such war facilities were owned by the United States Government, and the use or disposition thereof was at the sole direction and discretion of the United States Government acting through the appropriate governmental agencies; and

Whereas under the terms of such war contracts the war contractor, as an instrumentality of the United States Government, managed and operated such war facilities, and as such Federal instrumentality employed great numbers of employees on both a weekly and hourly basis; subject, however, to the reservation contained in said war contracts that the United States Government acting through the contracting agency had the right to pass upon and approve or reject any employee, or cause the discharge of any employee; and, subject to the further reservation that the United States Government acting through the Department of Labor should pass upon and approve the hours of work and the rate of pay of any and all such employees; and

Whereas the United States Government acting through representatives of the appropriate contracting agency exercised its rights under such war contracts to pass upon and approve each employee and in some cases cause the discharge of any employee when the representative of the appropriate contracting agency deemed such action to be in the best interest of the United States; and

Whereas the United States Government acting through representatives of the Wage and Hour Administrator passed upon and approved the working hours and rates of pay of such employees and has filed reports with the Wage and Hour Administrator showing that all provisions of law relating thereto had been complied with; and

Whereas numerous so-called portal-to-portal and other types of actions have been filed in the State and Federal courts by individuals formerly employed under such Government war contracts for the recovery of additional wages alleged to be due under the Fair Labor Standards Act, approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1096; title 29, U. S. C. Annotated, secs. 201 to 219, inclusive), including an equal amount as liquidated damages and attorneys' fees; and

Whereas any final judgment of the courts for additional wage pay, damages, and attorneys' fees rendered in such suits constitutes a charge against the United States under the terms of such cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts; and

Whereas although in some if not all cases such management contracts provide that the employees are the employees of the war contractor, other terms and provisions of such contracts reveal that the services of said employees were performed for the sole and exclusive benefit of the United States Government, and in effect said employees were employed by the United States and their services were performed under and subject to the supervision of the United States acting through the appropriate contracting agencies and other departments of the United States Government, and in truth and in fact the United States Government is the real party in interest with respect to any suit, claim, or demand of such employees for additional wage pay; and

Whereas it appears that prior to November 1, 1945, pursuant to an interdepartmental agreement between the appropriate departments and agencies of the United States Government, primary responsibility for handling the claims of such employees asserted under the Fair Labor Standards Act was assumed by the respective and appropriate contracting agencies subject to the approval of the Department of Justice acting in conjunction with the appropriate United States district attorneys; and

Whereas pursuant to a "Memorandum of Agreement on Procedures for Handling Fair Labor Standards Act Claims" of such employees was entered into on November 1, 1945, by the War Department, acting by Robert P. Patterson, and the Navy Department, acting by Assistant Secretary H. Struve Hensel, and the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission, acting by E. S. Land, and the Department of Labor, acting by the Wage and Hour Administrator L. Metcalf Walling, and the Department of Justice, acting by the Attorney General of the United States Tom C. Clark, it was agreed that primary responsibility for handling such claims, both in and out of court, would thereafter be assumed by such cost-plus-a-fixed-fee war contractors, provided, however, that private counsel for such contractors would be subject to the supervision and direction of the Department of Justice acting through the appropriate United States district attorneys with respect to all plans for the defense to any claim of such employees asserted under the Fair Labor Standards Act and with respect to any settlement or compromise of such claim; and

Whereas by the terms of such interdepartmental agreements, the Department of Justice also reserved the right to cause the appropriate United States attorney to appear in such suits for the defendant in any case where it appears to the contracting agency affected that private counsel may not be adequate to protect the interest of the United States and where such fact is made known to the Department of Justice and upon investigation the Department of Justice determines that Government counsel should be furnished; and

Whereas by the terms of such interdepartmental agreement the Wage and Hour Administrator was granted leave to intervene or appear as amicus in such suits, or take such other action as might be appropriate, but counsel for any contracting agency was precluded from appearing in any such litigation; and

Whereas it appears that the Department of Justice has prohibited and is now prohibiting the appropriate United States district attorneys or any private counsel engaged in such litigation from pleading the following defenses to claims of such employees being asserted under the Fair Labor Standards Act (a) that the United States is the real party in interest and the Fair Labor Standards Act by its express terms is not applicable to the United States or its employees, (b) that the activities of producing war materials and equipment by the United States Government under such cost-plus-a-fixed-fee management contracts does not constitute interstate commerce within the meaning of the Fair Labor Standards Act, (c) that the United States is the real party in interest and enjoys sovereign immunity, (d) that the cost-plus-a-fixed-fee management contractor is an instrumentality of the United States and as such enjoys sovereign immunity, and (e) that existing applicable regulations of the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division are invalid and contrary to his previous administrative determination concerning the wages and hours of such employees; and

Whereas it appears that each and all of said defenses are justiciable issues of law and have not been adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States; and

Whereas in some suits thus far adjudicated by the trial courts and in some suits now pending, private defense counsel and the United States district attorney, acting under the instruction and direction of the Department of Justice, have withdrawn one or more of the above defenses which may have been pleaded in such suits or have stipulated with counsel for plaintiffs that such defenses were not applicable and were not relied upon by the defendant, and numerous claims and suits of such employees have been settled and compromised on the basis of time and one-half pay for hours claimed to have been worked over 40 hours, plus an equal amount as liquidated damages and attorneys' fees; and

Whereas the exact amount of money represented by such judgments, settlements, pending suits, and claims asserted or to be asserted is unknown, but it is estimated to exceed more than a billion dollars; and

Whereas it is the duty of the Department of Justice to cause all justiciable defenses to be asserted to any and all claims affecting the interest of the United States; and

Whereas it appears that the Department of Justice, acting in cooperation with the aforementioned governmental agencies of the United States, namely, the War Department, Navy Department, War Shipping Administration, Maritime Commission, and the Department of Labor, has refused to permit such available justiciable defenses to be pleaded in any suit or asserted against any claim made under the Fair Labor Standards Act and arising out of such cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contracts, and in cases where such defenses have been pleaded or asserted, defense counsel has been required by the Department of Justice to withdraw or abandon these defenses, all to the prejudice of the rights and interests of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the standing Committee on the Judiciary be and is hereby directed and instructed to cause an investigation to be made of the activities of the Department of Justice with respect to the handling of litigation, settlements, or compromises involving claims under the Fair Labor Standards Act arising out of cost-plus-a-fixed-fee war contracts and report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the earliest possible date.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Senate now proceeds automatically to a call of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

PREVENTION OF PURCHASE AND SALE OF PUBLIC OFFICE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order, and the clerk will state the first order of business.

The bill (S. 22) to amend the act entitled "An act to prevent purchase and sale of public office," approved December 11, 1926, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of December 11, 1926, entitled "An act to prevent purchase and sale of public office" (44 Stat. 918), is amended by adding the following new paragraph to section 2:

"SEC. 2. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to solicit or receive any sum of money or thing of value whatsoever in consideration of aiding or assisting any person to obtain any appointive office or employment under the Government of the United States, either by referring his name to any executive department, agency, or independent establishment of the United States for consideration, or otherwise, or to require the payment of a fee from any person because such person has secured any appointive office or employment under the Government of the United States."

LIABILITY FOR ESCAPE OF PRISONERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 26) to make criminally liable persons who negligently allow prisoners in their custody to escape, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 138 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1113; 18 U. S. C. 244) be, and it hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Whenever any marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person has in his custody any prisoner by virtue of process issued under the laws of the United States by any court, judge, or commissioner, and such marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person voluntarily suffers such prisoner to escape, he shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both. Whenever any marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person has in his custody any prisoner by virtue of process issued under the laws of the United States by any court, judge, or commissioner, and such marshal, deputy marshal, ministerial officer, or other person negligently suffers such prisoner to escape, he shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I think we should have a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I think the best explanation is to be found in the letter from Attorney General Clark which is printed on the second page of the report. The Attorney General's letter, which was addressed to me on May 24, 1946, when I was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, constitutes the basis of the bill. I now read a part of the letter:

The recent escape of two convicted murderers from the District of Columbia jail, which was facilitated by the negligence of the guards assigned to duty in the jail's death block, has emphasized the necessity for enacting legislation which would make it a Federal offense for any person negligently to permit a Federal prisoner to escape from his custody.

Under existing law, it is a Federal offense punishable by imprisonment for a period of not more than 2 years or a fine of not more than $2,000, or both, if a person having a prisoner in his custody by virtue of any process issued under the laws of the United States, "voluntarily suffers such person to escape" (18 U. S. C. 244). Although escapes as the result of a jailer's negligence are much more frequent than those resulting from the voluntary act of an officer, it has been held that the foregoing statutory provision is not applicable to a situation involving the escape of a Federal prisoner as the result of the negligence of his guards.

Then the Attorney General cites a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The pending bill was introduced for the purpose of curing the situation disclosed in the letter of the Attorney General.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Am I correct in my understanding that this bill, like the one preceding it and the one following it on the calendar, is identical in terms with a bill passed by the Senate at the last session?

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is correct. All three bills, No. 3, No. 4, and No. 5 on the calendar, are identical with bills which were passed by the Senate at the last session.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nevada a question. Does this bill refer to prisoners in custody under State law?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; it refers only to Federal prisoners in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN OBLIGATIONS AGAINST OPERATORS OF GOLD AND SILVER MINES—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 27) to provide for suspending the enforcement of certain obligations against the operators of gold and silver mines who are forced to cease operations because of the war, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I read in the report on Senate bill 27, Calendar No. 5, the statement that—

The bill as reported relates to operators engaged in mining gold and silver from any mining properties held or which were held under contracts of purchase which require the performance of work thereon, or the making of periodic payments with respect thereto, and operators who hold such properties as mortgagors, and who cannot mine gold or silver—

I particularly call attention to this language—because of the operation of any law or regulation of the United States Government.

I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if the bill gives relief only in those cases where the beneficiary is prevented from carrying on his mining operations solely by law or regulation of the United States Government.

Mr. McCARRAN. The bill is intended to meet a condition which arose because of the Federal regulation or order which was enforced against gold and silver mines during the war and which shut down gold and silver mining. The object, as stated at that time, was to release the labor so employed in order that it might engage in the extraction of more essential minerals. The purpose of the bill is to meet the condition which arose by reason of closing down those mines. For instance, let us consider a mine which was under what is called "bond and lease," a term known to the West with which the Senator is undoubtedly familiar. An individual who held a mine which was operating under bond and lease was required by the instrument to do a certain number of shifts of work per period, month or quarter, whatever it might be; he was required to spend a certain amount of money during a certain period; he was required to do other things. When the mines were shut down under the Government's order the operator could no longer go forward and meet the condition of the bond and lease. So it put not only the lessee but the lessor as well in such a condition that neither could assist the other. The bill would provide relief for that condition.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, if the Senator will refer to page 1 of the bill, line 10, he will note that among other situations which make him unable to perform the obligation would be that the beneficiary—and now I quote from line 10—is unable for reasons beyond his control, to obtain the necessary supplies and equipment, or because of the operation of any statute, rule, regulation, order, or requirement of the United States or any agency thereof.

The language would appear to be to broaden the basis of relief so as to include any cause, whether or not it arose because of action by the Federal Government. If that is not the purpose of the bill, I should like to have the Senator assure me of that fact.

Mr. McCARRAN. It was not exactly the intention of the bill, but it grew out of the regulation to which I have made reference, in other words, because of something beyond his control. As the Senator may recall, we visited the Department and tried to argue against the making of the regulation, but we were unable to do so. That put matters beyond the operator's control. He was cut off from getting supplies, materials, or labor.

Mr. CORDON. Then, I inquire, is it the purpose of the bill to grant relief only in those cases where the situation resulted directly or indirectly from causes arising as a result of the war? That is what I want to know.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 27?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada how much is involved or may be involved in terms of dollars?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not know that there is anything at all involved in terms of dollars as against the Government. It is a question of granting relief by reason of statutory conditions or by reason of contractual conditions, and what may be involved no one can state. It is a matter of equity.

Mr. GREEN. What would the claims amount to under the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have no way of stating at this time.

Mr. GREEN. Inasmuch as I should like information on that point, and I think the Senate also should have it, and also because the bill goes very much further than the purpose stated in the title "to cease operations because of the war," I shall have to ask that the bill go over. The bill itself, as has already been suggested, goes beyond that and refers to the operator's inability to mine the property "for reasons beyond his control." There may be a great many reasons beyond his control besides those growing out of the conduct of the war. Perhaps the Senator from Nevada will give an explanation of the discrepancy.

Mr. McCARRAN. I have stated that the bill is necessary because of the regulation that was imposed as an incident of the war. It traces back entirely to that regulation No. 107, as I recall the number.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I prefer not to object unless it is necessary, but I shall ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PRODUCTION OF SUGARS AND SIRUPS IN ALCOHOL PLANTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call Calendar No. 7, House Joint Resolution 57, which is identical with Senate Joint Resolution 5, Calendar No. 6.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) extending 15 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, when the joint resolution was first brought up for consideration I asked that it go over because it had come to my attention that some question would be raised as to the propriety of passing the measure. In today's newspaper the question is raised again by Mr. Drew Pearson in an article which makes certain charges, and I would appreciate it very much if the sponsor of the joint resolution, the able senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], could give us a statement as to the truth or falsity of the important charges made in this morning's Washington Post by Mr. Drew Pearson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think perhaps all Members of the Senate have read the article appearing in the newspaper this morning, written by one of the newspaper men, mentioning my name in connection with the operation of the Butler-Welsh Grain Co., at Omaha, and also what is termed the Omaha alcohol plant.

When I was elected to the Senate in November 1940, I immediately resigned as of November 1st of that year from the Butler-Welsh Grain Co. Since that day I have had no more interest, financial or otherwise, in the Butler-Welsh Grain Co. than the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho or any other Member of this body has had. I have not participated to the extent of 1 penny in the profits of the company. Had I been here in the Senate for profit only I would have been many times better off if I had retained my interest in the Butler-Welsh Grain Co. and had never become a Member of the Senate. The reason I resigned was this: I had taken the matter up with the Department of Agriculture, and was advised that since the Butler-Welsh Grain Co. was doing a storage business with the Government, I would be ineligible to serve as a Member of the Senate if at the same time I were interested in the company. That is the reasoon I retired from the organization, which, I may say, was a partnership, not a corporation. Had it been doing business as a corporation there is no reason why I could not have continued to hold my interest in the grain company. But it still operates as a partnership. I have no interest whatsoever in it. I have no interest and never have had any interest in the Omaha alcohol plant. Like every other Senator here I have been exceedingly interested in its operation, because it provided alcohol, seven tank carloads a day, most of which during the war went direct by tanker cars to Seattle, where it was loaded on steamers for Vladivostok. It made probably the greatest contribution of any single war plant toward winning the war on the western front, because it provided high octane fuel for the operation of the war engines, airplanes, tanks, and other matériel on that front.

Mr. President, every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Department of Agriculture, and everyone in the Government with whom I am acquainted is exceedingly anxious that that plant and others like it be continued in operation.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the attitude of the Treasury Department? Heretofore it has objected to one plant producing both alcohol and sirup, for fear that material might be diverted to the production of alcohol, and that the Government might lose tax revenue. Can the Senator tell us what is the attitude of the Treasury Department?

Mr. BUTLER. When this question arose the other day I was not provided with letters from the departments. Since then I have been provided with them, and I shall be glad to provide copies for the RECORD at this point if the Senator so desires.

(Mr. BUTLER subsequently submitted the following letters, which were ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Hon. HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: This is in response to your telephone request of January 22, 1947, for a report on House Joint Resolution 57, extending the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol.

The production of sugars and sirups from surplus and damaged agricultural commodities under section 3126 (a) of Internal Revenue Code, in our belief, fully justifies the further extension of the life of that law to April 30, 1948.

The view of the Department of Agriculture in this matter was fully set forth in the attached letter dated June 11, 1946, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

In view of your request that this report be submitted today, we have not had an opportunity to obtain from the Bureau of the Budget advice as to the relationship of the proposed legislation to the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,
CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 23, 1947.

Hon. EUGENE D. MILLIKIN,
Chairman, Committee on Finance,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your recent letter enclosing a copy of Senate Joint Resolution 5 and requesting a report thereon (with two copies) at the earliest date possible.

The joint resolution would amend section 3126 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code by striking out "February 1, 1947" and inserting in lieu thereof "April 30, 1948." Section 3126 (a), as amended by Senate Joint Resolution 162, Seventy-ninth Congress (Public Law 437, 79th Cong.), is temporary emergency legislation which authorizes, until February 1, 1947, the production of sugars and sirups from potatoes and high moisture or damaged grain at industrial alcohol plants simultaneously with, or alternately with, the production of alcohol. The proposed amendment would extend for 15 months the period during which such operations may be conducted at such plants.

The purpose of the original legislation was to facilitate the use of a large surplus of potatoes and a large quantity of damaged corn in the production of needed sugars and sirups. The first amendment extended the expiration date of the law to facilitate the disposition of an expected surplus of potatoes. It is understood that there now exists a very large surplus of potatoes (about 80,000,000 bushels) which may be used for the production of alcohol, sugars and sirups. It is also possible that there may result from the bumper crops of 1946 a surplus of grain, the marketing of which may be facilitated by such use.

As stated in the report on the original legislation, and also in the report on the joint resolution which extended the expiration date thereof, the distillation of alcohol on the same premises where sugars and sirups are refined was forbidden prior to the enactment of section 3126 (a). The production of sugars and sirups at industrial alcohol plants, and the resulting traffic in such substances on the premises of such plants make more difficult the administration of the alcohol tax laws. It is believed such use of the plants should not be sanctioned for a longer period than necesary. However, if it should be deemed necessary to extend the expiration date of the temporary legislation to April 30, 1948, to aid in the marketing of the existing potato surplus or an anticipated grain surplus suitable for use in manufacturing sugars and sirups, the Department will make no objection to the proposed amendment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH J. O'CONNELL, Jr.,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. The Department of Agriculture strongly recommends the continuance of the operation of the plant in the production of both alcohol and sirup. The attitude of the Treasury Department is that it is supporting the Department of Agriculture. The Treasury Department prefers that the operation be exclusively in connection with alcohol or exclusively in connection with sirup. That is the only contention of the Department. The theory is that under such an arrangement it is easier for the Department to supervise the output of the plant. A very large tax is collected on alcohol, and nothing is collected on sirup. But the Department has had no trouble whatsoever in collecting every penny of revenue due the Government from this joint operation.

The article in the newspaper this morning stated that I had proposed a measure especially for the Omaha alcohol plant. When the question first arose, the proposal was made general in its application. As the distinguished former chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. GEORGE] can testify, it was applicable to any plant which wished to operate in the production of alcohol and sirup at the same time. Some plants have been conducting such operations. I do not like to mention names, but a large plant at Philadelphia, several times larger than the one at Omaha, for a time produced both commodities. It may not be producing both at the moment, but it is offering sirup for sale; so it has produced both commodities at the same time.

The current authority under which such plants are operating expires February 1. We have asked, upon the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture, that it be continued until April 30, 1948, during which time the Senate may have an opportunity to consider permanent legislation which would permit joint operation of such plants.

The question at this time is whether we are to continue the operation of this particular plant. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Idaho and other Senators who are interested that during the past few months there have been shipments from 27 States of potatoes for processing into sirup and alcohol. More than 5,000,000 pounds of potatoes have been shipped from the Senator's own State. The reason why I was late in arriving on the floor was that I was receiving some information by telephone from the plant at Omaha. I am sorry that the subject came up before the notes could be transcribed, so that I could have them before me. However, more than 5,000,000 pounds of Idaho potatoes have recently been processed in that plant.

We are approaching the time when the agricultural problem will be entirely different from what it is at the moment, when every pound of food is needed for use here and elsewhere. Before long we shall be producing surpluses; and if we continue in operation plants such as the one at Omaha, we shall be taking a step forward in the solution of the agricultural problem in America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 57?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Nebraska if it is not true that at the present time there is an extreme shortage of sugar in this country?

Mr. BUTLER. That is true.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The second part of my question is whether this question does not entirely revolve about the point as to whether we want more alcohol or more sugar and sirup?

Mr. BUTLER. In reply to the distinguished Senator, let me say that we all know the situation regarding sugar. It is extremely critical. The Omaha plant alone has produced more than 35,000,000 pounds of sirup during the past few months. Every pound of sirup takes the place of approximately a pound of sugar. The sirup is used industrially, thus making sugar available for the housewife and other private users.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] may be permitted to proceed for an additional 5 minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma can be recognized in his own right for 5 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then I ask to be recognized in my own right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was in the West about a year ago and had the opportunity of inspecting the plant at Omaha, Nebr.

It is a war plant, constructed in the beginning for the purpose of making industrial alcohol. When the war was over, of course, the demand for alcohol suddenly decreased. The plant was left in the hands of a board which had been managing the plant for the Government.

There is a large demand for molasses. As I understand, the plant was converted to the production of molasses. I saw the plant in operation. About the time I was there I received a request from a concern in my home State for sugar to be used in patching automobile tires. I am not a chemist, and I do not know anything about the automobile tire business, but this concern had a contract to patch tires for the Army at Camp Gruber, in eastern Oklahoma. All at once their supply of sugar was cut off.

I took the matter up with the Omaha plant to see whether or not that plant could furnish the Muskogee, Okla., plant with sugar or molasses. As I understood, molasses would serve the purpose. I was advised that the supplies required could be furnished. I have heard nothing further on the subject, and I presume a business connection was satisfactorily arranged. So the plant did serve a substantial interest in my State.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to make a brief statement?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. During the time this plant has been operating at Omaha it has produced more than 30,000,000 gallons of alcohol, at a profit to the operators of approximately one-half cent a gallon, which is not an enormous profit. It is the lowest-cost producer of grain alcohol in the country today. For the use of the plant, which cost originally approximately $7,500,000, it is paying the Government, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a rate ranging from 8¼ cents a gallon down to 7½ cents, averaging 7.7 cents a gallon. I believe that subsequent additions have brought the cost of the plant up to approximately $8,000,000. The operators of the plant have returned more than half the original cost to the Government in rentals. A part of the rental has been at a rate equivalent to more than 30 percent annual interest on the money invested.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I regret that I was not present at the beginning of this discussion. I had some acquaintance with this subject. In fact, I went to see the Secretary of Agriculture about it approximately a year ago. I was very much interested in this question from the aspect of the use of the plant in an experimental project, on a permanent basis, for the utilization of surplus agricultural commodities.

I related the information which I obtained, and the attitude of the Department, to the Committee on Finance. It seemed to me then, and it still seems to me, that a plant of this kind may have a very valuable use to the agricultural interests over a period of time, and not merely in an emergency.

I have no personal knowledge of the manner in which this particular plant was operated. I am sure that the Senator from Nebraska can speak for himself on that score. However, I believe that there is a very interesting possibility in a plant of this kind, in the utilization of recurring agricultural surpluses. As I understand, it is very well adapted for the use of such things as soft corn. The subject was first brought to my attention in connection with potatoes. We are all familiar with the utilization of potatoes in producing sirup as well as alcohol.

I saw the article in the newspaper this morning. I am still of the opinion that this plant, or some plant like it, would serve a good purpose. I understand that this is an efficient plant. I am informed that there are three similar plants. I believe one is located at Muscatine, Iowa. Another is located at Omaha, Nebr., and there is one at Kansas City. Anyone of those plants, or all of them, could have taken advantage of the provision permitting the production of sirup at the same time alcohol was produced.

I also recall the discussion with regard to the feasibility of collecting taxes on this plant. The Treasury Department was not very vigorous in its opposition. It merely said, "We have never done that, and it might cause some difficulty and some danger of divergence." I I should not say that the Treasury Department fought it very vigorously. In the end it said, practically, "That is our position; but we are willing to go along."

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, as the result of a large surplus of potatoes in California last year, I had occasion to make some investigation of the Omaha plant to which reference has been made. A very considerable volume of California potatoes, which otherwise would have been wasted, was used in that plant. As a result of my investigation I reached the conclusion that the plant had performed an outstanding and notable work during the war in the production of alcohol and that it has very great pioneering possibilities for American agriculture in coming years in providing a large salvage from surplus agricultural products. During the course of my investigation I secured some information from the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], and I found him not only most courteous, but, I also thought, objective and patriotic in his attitude toward this fine institution.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, in 1938 the then Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry Wallace, stated in his annual report that something should be done to dispose of surplus agricultural products. The report showed that in every foreign country, including Africa, there were alcohol plants.

Last summer my colleague [Mr. YOUNG] and I had occasion, time and time again, to meet with potato growers in North Dakota. At the present time there is an excess of millions of bushels of potatoes which are rotting. They cannot be dehydrated because UNRRA will not buy them. UNRRA says they spoil before they can reach the countries where they can be used. It also claims that the cost is prohibitive.

I know that I speak for both of the Senators from North Dakota when I say that the people of our State very much approve of the alcohol plants at Omaha and the other two places, and their hope is that the operation of those alcohol plants may be continued because, if the same kind of a situation shall arise following World War II as that which existed after World War I, we shall have a surplus of apples and of all kinds of grain, which, of course, can be utilized in these alcohol plants. They can be used, as the distinguished Senator well knows, in the manufacture of material which can be utilized in connection with the making of synthetic rubber.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to have the parliamentary situation clarified. As I understand, there has been no objection yet to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 6, Senate Joint Resolution 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no objection as yet. The Senate is considering House Joint Resolution 57, which is the same as Senate Joint Resolution 5.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I hope that no objection will be made to the immediate passage of this joint resolution. I speak from the point of view of a producer and in the interest of the corn producers of the area involved. We have 340,000,000 bushels of corn in Nebraska, the largest corn crop which that State has ever produced. A great deal of it is what is known as wet corn. In some sections of Nebraska this year the moisture content of that corn reached as high as 27 percent.

I should like to ask the distinguished senior Senator from Nebraska if it is not true that March 1 is the date on which tenants usually change farms in our section of the country. We have a good many tenants who change farms each March, and it becomes increasingly difficult to utilize wet corn if a change is made.

The alcohol plant at Omaha has been an outlet for a great deal of wet corn. It is really an emergency situation. On the floor of the Senate last week I mentioned the fact that we were endeavoring to get box cars for that section. A hearing on that subject will be held before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce next Tuesday in an endeavor to move corn. A good deal of it is moved by truck to this alcohol plant. Because of that fact, I hope that no objection will be made. I ask my colleague if what I have said is not true, with reference to the movement of wet corn.

Mr. BUTLER. A report appeared in the press this morning that the grain company in which I was once a partner still profits on the grain business that is done with the alcohol plant. Originally the Butler-Welsh Grain Co. acted as a broker and buyer, but the plant equipped itself to receive grain direct from the farms. The arrangement was completed in May 1945, and since that date not one cent of income from the purchase or handling of grain has come to the Butler-Welsh Grain Co., or, so far as I know, to any other member of the Omaha Grain Exchange. The grain has come almost exclusively in trucks from the country, and as my esteemed colleague has stated, the bulk of it is wet corn which has deteriorated because of excessive moisture.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, while the subject of the disposal of agricultural surpluses is being discussed, I wish to refer briefly to the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] regarding the potato crop, which is one with the other problem, and to emphasize that under legislation which was passed by the Senate last spring, at which time the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who now is present, pointed out that in the disposal of the potato surplus it would be perfectly possible under that authorization for the Department of Agriculture to purchase the dehydrated potatoes at any figure it might deem advisable. The Department of Agriculture has not seen fit to exercise that authority.

Without discussing here the wisdom of that decision, let me say that it seems to me the Department of Agriculture in the exercise of its powers and authority and responsibility regarding the disposal of agricultural surpluses is placed in a very unfortunate position when more than 20,000,000 bushels of potatoes are now being put out into the fields to rot, to be destroyed by the weather, although it would have been quite feasible for many millions of bushels of those potatoes to have been saved for human consumption, at home or abroad, by the expenditure of what would not seem to be excessive amounts of money, the expenditure of which was contemplated by the amendment which was adopted on the floor of the Senate with the unanimous approval of all Members of the Senate then present. I do not think there was a dissenting voice.

I shall not go into the various considerations which have ramified in this matter, but I wish to make clear that the entire problem of our surplus production, the Government guaranties for which will be expiring the next calendar year, must engage the very intimate attention certainly of every Member of Congress and, I believe, of all our people if we are to avoid a debacle such as that which came after the last war, and I believe that those concerned with agriculture and, it seems to me, also those concerned with industry must give, during the next year, their constant and earnest attention to how these tremendous surpluses, which have been stimulated incident to the war, are going to be handled without disrupting and destroying our economy.

So I hope all Members of Congress will realize that the problem is coming; and I hope that the Department of Agriculture, which is the primary executive agency concerned, will realize that the people of the country view with grave concern the destruction of enormous quantities of food during a period when the whole world is apparently in need of food.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, perhaps I should make a brief statement regarding this joint resolution, which merely extends an existing act.

It will be recalled that there was considerable concern about the demobilization or destruction of certain of the plants which were built by the Government for war purposes, and several Senators were concerned regarding the preservation of at least one of the alcohol plants which had been constructed for the purpose of producing alcohol. After we ceased to need the alcohol so badly, the question arose whether one of those plants could be converted to the use of surplus farm products, for the purpose of making either sugar or sirup. As originally drawn, the legislation which came before the Finance Committee dealt exclusively with war plants, but before the committee it was broadened, so that now it is general in character. The only question involved in this extension is whether alcohol plants may simultaneously make sirup or sugar in the same plant, under the same roof. There was no reason why alcohol plants could not have made sugar at all times, except it was believed by the department in charge of our revenues that it would be difficult to collect the tax, and, therefore, for the purpose of simplifying the collection of the tax there was a regulation, based upon a statute, that a plant could not simultaneously make both sugar or sirup and alcohol. The operator of such a plant could make sugar or sirup, and then could switch over to the manufacture of alcohol.

All this joint resolution does—and it is not specific and is not confined to the plant in Nebraska, but is general—is to permit an alcohol plant to make, simultaneously, sirup or sugar. There was some apprehension on the part of the taxing authorities that perhaps there would be some difficulty and that opportunity for tax evasion would be afforded, but it is likely that there is no real difficulty in the modern manufacture of alcohol and the simultaneous production of sugar or sirup.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 57?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 57) extending 15 months the period of time during which alcohol plants are permitted to produce sugars or sirups simultaneously with the production of alcohol was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 5 is indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President pro tempore be authorized to sign House Joint Resolution 57, which has just been passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DECLINE IN LIVESTOCK PRICES

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, in July last there occurred on the floor of the Senate considerable debate relative to a move to decontrol livestock. Those who were responsible for the effort to decontrol livestock made it very clear that they were satisfied that if such decontrol took place the law of supply and demand would very soon regulate the price and bring meat within the range of everyone's pocket. That effort was defeated at that time, but toward the end of October by Executive order livestock was decontrolled; and immediately the result which was expected took place. On November 18 prime beef on the Chicago market went to an all-time high of $37 a hundred pounds.

I think it would be of interest for the Senate to know, and also for it to be made a matter of record, that since that time the decline in livestock prices has continued. Last week the top price had come down to $28. The average decline last week was from $1 to $3 a hundred pounds on the good and choice steers, and $2 to $3 on medium and average good steers. That was for the week.

I ask unanimous consent that the release by the Department of Agriculture on cattle marketing in Chicago last week be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

LIVESTOCK IN CHICAGO

CHICAGO, January 25.—Today's report of the livestock markets here by the United States Department of Agriculture follows:

"CATTLE

"Salable cattle, 500 head (estimated); total not given. Compared with week ago: in sympathy with falling dressed beef prices, fed steers and yearlings closed $1 to $3 lower; strictly good and choice steers, $2 to $3 down; medium to average-good steers and all heifers, $1 to $2 lower; general price levels lowest since decontrol; load lot of top choice steers for week, $27; short load, $28; choice light and long yearlings stopped late at $25; average-medium to strictly good steers closed at $17–$23.50; strictly medium grades, $15–$16.75; average-medium to average-good heifers wound up week on buyers' market at $15.25–$20; kinds scaling better than average-good sold late at $21; week's extreme top on choice 1,172-pound heifers, $25.50; practical heifer top for week, $25; all cows lost $1 to $1.50, in instances $2; week-end clearance complete but prices $2 to $3 and more under 2 weeks earlier; canners and cutters closed at $8–$10.25; most beef cows at $10.50–$13.50; practical outside on good cows, $14.50, compared with $17 2 weeks earlier and extreme top of $16.50 last week; due to acute scarcity, bulls held steady early in week at $16 down but closed 25 to 50 cents lower at $15.50 down; vealers firm at $28 down; thin stock cattle showed sympathetic weakness, with medium to good grades as much as 50 cents lower, but supply small and choice yearling stockers quotable around $17.75, very scarce; several loads of fleshy 850–950 pound steers went back late at $18.75–$21."

SALARIES OF CERTAIN SENATE EMPLOYEES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next measure on the calendar will be stated.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4), relating to the salaries of certain Senate employees, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this measure has had the consideration and the unanimous recommendation of the Appropriations Committee. In the past, a practice which probably is not a good one has developed and been followed to some extent, under which, instead of increasing, for instance, the pay of certain positions, provision has been made that the man who holds the place shall receive a salary of $3,000 and an additional $500 as long as he continues to be the incumbent. Such a provision applies to secretaries to the majority and minority, respectively. Although when a change in the political complexion of the Senate occurs, the majority secretary then becomes the minority secretary and vice versa; nevertheless they are the same persons. The persons concerned should not be penalized because of a transfer of political leadership. The joint resolution is a simple measure to make the salary correspond to the job, rather than to the individual man. Personally, I think the practice should be stopped, because it causes certain complications, for the reasons stated. This joint resolution corrects that condition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4), relating to the salaries of certain Senate employees, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) in the case of any position under the Senate for which additional compensation is provided for in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1947, "so long as the position is held by the present incumbent," the salary provided in such act, including such additional compensation, shall be payable to any incumbent thereof without regard to the above-quoted limitation, in addition to any other compensation authorized by law for such position.

(b) The salaries referred to in the foregoing subsection shall be payable from January 3, 1947.

STAFF ORGANIZATION FOR SENATE STANDING COMMITTEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) providing for a more effective staff organization for standing commitees of the Senate, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, on page 2, in line 1, before the word "for", to strike out "$3,420" and insert "$3,720", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 202 of the Reorganization Act of 1946, the clerical staffs of standing committees of the Senate shall be organized and compensated in the manner hereinafter provided.

The annual rates of compensation for the clerical staff of each standing committee of the Senate (other than the Appropriations Committee) shall be $2,000 to $8,000 for one chief clerk and one assistant chief clerk; and $2,000 to $3,720 for not to exceed four other clerical assistants.

The annual rates of compensation for the clerical staff of the Appropriations Committee shall be as follows: One chief clerk and one assistant chief clerk at $5,600 to $8,000; such assistant clerks as may be necessary at $3,820 to $5,600; and such other clerical assistants as may be necessary at $2,000 to $3,420.

Such compensation shall be fixed by the chairman of each such committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, there may be some difference of opinion on this particular joint resolution, but I doubt that there will be if the story is fully understood.

Under the Congressional Reorganization Act, Congress has authorized for each standing committee of the Senate a professional staff of four and a clerical staff of six, but there was no limitation, except a figure of $8,000 net or $10,000 gross, as to what any of the committees could pay their various assistants.

It seemed to be the feeling of many persons that some restriction should be placed upon the right of the committees in establishing the salary requirements of this new group of 10 staff members for each committee. After some discussion, the bill was reported without any limitation whatsoever on the professional staffs; that is, the four professional staff members could be appointed at the top salary of $8,000 net, or $10,000 gross. It is expected that in many instances, certainly, they would be appointed at much lesser salaries, giving them an opportunity gradually to reach the maximum if they were worth while.

Therefore the committees will be entirely free in what they may do as to the professional staffs, but the joint resolution does put a limit on what they can do with the clerical staffs. It provides, for example, that they may appoint a chief clerk and an assistant chief clerk at salaries up to $8,000 net, or $10,000 gross, but that the other four members of the clerical staff shall be limited to a base salary of $2,000 up to a base salary of $3,720, which roughly would mean a gross of from about $2,900 to a gross of about $5,200.

Mr. President, that is not as much of a limitation as many thought it would be wise to impose, but it seemed to be a fair compromise in order to restrict in some manner what should be paid the members of the staffs.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I do not rise to dispute what the Senator has been saying; I think probably the limitation is wise. I merely desire to have clarified a question in my own mind. As I recall, the original reorganization bill contained no reference to the chief clerk or the assistant chief clerk; there was merely blanket authority to employ all these clerks up to $8,000.

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. And the two new titles were inserted. I assume it was the judgment of Senators that each committee could make its own designation as to a chief clerk and an assistant chief clerk.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct, and the thought was that certainly there would be two top men in the clerical staff, to whom the committee might pay the top figures, but there would be a ceiling, so to speak, on the four other members of the clerical staff.

Mr. HATCH. My attention was attracted to another matter. I do not know whether the Senator has given it thought, but in the provision relating to the clerks for the Committee on Appropriations, which is a separate provision, I see that the maximum for clerks of other committees, the lesser clerks, is $3,720, while there is retained a maximum for such clerks of the Committee on Appropriations of $3,420. Was that intended?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; but the Committee on Appropriations has always had in the past a larger staff than the other committees, and the top assistants have been paid a higher rate. We would still cling to that practice, so far as clerks needed in the Committee on Appropriations are concerned, but we all felt that the rate fixed was high enough to enable the committee to get competent stenographers and a competent messenger.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BRIDGES. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I am in thorough accord with everything the Senator has said, but I doubt the wisdom of fixing a lower limitation as to one committee and making a discrimination as between that and other committees. This is merely a suggestion. I doubt whether such a provision would be wise.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should be delighted to offer an amendment to raise the figures in line 8 on page 2 from $3,420 to $3,720, to make the provision uniform as to all committees.

Mr. HATCH. I think that would be better.

Mr. BRIDGES. I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment to the pending resolution which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$3,420" and insert "$3,720."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I observe that there is a reclassification of clerks, in that there is a principal clerk and an assistant clerk. Is any recognition given to the minority side in the selection of the assistant clerk?

Mr. BRIDGES. There is none provided in the reorganization legislation. Having been a member of the minority for 10 years, I personally feel that in each committee certainly the minority is entitled to representation in picking the clerks of the committee. If I had been writing the reorganization law, I personally would have written such a provision into the law, but it is not in the law, therefore it is left to the option of the various committees.

In the Committee on Appropriations we have agreed that two of the clerks shall be appointed by the minority, and we are going to establish that as a policy. Furthermore, I may say that we are keeping as the clerk and assistant clerk of the committee, the present clerk and assistant clerk, who for some time past served the present minority party when it was in control. We are making no change. We are leaving that on a nonpartisan basis.

Mr. OVERTON. I understand that, and I think the committee made a very wise decision in that regard. But the question I ask is whether the minority will be recognized in the selection of the assistant clerks. Will the majority have the appointment of both the clerks and the assistant clerks of the various committees?

Mr. BRIDGES. My answer has to be that there is nothing in the law to require that the minority be recognized. It is my personal opinion that the minority should be recognized, but it is not in the law.

Mr. OVERTON. That is, in the selection of the assistant clerks?

Mr. BRIDGES. In the selection of the assistant clerks.

Mr. OVERTON. There are three classes, the principal clerk, the assistant clerk, and then clerks generally.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have to answer that there is nothing in the law with respect to that.

Mr. OVERTON. I was wondering whether any policy had been adopted.

Mr. BRIDGES. No; except in the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am chairman, where we have agreed on a policy, as the Senator knows, which all have considered to be fair. I could not speak as to what the other committees will do.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare we have allotted to the minority an assistant clerk at $7,500 gross, and the only position he could fill would be that of assistant clerk. So far as the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare is concerned, we have given the minority the appointment of an assistant clerk.

I think the Reorganization Act recognizes that the minority should have control over some appointments, because it provides that certain of the clerks may be assigned to the "ranking minority member"—I think that is the way it is put—that there shall be some clerks assigned to the ranking minority member.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New Hampshire. My recollection is that there is a clause in the act providing that the four supposed experts and the six clerks shall be apportioned, not in any particular fashion, but that the minority shall be given representation in their choice.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to paragraph (a) of section 202 of the Reorganization Act, which reads:

SEC. 202. (a) Each standing committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives (other than the Appropriations Committees) is authorized to appoint by a majority vote of the committee not more than four professional staff members in addition to the clerical staffs on a permanent basis without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office; and said staff members shall be assigned to the chairman and ranking minority member of such committee as the committee may deem advisable—

And so forth.

Mr. TAFT. That language applies only to the six clerks. It does not apply to the professional assistants. Professional assistants are not intended to be partisan in any way, and so far as the committee of which I am chairman is concerned, I do not know whether the ones we select will be Republicans or Democrats, but they are not supposed to have any particular attachment to either majority or minority. I think the Senator will find it so provided in the act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that a committee attaché may himself be nonpartisan, but it seems to me the purpose is to enable the minority to tell such a man what to do, if the minority desires to have certain research work conducted.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will yield, I am only calling attention to the fact that the provision of the act about the minority applies only to the clerks; it does not apply to the four professional assistants. There is a good reason why it should not, because, for instance, on the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, we expect to have an economist; a man familiar with labor questions; an expert on health problems; and one familiar with matters of education. We may also have to have a man versed in veterans' affairs. We shall have to omit one of those, because there is provision for only four. There is no particular reason to assign any one of them to the minority or the majority. They are experts on particular subjects, and we have five important subjects within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. So that I think those professional assistants ought to be looked upon as experts chosen by the entire committee, in no way assigned either to the minority or to the majority.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would allow the minority to attend the meetings, would he not?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not altogether agree with my distinguished friend from Ohio on that question. I think under a liberal interpretation the Reorganization Act follows the custom which has prevailed in the past. For example, in the Committee on Finance as it was operating in the Seventy-ninth Congress, the minority definitely had a professional representative working in their behalf.

It seems to me that if, for instance, the Committee on Finance is going to employ a professional staff consisting of four members, certainly the minority members of that committee ought to have a voice in the selection of those four professionals.

I cite another reason for my conclusion. The act clearly states, for instance, under paragraph (c) of section 202:

> The clerical staff of each standing committee, which shall be appointed by a majority vote of the committee, shall consist of not more than six clerks, to be attached to the office of the chairman, to the ranking minority member, and to the professional staff, as the committee may deem advisable.

In other words, as I construe that language of the act, a part of the clerical staff would be attached to the minority, and if we selected a part of that minority staff, that same personnel could be attached to one of the professionals. Unless all members agree upon the staff I can see where confusion and inefficiency could creep in.

It seems to me that very definitely we should have a right to say at least who some of these professionals are going to be. However I agree thoroughly with the Senator that there should be no politics in connection with the selection of these men. That is provided for in the Reorganization Act. They should be capable men, competent to perform the work they are selected to do. However, I certainly would never agree that the majority party should select all four members of the staff if we are to follow the letter and spirit of the La Follette-Monroney Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that all four have to be approved by the committees.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it seems to me absolutely necessary that the four professional members be selected and approved by the full committee without regard to partisanship, because it is perfectly obvious that if some of them were under the direction of the minority and others were under the direction of the majority, there would soon be a committee divided against itself on certain matters, and nothing but confusion would be the result.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. That of course would not prevent the majority selecting all four members, regardless of what the minority desired, because the majority party could, if it chose to do so, select the four professional members.

Mr. AIKEN. That is probably true.

Mr. LUCAS. That is the point I am making. In other words, it seems to me that the majority and the minority ought to agree upon the four professionals, if they can, certainly before the names are presented.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator from Illinois that I think that is just what will happen in practically every one of the committees. I hope that in all the committees there will be agreement. Certainly there has been no disagreement as yet in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The minority members suggested the name of a certain person and it was readily accepted by the majority members, because they felt he was competent.

I assume the reason the law provides that the minority shall be represented on the clerical staff is that they might feel freer to go to a member of their own party in search of certain information; but it is my understanding that the clerical staff of the committee should work for the committee as a whole, for the good of the country as a whole, and should not indulge in partisan politics on either side.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is extremely valuable to have this matter clarified. It had been my understanding that these professionals were supposed to be of a rather permanent character, comparable to those who served so effectively in the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, where the experts were continued without regard to party, and complete reliance has always been placed in them. It had been my understanding that in the development of the reorganization it was contemplated these four professionals should be of that character, which would immediately eliminate the idea that they were of any particular political persuasion.

As a practical matter, in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for instance, we have the same problem to which the Senator from Ohio referred. There are four different fields of jurisdiction. Formerly the Commerce Committee of the Senate handled the merchant marine and aviation; the Interstate Commerce Committee handled railroad and radio legislation. Those fields are entirely different. They invite the attention of the most expert professional opinion, and it has been my assumption that it would be contemplated that experts in those fields would be secured, and that if their services were satisfactory they might continue until they could in some measure match the understanding of these problems as presented by the executive departments, on whom hitherto we have been compelled exclusively to rely.

It seems to me to be unfortunate that the question of partisanship should enter into the matter of clerkships. It is obvious that an assistant clerk who could particularly serve the minority or the majority would be most helpful and in order, and I hope that will be the eventual decision which will be reached.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to make one further observation on this question. I do not anticipate any trouble in the selection of the professional staffs or the clerical staffs that go along with the professional staffs. I think it would be most unfortunate if there should be any trouble in selecting these experts, but again I point out the fact that under the Reorganization Act the majority party members have the power, if they care to wield it, to select all four of these members, as well as the clerical staff.

I hope the time will not come when a record vote will be necessary in any committee upon any individual who might be serving on the professional staff. I hope we can agree in advance in every committee, as to the kind and character of men who ought to be employed, so that the selection may be unanimous; but I desire to say that in the selection of these men for the professional work, it would seem the better part of wisdom for the majority to take into consideration the wishes of the minority.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I fully agree with the Senator from Illinois that we are worrying about something that is not going to happen. I am not happy about the manner in which section 202 (a) is drafted; but I think its intendment is perfectly clear. It says that—

> Each standing committee of the Senate * * * is authorized to appoint by a majority vote—

It does not say the majority members of the committee shall have the right of designation, but that the committee shall by a majority vote appoint these four professional staff members, and that vote might come from both sides of the committee table.

I think as a practical matter the Senators will find taking place exactly what has happened in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The committee has been moving along rather slowly. There has been no appointment made either to the professional staff or to the clerical force without the concurrence of the minority members of the committee—speaking of the minority in a political sense.

The committee has authorized me to make certain appointments, and in every instance, I may say to the Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from Texas, I have consulted with and have received the sanction of the ranking minority members of the committee. Again I am speaking in a political sense.

I think what has happened with respect to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce probably is going to happen with respect to all the committees, and that in connection with this matter no practical difficulty will be encountered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the committee amendment to the joint resolution is agreed to.

The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY

The resolution (S. J. Res. 41), authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1947, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11, 1947, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McMAHON obtained the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield for a very brief executive session?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Edward M. Ranson, of Nevada, to be United States marshal for the district of Nevada.

By Mr. REVERCOMB, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dillon S. Myer, of Ohio, to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority in the National Housing Agency. (Appointed during the last recess of the Senate.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. TOBEY subsequently said: Mr. President, last Friday the nomination of Dillon S. Myer to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority went over at the request of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART]. On Saturday the Senator from Indiana came to my office with a group of nine prominent Legionnaires from various sections of the country, who appeared in opposition to certain phases of administration of the National Housing Act, and the United States Housing Authority, and made very serious charges of inefficiency and misapplication of the principles of the act. Therefore I told them, and I told the Senator from Indiana, and I would have told the Senate had I been here when the bells rang announcing an executive session, that I should ask that the nomination be held up until after a hearing could be had a week from tomorrow morning.

I now ask unanimous consent that the order by which the nomination of Dillon S. Myer to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority was confirmed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the order with respect to the confirmation of the nomination of Dillon S. Myer to be Administrator of the United States Housing Authority be vacated, and that the nomination be returned to the Executive Calendar? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Dillon S. Myer be recommitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of W. Averell Harriman, of New York, to be Secretary of Commerce. (Received recess appointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Chapman Foster, of New York, to be Under Secretary of Commerce. (Received recess appointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Adrian S. Fisher, of Tennessee, to be Solicitor, Department of Commerce. (Received recess appointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clarence M. Young, of California, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board for the term of 6 years expiring December 31, 1952. (Received recess appointment.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Richard F. Mitchell, of Iowa, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for the remainder of the term expiring December 31, 1949.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services I report certain nominations approved by the committee this morning. These are all nominations for positions in the Army, Navy, and Selective Service, and under the rules should lie over for 1 day. The nominations are of high-ranking officers, from colonel in the Army and above, and from captain in the Navy and above. So I ask that these nominations go to the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nominations reported by the Senator from South Dakota from the Committee on Armed Services, will be received and placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. GURNEY. I now report from the Committee on Armed Services, a great number of other nominations, routine in nature, in the Army and in the Navy. They are junior officers. I may say that the committee has adopted a policy when we receive nominations of all grades and ranks, to pass a list of the nominations around to each Senator on the committee. I want to make this statement so the Senate will know the nominations have been given thorough consideration. There are 13 members of the committee. We have lists, together with a complete record of the service of the nominees in the Army or Navy. The lists and the record are given to each committee member. We hold the nominations and do not act on them as a committee until each member has had a chance for a week or more to go over the nominations carefully. That practice has been followed in this instance in the case of all the nominations to which I now refer.

I report these nominations of junior officers in the Army and Navy at this time, and ask for immediate consideration of the nominations in view of the fact that they have been so thoroughly considered in committee, and in order to save printing expense, for it would cost about $600 to have the nominations printed on the Executive Calendar. In view of those considerations I feel we are completely justified in asking for immediate consideration of the nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota that the routine nominations, which he has reported from the Committee on Armed Services, may be presently considered? The Chair hears no objection, and the routine nominations are confirmed.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of routine nominations upon which the Senate has just acted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified immediately.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I now move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

THE AMERICAN FARMERS' RIGHT TO PROTECTION UNDER TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Connecticut has been very kind to agree in advance to yield to me for 2 or 3 minutes while I place three items in the RECORD. The first item deals with a subject which will be of great concern, I am sure, to the Eightieth Congress, namely that of reciprocal-trade agreements. Those of us from the West are somewhat concerned, and I think rightly, over the possibility that certain segments of American agriculture may suffer unjustifiably from trade agreements that fail to give adequate consideration to the needs and rights of American farmers. I think it of such great importance to our national security that we protect the economic position of the American farmer that on January 23 I appeared before the Committee for Reciprocity Information at its meeting held in the Natural History Museum in this city, and gave testimony on this problem. I ask unanimous consent to have my testimony printed in the body of the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the testimony was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WAYNE MORSE, OF OREGON

Senator MORSE. May it please the committee, I want to make a brief statement in regard to some of the problems that I think confront us in the Congress of the United States in connection with the oncoming reciprocal-trade-agreement debates and some of the problems which I think confront us out in the West in regard to our agricultural problems.

I think you gentlemen appreciate this fact, that the testimony of any witness has to be judged somewhat by both his biases and his background, and I stand before you this morning as one who has had a lifelong interest in, and participation in, agricultural pursuits, as well as my own professional pursuit of the law.

I think it is of great importance that we recognize that if we are going to have a stable economy in America then we must have a coordinated one and we must not have trade policies that at any point seem to discriminate unfairly against any segment of that economy.

I would point out to this Board that it happens to be my opinion, subject to whatever bias you wish to attribute to it, that American agriculture is, after all, the very foundation of our private-property economy in this country. I expressed that in certain language in a press release following my recent trip through Europe and the Middle East. I expressed it by way of a statement as to my impressions of the relationship between American farm problems and international relations. If it please the Board I would like to read briefly from that press release. I said:

"The other main impression of my trip which I would stress is that it is impossible for Americans to understand various incidents that occur in Europe today unless one recognizes that the struggle for food, shelter, and clothing, in order to just barely exist physically, consumes the full time of many millions of people in Europe. People haunted by the specter of starvation and disease find little sustenance in discussions of the political ideologies—even that of democracy. They become easy victims of propaganda disseminated by those who seek falsely to attribute to America the sources of Europe's ills. The struggle for food all over Europe today should teach us here in America that the American farmer is the key person in our economic system of plenty. Without a sound, prosperous agricultural system no country can enjoy any security in a decent standard of living for all of its people."

I would digress from the press release to say that I think it of great importance that American labor and American businessmen recognize that their economic prosperity is founded upon the prosperity of American agriculture. I am sometimes at a loss to understand the position taken by American labor leaders in regard to a fair return to the farmer for the produce of the farm. I think labor defeats its own best interests in those instances in which it opposes decent prices for the farmer. I think labor needs to recognize, and should be told quite frankly by those politicians who try to be statesmen, that labor defeats its own best interests, it defeats its own best wage interests, by carrying on campaigns against decent prices for farmers.

It always has been my view that American labor should work in close cooperation with American farmers for agricultural prices which give to the American farmer a decent profit return for farm products. Unless a high purchasing power is enjoyed by the American farmer the American worker cannot expect to enjoy a high purchasing power through good wages. Likewise the American businessman cannot hope to avoid a business depression, with all the business bankruptcies that go along with a depression, if we permit an agricultural depression to hit our country.

I think it is very important that all producers within our economy such as farmers, businessmen, industrial workers, and all the rest of us should never forget that our private enterprise system in America is absolutely dependent upon maintaining a high purchasing power for all groups. In my judgment there is no chance of our avoiding serious economic disruptions in this country with resulting depressions if we permit any one economic group to be discriminated against to its disadvantage. Hence, I think it is very important that our Government, through both of its political parties, makes clear to the American farmer that it is not going to enter into reciprocal-trade agreements that do damage to the economic security of American agriculture.

Returning to the press release, I read:

"Let us not forget that if we weaken the economic position of the American farmer we threaten the prosperity of American labor and business and we also endanger America's influence in international affairs because for many years to come millions of people the globe around are going to look to the food surpluses of American farms to keep body and soul together. Wherever I went I listened to inquiries about crop conditions in America because our agricultural conditions are bound to determine the difference between life and death for many people abroad. Let our politicians here at home not forget that any political program which seeks to injure the economic status of the American farmer has a direct bearing not only on economic standards in this country but also upon international relations as well."

Now, gentlemen, with that as a preface to the few brief remarks I want to make in regard to reciprocal-trade policies themselves, let me say first that, as my record shows, I have been a supporter of the basic principle and theory of reciprocal trade. I shall be a supporter of reciprocal-trade policies if they can be worked out in a manner which will protect the legitimate interests of the American farmer. I certainly do not want to see us return to the old congressional tactics of writing tariffs on the floor of Congress. This practice reached its most unfortunate logrolling aspects with the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

I try to be a realist in American politics. I try to be objective in facing Government policies. At times when I think criticisms are deserving I object to the policies of my party. I have never been one of those in the Republican Party that has favored the old-line high-tariff Republican program, because I think we, as a party, have much to answer for as far as the development of unfortunate international economic conditions are concerned as a result of some of the features of the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

At the same time I think we need to recognize that we cannot in this country justify discriminating against or destroying any segment of American agriculture, because, and I want to emphasize this point, I think the greatest national defense we have is the American farm.

I think that unless we can continue to be a self-sustaining Nation in regard to the production of our food supply, then, of course, we will find ourselves in the decades to come a very much weakened Nation as far as international relations are concerned.

I noticed all over Europe and the Middle East that those countries which cannot feed themselves are in a very real sense at the economic mercy of the rest of the world. I am sure the American people do not appreciate to the degree they should that to a very great extent the very liberties that we enjoy as free individuals under our political system of democracy stem from the farm soil of America. By that I mean that the fact that American agriculture is capable of producing a food supply adequate for national sustenance is one of the greatest strengths of our democracy.

We should remember that when a nation is not capable of raising its own food supply it constantly runs the danger of political unrest within its border. Hungry people are more interested in food than in political ideologies. The history of totalitarian governments and the rise of some dictators, such as Hitler and Mussolini, show very clearly the relationship between the food supply of a nation and political unrest.

We have been very fortunate throughout our history that American farmers have been able to produce an adequate food supply for our people by extending our agricultural frontiers during the great development of our western country and now in the more recent years by remarkable improvements in the science of agricultural production.

I wish to stress the point, and I do not think it can be too greatly emphasized, that the American farmer is, and has been, a creator of great political stability in America because as a well-fed people we always have been able to devote our energies and thinking to the problems of self-government. However, we must be careful not to sell the American farmer short in any of our international trade policies because if we force out of production any of the major segments of American agriculture, such as livestock, fruit, nuts, and grain, because of any trade agreements which make it unprofitable for the American farmer to produce those commodities, we shall injure not only our farmers but our country as a whole insofar as its economic stability is concerned. Then, too, we should remember that once any segment of American agriculture is so weakened as to make it an unprofitable venture for farmers it will take years and years to get that segment of agriculture back into production.

Farm production cannot be turned on and off like a faucet. Fruit trees cannot be grown in a year. Good herds of livestock take many years to develop. Neglected grain fields do not spring back to full production in a year or two or three. Farm products cannot be produced on the same basis as automobiles or refrigerators. Depleted farms are depleted for a long time and sometimes permanently. Unprofitable agriculture always is accompanied by undesirable agricultural practices which farmers are forced to adopt in a desperate endeavor to make both ends meet.

Then I would point out that we as a people—140,000,000 of us—must never forget that maintaining an economically healthy and prosperous agriculture is of basic importance. It is important not only to the economic stability and prosperity of this country but also to our political stability and the national security as well. In fact, as I have said so many times, I think our American farmers are our first line of defense in protecting us as a nation.

I think it follows from what I have said that if we adopt trade policies that lower the standard of living of the American farmer, lower his purchasing power, we are not only damaging our domestic economy, but we are also damaging our international position. I repeat, unless we can maintain a very high level of farm production and a very high standard of living for the American farmer, we weaken ourselves from a defense standpoint.

That is why I have said so frequently and repeatedly that prosperous American farms are, in a very real sense, more important to national defense than strong navies and strong armies. I say that as one who certainly shall be the last in the Senate of the United States, in the Eightieth Congress, to favor any fiscal policy, of my party, which would weaken us from a military standpoint. I do not want to weaken us, either, from an economic standpoint.

So, before referring to specific segments of the agricultural industry, I want to make another general observation, and that is that I think in the development of sound reciprocal-trade programs, aimed at protecting American agriculture, we need to be realistic about the fact that there are conflicting economic groups at home that give evidence too frequently that they would be willing to sacrifice the American farmers' position for an improvement in the American manufacturers' position, as far as the shipping of their manufactured goods abroad is concerned. I think that those American businessmen that take that position out of selfish interests, which is an understandable and human failing, are in the long run destroying their own house of industry.

Therefore, I think it is important to try to get American industry and American labor and the American farmer to recognize their mutuality of interests, to recognize that we are going to have to protect American agriculture by seeing to it that reciprocal-trade agreements be not entered into that destroy the legitimate rights of American farm groups or result in the lowering of the standard of living of those groups.

The third general point I would like to make is that I think that our State Department officials should cooperate with our Congress, and I emphasize the word "cooperate." I think that in this Congress cooperation particularly needs to be emphasized. I don't think I let you gentlemen in on any secret if you read either the newspapers or the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that there are those in this Congress in positions of great power who are not particularly friendly to the principle of reciprocal trade, let alone being friendly to the implementation of the principle. As I said to a State Department group the other day, I think it behooves our foreign-trade experts to be exceedingly objective about this problem of cooperating with Congress in an endeavor to see to it that we do not proceed down international trade avenues that are going to lead to a discrimination against the American farmers. If our State Department enters into agreements unfair to our farmers then some of us who are its best friends in the Congress certainly will have to resist such agreements.

The next general observation I want to make is that I think that we must make a choice between the principle of reciprocal trade and the principle of tariffs written on the floor of Congress by logrolling methods. The latter policy leads to economic isolationism and economic isolationism ultimately leads to international economic war. History teaches us that a few years of international war will lead the nations again in that vicious circle ending in military war. We must remember that we are dealing here this morning with a domestic problem which is also pregnant with international implications.

I think that we can ill afford to develop reciprocal-trade policies that will split this Nation in the eightieth session of Congress into such a serious split that we may endanger a sound program of international cooperation on the economic front. I think the problem of sound international trade is just as important as international cooperation on the political front through the United Nations if we want to develop a permanent peace.

It we are going to be realists about it, then in the development of these reciprocal-trade agreements, I think we have to recognize that today we are surrounded, for the most part, by totalitarian economic nations. In many instances they are out-and-out police states. One of the characteristics of these totalitarian states, with their governmental regimented economy, is that their political philosophy is not only in world competition with the political philosophy of democracy, but the economic basis of totalitarianism also places these police states in conflict with our system of economic competition based upon our private-property economy of free enterprise.

I think it is an exceedingly significant fact, from a politically philosophical point of view, that our political and economic democracy is in competition, as far as foreign trade is concerned, with totalitarian states and their regimented economies. As a result of trends in foreign relations there are new problems that have been created in the development of future international-trade policies on the part of our country.

When we are dealing with a totalitarian government and a totalitarian economy in competition with our private-property economy, or what has been referred to by the previous witness as our private-enterprise economy, we are dealing with a type of government that has it within its power to use its forces of government to so subsidize any one of its industries or direct governmental funds into the channels of any of its industries to whatever degree necessary to make it economically impossible for American industry to compete for foreign markets with such governmental subsidization by a totalitarian state. Hence I think in working out reciprocal-trade agreements—and I am sure that this view prevails throughout the Congress, because I have heard too many of my colleagues in the Senate discuss it with some emphasis and some feeling, too—that it is of the utmost importance in the development of reciprocal-trade agreements to see to it that those agreements contain whatever protections are necessary to protect American agriculture. We must not permit a totalitarian government to destroy a segment of American agriculture by way of concentrating on a particular farm product and flood our markets with it to the disadvantage of the producers of the same product in America.

Now, as to specific agricultural products that affect the West and are involved or are bound to be involved in reciprocal-trade agreements, I wish to refer to one which will be under discussion here this morning, namely the cherry industry. The cherry industry is afraid that it is about to be injured by some trade agreements. However, before I discuss the problem further I hasten to point out to the Board that I produce cherries—3 acres of them! Many times I have decided that it is 3 acres too much. I mention this personal interest because I am sure that if I don't mention it some enterprising newspaper reporter will dig it out and charge me with concealing a selfish interest in this matter. However, I am sure that the few acres of cherries, filberts and walnuts which I have on my small farm do not disqualify me as a witness. Rather, I think my orchard, though small in acreage, gives me a better understanding of the relation of our national foreign-trade policies to the farmers' marketing problems.

I am afraid that western agriculture in many respects is in danger of being sacrificed by some of the reciprocal-trade proposals. We in the West entertain some fears that our farmers may suffer from agreements that are aimed primarily at giving great economic advantage to eastern industry. Hence our producers of cherries and other fruit are concerned. Our nut, grain, and livestock industries are urging their congressional delegations to watch out for and protect their interests.

So my plea is that the State Department officials and this committee, in making its trade-agreement recommendations be very careful to see to it that we do not weaken the economic position of our great western agricultural empire. If we do not protect the welfare of our farmers we not only will be faced with rightful and righteous indignation on the part of the western people, which will threaten politically the whole program—and I am speaking quite realistically about it—but I think we will find ourselves faced with a congressional attempt to return us to what I think is a very unsound practice as far as our national economic welfare is concerned, and that is the writing of tariffs on the floor of the Congress of the United States.

I intend to work for and urge a maximum of cooperation between the State Department and the Congress in developing the trade-agreement program of this country, but I shall be ever ready to resist any attempt to develop that program in a direction that seeks to discriminate to the disadvantage of western agriculture.

I think I know a little bit about the cherry industry and the nut industry. I think that you who have traveled through the Willamette Valley, and through Washington and California, will agree with me that the fruit and nut industries, along with our other farm products, are vital to the economic prosperity of my section of the country.

You cannot expect our farmers in the West to ignore entirely their selfish interests, and certainly no one who represents them has the right in Congress to ignore their rightful economic interests. Protecting the best interests of American farmers need not endanger a sound reciprocal-trade program.

I have told farmers in meetings, that we ought to try to develop a workable reciprocal trade policy. They have not always agreed with me but I have tried to point out that in connection with this problem we cannot, in this country, have our cake and eat it, too. We must expect to have to make some sacrifices but those sacrifices should not place an undue burden upon one group in our society.

The point I make is that we must be shown, in the case of any sacrifice that results from any trade policies of this Government that the sacrifice in fact is a necessary sacrifice. If it is, then I raise my last point.

It is my contention that we do not have any right, certainly no moral right, and I hope that in the not too far distant future we will not have any legal right, because, if necessary, I think it must be covered by legislation, to proceed by a trade agreement to destroy the economic position of any segment of American agriculture without seeing to it that such segment is adequately compensated for its losses.

In other words, I refer to a pretty good old constitutional doctrine that I do not think we have any right to confiscate property without adequate compensation. I think the farmers of this country have a right to know in advance, and well in advance, of the consummation of any trade policy that is going to injure their economic interests, what the terms of that agreement are going to be. Then, I think our Government has an obligation to see to it that our farmers are adequately compensated for any losses that they suffer as a result of trade policies which make it impossible to market their products at a fair profit.

I appreciate all the implications of that. But I do want to point out that after all, whatever international trade policy we adopt it must be a policy which seeks to promote the general welfare of all of our people. All of our people as taxpayers should assume their share of responsibility in, and obligations for, that policy. If it is necessary in the national interest in any particular agreement to adopt some policy that does have economically detrimental effects upon any segment of American agriculture, then I think those affected are entitled to economic compensation for their losses by way of support prices or similar Government aid. If I am correct in one of my major premises, namely, that a prosperous American agriculture is essential to our national defense program, then, surely, the individual American farmer is entitled to economic protection from his Government in case his Government adopts a trade policy that destroys a profitable market for his farm products.

I know that such a point of view will be criticized, but I am ready to meet the criticism. I am convinced that we are going to have to participate on a cooperative basis with other nations in world trade. No longer can we follow a program of economic isolationism. We must be willing, as a people, and as a government to buy goods from abroad as well as sell goods abroad if we are to have world economic stability. Without the stability produced by such trade, I think the peace of the world always will be threatened. However, we certainly haven't any right to give benefits to people abroad at the expense of farmers here at home by entering into any trade policy that has the result of destroying their livelihood, unless we are willing, as a nation, to compensate our farmers for losses that flow from such a policy.

You have been very indulgent and patient. I appreciate your courtesy in allowing me to testify. I shall be perfectly willing to answer questions that you may wish to put to me relating to anything that I have said.

Mr. ARNER. Senator MORSE, we are very glad to have your very instructive statement, and I believe I speak for the entire panel in saying that we are in agreement with your general statement, as far as the individual products are concerned. Of course, it would be out of order for us to express an opinion at this time.

Senator MORSE. I fully appreciate that, sir.

Mr. ARNER. But after an experience of 10 years in connection with the trade-agreements program, I can assure you that agriculture has always been an active participant in the program, and that the views of the Department of Agriculture have always been given a full and considered hearing.

Senator MORSE. I am sure that is so.

Mr. ARNER. I am sure it will continue to be that way. We will recall Mr. Dunlap.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the second item which I should like to have published in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks is a very excellent editorial entitled "Camel's Nose" appearing in the Sunday Washington Post of January 26. It refers to the question of the appointment of special committees by the United States Senate. I wish to associate myself with the contents of the editorial.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMEL'S NOSE

With two special Senate committees set up within the first 3 weeks of the new Congress, the streamlined structure approved at the last session begins to look pretty ragged. It was bad enough for the Senate to continue the War Investigating Committee, with restricted powers, to pursue the work it began under the leadership of President Truman when he was still in the Senate. Considerably worse, from the viewpoint of creating unfortunate precedents, is the establishment of a new special Committee on Small Business. Here is a naked and undisguised return to the discredited idea of bloc legislation as distinguished from lawmaking from a broad view of our national problems.

Demands will certainly be pressed for other special committees dealing with problems of petroleum, wool, and other commodities. If the trend which the Republican leadership of the Senate has set in motion is followed, the whole committee structure will soon present a chaotic pattern once more. Congress will be focusing its attention more on pin-point studies of special problems than upon national interests, issues, and policies. The committees set up under the Congressional Reorganization Act are designed to cover the whole spectrum of national legislation and to keep each problem in its proper relationship to other related problems in the same sphere. Half the value of the new system can readily leak out of loopholes such as those which the Senate created last week.

In a gesture of obvious repentance, Senator TAFT offered a resolution that would permit any future measure to create a special committee to be vetoed by the standing committee on whose jurisdiction it would encroach. Special committees could also be turned down by action of the new Committee on Rules and Administration. It seems to us that acceptance of this safeguard is imperative to save the new system from being splintered once more. We hope that the chairman of the Republican policy committee will show as much zeal in getting this safeguard adopted as he has done for disrupting the work of the reorganizers in these first assaults upon it. The best he can do will not wholly offset the damage that has been done. The camel's nose is now in the tent, and an extraordinary effort will have to be exerted to prevent him from taking it over or knocking it down in the process.

SALE OF WAR-VETERAN HORSES BY THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the last item which I should like to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks is an article entitled "Horses, Scarred Vets of War, To Be Sold Like Hardware," published in the Washington Times-Herald for Sunday, January 26, 1947.

I speak on it not only as a horseman and breeder of horses for a great many years, but I speak, too, in the interests of all those in this country who take an active interest in the work of humane societies. If the contents of this article presents the facts, then I trust that the article itself will be sufficient to stop the Army and the Surplus Property Board from disposing, in the manner described in this article, of 16 or more old horses that have served our Government well. If the facts are correctly stated in the article, then certainly I think ordinary humaneness toward animals calls upon this Government to see to it that these old horses are not sold to the highest bidder, by way of sealed bids. Such a procedure does not permit the Government to know in advance who the bidders are or what disposition is to be made of the horses.

After all, the sensitivity of government to humane principles can often be judged by such little matters as this. As one who has been very active in the work of humane societies in this country, I deplore this method of disposing of these horses. If in fact the article written by Mr. Frank M. Smith sets out the facts, which I assume it does, I think the proposed sale should be stopped at once. Hence, my plea is that the Government should reconsider at once its method of disposing of the horses and either make certain that they go into the hands of kindly owners or that the horses be humanely disposed of. They should be pensioned to pasture and good care for the rest of their lives. In any event, we should assure the animal lovers of this country that these veteran horses will not spend the remaining days of their lives receiving inhumane treatment.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ON THE BLOCK: HORSES, SCARRED VETS OF WAR, TO BE SOLD LIKE HARDWARE—AUCTION OF EQUINE "EX-SOLDIERS" BY WAA VIOLATES HUMANE PRINCIPLES

(By Frank M. Smith)

QUANTICO, VA., January 25.—Sixteen work-worn, decrepit horses far past the age of any humane use are on exhibit here at the marine post stables for sale.

Originally 17 horses were advertised, but 1 has died of old age since then. It was "destroyed," they tell you, laconically.

The sale is a closed-bid sale of the War Assets Administration. It ought to be closed, period.

SOLD LIKE HARDWARE

Rhoda Christmas (expert horsewoman), Photographer Joe Heiberger, and I drove down here to see why and what kind of horses were being sold in such a strange fashion.

Horses are usually sold at auction, not on a closed bid, like a thousand feet of barbed wire or a keg of nails.

We found out right off why they were being sold.

The question that is still puzzling us is why anyone would want to buy them.

"JUST SURPLUS"

Warrant Officer E. A. Anderson answered the first question very easily.

"They are surplus," he said. "We can only keep 40 head here. So these are surplus and have to be sold. They came from the Army remount station at Front Royal and were used at Cheltenham, Md., for recreation riding and guard duty.

"This is not the Army doing this, or the Marine Corps, for that matter. We just certify them as surplus, and War Assets sells them.

"Surplus," he said. A good way to shirk responsibility, I say.

Then he showed us the horses. Four were in a corral, six in a nearby pasture, and the rest quartered in another pasture about 7 miles from the stables. It was the considered judgment of Rhoda Christmas that the entire lot wouldn't bring an average of $25 apiece.

Anderson knew the names and characteristics of most. He spoke carefully of Harvey. Harvey, he said, would make a good horse for a child. The kind that would stop if the child fell off.

Harvey is going to stop all of his own accord very soon one of these days even if the child stays on.

Harvey is 23 years of age. He is a bay gelding, weighs 1,000 pounds, and stands 14 hands 3 inches high.

Right now Harvey is in pretty good shape, age considered.

And that is the pitiful part of the whole picture.

MUST BE SOLD

Harvey and the rest of those horses have not been used since June. For all intents and purposes they have been retired. They get good food. Are kept clean and all their ailments are given attention.

Now they are to be sold as surplus. For what? Dog food? For their hides? Or perhaps to a miserable starved existence pulling a lowly huckster wagon or dragging their brittle-creaking joints through spring plowing for a callous master.

Their days as riding horses are over or so nearly so that they will collapse any day.

The majority of them have sway backs and deep hollows over their eyes. Two are lame. Their frames have deteriorated and what flesh they have is due to the good care the Army and Marine Corps have given them.

SEVERAL CALLS RECEIVED

Harvey admittedly was the oldest horse, but they also have 4 mules for sale and 1 of them is 26 and another 19.

War Assets, still operating on the keg of nails style of sale, blandly listed the ages of the horses in their handout advertising the sale including Belle, a bay mare, 21; Muley, bay mare, 15; Virginia, bay mare, 12; Pay Day, gelding, 20; Passing, bay gelding, 13; Martin, gelding, 17; Star, brown gelding, 12; Sam, gelding 14; and Dick, 13.

A look at Star's teeth and his frame would easily convince anyone that he was closer 20 than 12. Some looked older.

Anderson said they had received 10 or 12 calls about the horses. The bids were being made to the Richmond office of War Assets. They will be opened Wednesday at 11 a. m.

And some farmers think it is cheaper to pay $10 or $15 for a horse, work it through the summer, and turn it out to die of starvation next winter than to buy a good horse. So they'll probably all be sold.

Oh, yes; War Assets has other horses for sale at the Naval Powder Factory in Indian Head, Md., and at Front Royal, Va.

And the Army has hundreds of acres of rolling pasture land at the remount station at Front Royal, where many a horse has been retired after giving his best to his country.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, our efforts to secure agreement with the nations of the earth for the international control of atomic energy constitute the most important issue facing this country and the world today. Our former delegate to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission used a vivid and descriptive phrase to describe the alternatives which face us. He said we are engaged in a choice between the quick and the dead.

How is our choice proceeding, Mr. President? How far have we gone and how far are we likely to go? What are the issues in dispute? What is the setting on the stage of world affairs where we must, perforce, play out the international drama to either a fruitful or tragic end?

It seems to me that we have reached a point in our efforts where an objective critique is in order. The distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in his forthright and statesmanlike address at Cleveland wisely suggested that a nonpartisan, or, as he so felicitously phrased it, an unpartisan foreign policy, did not preclude free discussion of its content. Certainly we can do only good for our people and our country if we, as Senators, give of our best thought and consideration to the problems which many of us see as the crux of the peace.

I have said before and I say again that unless and until international control of atomic energy is an existing fact, there can be no stability in the years ahead, no security against sudden and complete destruction, and no guaranty, therefore, of the continuation of this Republic.

It would seem to be underscoring what is now the obvious to point out that atomic warfare will be different in kind and not merely in degree, from any warfare we have hitherto known. Weapons that are of some effectiveness as long as other nations do not possess the bomb will be as useless as the Roman phalanx, the broadsword, and the crossbow when other nations do have the atomic bomb. As an instance of how atomic warfare is different in kind from other warfare, it is disturbing to realize that most of the ships involved in the Bikini test last July are acknowledged by the Navy Department to be still radioactive today, 7 months later.

We must here exercise continued vigilance lest we permit the conception of laissez-faire in our armed forces to lead us to catastrophe. If we do not use all of our best judgment and wisdom in weighing the security situation and in guarding against the acceptance of the traditional defenses, we may have to share with our armed forces the responsibility for our destruction.

We have indeed attained a decided measure of progress in our thinking on this question since August 6, 1945. We all recollect that the first reaction to Hiroshima of, I believe, a majority of our people—yes, a majority of the Members of Congress—was that at all costs we must, as the phrase has it, "keep the secret." I suppose that we would, as a nation, still be of the same mind if it were possible that we could do so. But I think there is no question among informed people today, as it was recognized by some of us immediately after the event, that such a policy is illusory and fleeting in its security. This is so because in all too short a space of time the so-called secret will become known to other nations; and when that happens, any security based upon our sole possession of this force will come to an end. There is nothing we can do to prevent others from learning how to make atomic bombs, because the book of nature is open to all. There is not a single scientist of note in the whole country who does not acknowledge this as an accepted fact. We could hide our so-called secrets in the deepest vault at Fort Knox and shoot all our scientists, and other nations would still learn how to make atomic bombs.

It was because I recognized this was so that I urged, on the first day of the session convening after Hiroshima and Nagasaki, that we take steps to secure an international agreement for the control of atomic energy. I stated then that the control system must be enforced by an effective inspection system.

Mr. President, I urged this course for another important and compelling reason also. That was because atomic energy was capable of being turned from destructive to constructive uses. If the energies of our scientists, physicists, and engineers could be directed to research on and production of atomic engines instead of bigger and better atomic bombs, this new energy was capable of doing a vast share of the work of the world. History is replete with the exploitation and use of man's inventions, made for the easing of his burdens, to wreak upon him death and destruction. The wheel, invented to facilitate commerce, became attached to a war chariot. The Wright brothers' plane was adapted to the carrying of bombs. Thomas Edison's development of electricity was seized upon for improvements of weapons and Henry Ford's mass production of the automobile led to mechanized ground forces. But in our atomic plants, Mr. President, we had accomplished, through the urgency of warfare, the capture of a fraction of the sun's energy, not for peace but for destruction and death. And, Mr. President, there is where it will stop; there it will remain; that will be its sole use, until and unless man exhibits sufficient wisdom to achieve control over this force.

How can it be otherwise? How will it be possible to distribute fissionable material for use in atomic engines? Yes; how can we produce the appliances to use the material unless we are relieved of the necessity of bottling up our knowledge and hiding our secrets as long as we can? Competent physicists are on the record as stating that in 5 years we could have peacetime use of atomic energy on an ever-widening scale. Certainly research and use, even in the field of medicine and therapeutics alone, is being considerably impaired by the secrecy now necessary for our security.

At long last man has learned the prime secret of nature, but, alas, he cannot use it to enrich and ennoble his life because he has not yet learned how to keep it from destroying him. What a commentary on mankind's wisdom and sagacity it would be if our very failure to put this energy to work for our benefit were to result in our annihilation from this earth.

Mr. President, the moral leadership of the world has come upon us. Moral leadership imposes upon us the responsibility of guiding the world along the pathway which leads to an ever more peaceful and fruitful earth. That is a high responsibility but one in which we dare not fail.

Great power begets great responsibility, just as wealth and prestige beget concomitant duties. This is as true in the case of nations as it is in the case of individuals. We produced atomic power. It is our duty to lead the way to the solution of the vital problems raised by that achievement.

On the whole, Mr. President, I think we have not neglected our responsibility.

For the first time in history a great people have come into possession of a controlling weapon for the conquering of the world and have not only forsworn this use but have offered to share its peaceful benefits with mankind everywhere.

In essence, we have said to the world, "Here is something which could be used to conquer mankind. We will not use it thus; rather we will cooperate with all nations not only to see that no one uses it brutally but also that it is used in the ways of peace for the benefit of all."

Mr. President, I am deeply disappointed that our offer was not immediately accepted and that we are not today in full pursuit of the gains and benefits that are bound to result from an effective agreement on the subject.

Our failure to be further along the road is deeply disturbing. The clock ticks on, and with every tick we are losing a part of our capital of monopoly. When many nations have atomic bombs, peace will be precarious indeed, and the opportunity of achieving agreement for international control may become well-nigh impossible.

Mr. President, almost a year and a half has gone by since the world became aware of the menace of atomic weapons. More than a year has gone by since the historic Truman-Attlee-King declaration called upon the world to devise effective controls over atomic weapons in order to reap the benefits of atomic energy. Why are we still without such a control system? Why is the world still engaged in a mad race for atomic armament? Why must we, because of fear, continue to deprive the people of the world of the blessings in medicine, industry, and agriculture which atomic energy can bring to their lives? What are the prospects for agreement in the near future?

The situation in the international negotiations which exists today is briefly this: In the Security Council the United States has up to now maintained that the question of atomic energy control must be dealt with before general disarmament. Russia, on the other hand, insists that the General Assembly's disarmament resolution, including control of atomic weapons, be treated together and as a whole.

It is my contention, Mr. President, that it is immaterial whether control of atomic energy is discussed prior to or simultaneously with, but not together with, discussions on general disarmament. What is important is that agreement on atomic energy be concluded as soon as humanly possible and before any agreement on disarmament as a whole. Shall we discuss disarmament? By all means let us discuss it, but let us under no circumstances actually disarm before an international atomic control and inspection system has been in operation long enough to convince us of its effectiveness.

To permit atomic energy control, which a UN subcommittee has already found to be technically feasible, to become submerged in the discussions on general disarmament is to leave the world without control over atomic weapons for the duration of those discussions and until a disarmament treaty has been ratified by each of the contracting parties. And how long might that take? The Soviet delegate has asked for a 3-month limit on the drafting of a disarmament plan. Even if such a plan were forthcoming in that space of time, it might still take years to conclude discussions on it in the Security Council and the General Assembly and have it approved by all the nations.

How long it might take to secure unanimity on the general disarmament proposal is obvious from the necessity of securing agreement, not only on atomic energy, but also on other weapons of mass destruction such as rockets and bacteriological weapons, general reduction of armed forces and armaments not included in the first two categories, creation of an international system of inspection and controls to detect and prevent violations of the arms regulations, and creation of an international police force to guarantee peace and security.

In the 7 months that the Atomic Energy Commission was in session it not only failed to secure unanimity of viewpoint on atomic energy, but did not even consider the subject of controlling other weapons of mass destruction, despite the fact that its terms of reference clearly called for such action. In some ways the problem of devising effective controls for such elements as bacteriological products may prove even more difficult and take longer to solve than the problem of controlling atomic energy. The production of atomic energy requires extensive facilities and raw materials which are fairly easy to control at the source. This, however, is not the case when it comes to controlling warfare by the spread of germs.

Consider, Mr. President, how long it might take to obtain agreement under these conditions. Following the last war, disarmament discussions and conferences, together with preliminary and succeeding meetings, continued from 1919 to 1936—a period of 17 years.

It has been asked, What American interest is served by insisting upon atomic disarmament before there is any other kind of disarmament? If atomic weapons are decisive, it is asked, why are we insisting that we give up our own decisive weapon first? The answer is that our own defense demands it.

We stand in no danger from whatever bombs may be in our possession, but we may be in mortal danger from bombs in the possession of others. It is in the interest of our own security, Mr. President, to get inspectors behind the high walls now, so that we may know what is going on now, before it becomes possible for us to be shocked into awareness by the sudden explosion of an atomic bomb in our midst. Today we have no way of knowing what other countries are doing about atomic weapons or how far they have advanced. But this much we do know: Other nations are working night and day on the problem. So long as we do not have exact knowledge, we become prey to fear and suspicion. For example, a news report out of the Soviet Union not long ago stated that their chief nuclear scientist, Peter Kapitza, had been sent to Siberia as punishment for some crime. It seems obvious to me that a more likely explanation is that Kapitza is now busily at work behind the Urals constructing an atomic fission plant. However, I cannot prove it. I do not know, and none of us know, and there is no way of knowing.

Until we have international control coupled with an effective inspection system, we shall never know who is producing bombs, or at what moment, or at what target, they may choose to launch them. Until we have such control, we shall never dare release atomic energy for the peaceful uses which might raise standards of living among the peoples of the world to the point where they would have no interest in the siren song of Soviet propaganda.

Mr. President, the discussions on general disarmament and atomic-energy control are not proceeding in a void. We must look at the setting against which this world drama is being played. As we look about us in the world today, what do we find? Out of the holocaust of the war so recently ended, two nations have emerged as leading world powers. One is the outstanding example of free democracy; the other is the sole example of Communist power.

Mr. President, I have never been one who has sought personal notoriety or advantage by means of red-baiting or Soviet-hating. My public record is ample proof of that. I know that the Soviet Union contributed much to the winning of the war and that she suffered horribly from it. But, Mr. President, facts are facts, and no amount of dialectical folderol will change them. The one outstanding and incontrovertible fact in the world today is that the Communists are engaged in a world-wide war for the possession of men's minds. This psychological warfare is directed against all democratic countries, including the United States of America, the outstanding example of free democracy.

Let me give you just one example out of many possible ones.

On January 1, W. H. Lawrence reported to the New York Times:

> A propaganda effort helpful only to the Soviet Union and harmful to the United States is under way throughout Latin America through formal channels of the Communist Party, including its newspaper and radio stations.

Daily, he reported, the Moscow radio beams a 2-hour program in Spanish to Latin America. He said:

> The United States is pictured as a wealthy, wicked nation that, if it could not dominate the world economically, would not hesitate to use its atomic bomb to ravage the nations that were opposing it. The Communist papers do not hesitate to fake news when necessary to blacken the reputation of the United States. They play upon the Latin Americans' ancient fears of the economic and military might of the "colossus of the north" and chant constantly that every economic ill afflicting Latin-American countries is owing to Yanqui imperialism."

Mr. President, I have time to give you only one example of the kind of anti-American, anti-democratic, anti-capitalist propaganda being spread today throughout the whole world. On the one hand, the Soviet delegates present themselves to the world as upholders and defenders of the United Nations against every real or fancied attempt to weaken this structure of world unity and cooperation, while, on the other hand, Communist emissaries spread dissension and hatred among the peoples of the earth.

Mr. President, this is indeed a sorrowful and saddening spectacle. Its result is to spread fear and suspicion which, in turn, undermine the world's only instrument of present hope for the preservation of the peace—the United Nations. Can it be expected that we shall stand idly by while the Palace of Peace is destroyed all around us? It is too important to us. We fathered the United Nations. We fostered it. We believe in it, and we will continue to work in it and strengthen it. To do that, we must take measures against that which undermines and destroys it. Yes; we must fight propaganda with information. For every base lie we must tell a great truth. For every distortion we must offer a fact.

Mr. President, admitting that our political and economic system has its weaknesses, that it is capable of further development, our democratic free-enterprise society still has so much more to offer the average man than communism does that it is to our advantage to let the people of the world know the truth and give them an opportunity to make their own choice. Our lows, Mr. President, are so much higher than their highs that we have everything to gain by making the facts known. But to men and women everywhere, our system represents not only material benefits but personal liberty, freedom of conscience, and the opportunity to grow and develop to the utmost of one's abilities. And of what we have to sell, Mr. President, the greatest demand is for liberty.

Against the falsehoods and the distortions we must make tnese facts known. By every available means we must disseminate throughout the world honest, factual information about America and her way of life. By means of newspapers and magazines, by shortwave and longwave radio, by moving pictures and books, by every cultural art and by every medium of information, we must tell the good, plain people of the earth the inspiring and fascinating story of democracy in action.

But the spreading of information is not enough. Along with the facts we must spread the fruits. The story of America's high standard of living will not feed the hungry Chinese peasant or heat the freezing hut of the Polish laborer. When men are hungry and cold, when they are homeless, jobless, and hopeless, they fall easy prey to the red rash of revolution. Thus, by disseminating the blessings of our system as widely as possible, we insure our own perpetuation.

And now, with the splitting of the atom, we have the means of spreading the blessings. Cheap atomic power can help develop the backward areas of the earth. Atomic photosynthesis may help produce enough food for all. Atomic research and medicine can help to alleviate the ravages of disease and sickness.

Mr. President, these benefits to come from nuclear fission are no mere roseate dreams. The men who foresaw the atomic bomb and made it—the scientists—now foresee the peacetime applications of atomic energy, and can bring many of them to use when we give them the green light to go ahead. They tell us that atomic power from atomic energy can be a practical reality in 5 to 10 years. This very day, engineers and scientists at Oak Ridge are working on an atomic power plant to be operated under the direction of the Atomic Energy Commission. There is no reason to believe that atomic power will displace or even decrease the use of other natural resources, such as water, coal, and oil. However, on the basis of what is now known, the possibility of locating factories close to the source of raw materials, even though these are in remote and undeveloped regions, or of operating mines in similar areas, is very great. Economical motors for large carriers such as ships, and perhaps even locomotives, are considered feasible.

The scientists also inform us that present developments indicate that the greatest promise of atomic energy in biology and medicine is in the use of intense radiations and radioactive isotopes, the radio active species of elements. How does a plant use solar energy to turn carbon dioxide into food and how does man reverse the process and convert plant food into life-giving energy? What is the nature of cancer? How does radiation cause genetic changes to produce new animal and plant species? The scientist's hope today is fired by his belief that clues to the secrets of these and other questions may emerge from research with radiation and radioisotopes.

As tracers, radioisotopes should prove one of the most versatile tools known to science. Radioactive iodine has been found effective in the treatment of certain types of goiter and thyroid cancer cases, and radiophosphorus has helped in certain cancerous diseases of the blood and thyroid. Radiocarbon, introduced into plant and animal life, may eventually reveal Nature's secret of photosynthesis and possibly lead to artificial reproduction of this process for the purpose of improving and increasing our food supply.

Radiation therapy is now expected to make great advances. Biologists know that radiation actually changes the chromosomes of animal or plant cells, thus giving rise to variation of the species. Experimentation in this field may possibly bring new and beneficial species, such as the change of a frost-susceptible wheat to one which stands extreme freezes without harm, or new and improved strains of cattle.

Metallurgists, too, find radioactive materials of inestimable value in developing new and stronger alloys.

However, probably the greatest benefit to the world will be the tremendous additions to knowledge which will come in fundamental research directed toward the discovery of why radiation does what it does to organic and inorganic matter. The search for this understanding—an understanding which is basic to our knowledge of photosynthesis, cancer therapy, radiography and genetic changes—will go forward with the new tools which the splitting of the atom has given to science, unless man himself puts a stop to it. The scientists have the imagination, our economic system can provide the capital, the people have the need and yet this great forward movement of civilization is being retarded, and can be completely halted, by the overpowering fear which is paralyzing the world—the fear of atomic war. Just last week the American delegate to the United Nations Economic and Employment Commission felt it necessary to present a motion to set aside for a period of 6 months to a year a plan for a study by the Commission of the industrial uses of atomic energy.

It is for such reasons, Mr. President, I have consistently maintained that it is to our own selfish advantage—in addition to being advantageous to the world—to swap atomic knowledge for atomic control. Once we have established effective and enforceable control over atomic weapons, we can release the brakes and pour out to the peoples of the earth the munificent blessings which the good Lord in His great mercy has stored up for them. If, by doing this, we can help the "have-nots" become the "haves," if, by doing this, we can change the dissatisfied and restless into the contented and peaceful, where will the hawkers of hate and the mongers of war find their recruits? Where will the Communist propagandists find their victims? By helping to bring prosperity to the world, we assure our own prosperity. "You can't," as has wisely been said, "do business with a poorhouse." By helping to remove the causes of war, we secure our own peace.

Mr. President, because peace on earth is so vital to our well-being, we cannot—we dare not—permit anything to stand in the way of an international agreement which will put into operation an effective and enforceable system of atomic-energy controls. What is today holding up progress on such an agreement?

The Soviet delegates to the United Nations have remained adamant against one point of the American plan. They will never, they say, agree to the elimination of the right of veto on punishment because, they maintain, this would weaken the Security Council and the Charter of the United Nations. On this issue it could be possible to filibuster the negotiations for months, or even years, if we permitted it to be done.

Since the Russians say they will not relinquish the right of veto, and since we can never permit any violator of an atomic-control agreement to find protection from punishment under the veto, it is obvious that a way out must be found at once in order to avoid stalemate and inaction.

Mr. President, it was indeed encouraging to learn last week that at long last our officials are engaged in seeking a way out of the dilemma. A story in the New York Times of last Wednesday reports that the United States has under consideration what it refers to as a new approach to the problem of how to enforce the proposed system of international atomic control.

The plan, as outlined in this press report, would give to the international inspection agency—not the Security Council—the right to declare that there had been a serious violation of the proposed agreement warranting punishment. After that, individual members of the United Nations would be authorized to declare war individually on the violator nation pending the time when the Security Council itself took action.

This plan, it is said, has the advantage of not requiring an amendment to the United Nations Charter to restrict the use of the veto, and thus might have a better chance of being accepted by the Soviet Union. That is true, but it is equally true that this plan is a complete negation of the whole United Nations' principle of collective action. It is a dangerous step backward.

Mr. President, on October 29 of last year, in speeches before the American Bar Association and the New York Herald Tribune forum in current problems, I offered a way out of the dilemma, by proposing that questions of violation and punishment be taken out of the Security Council where debate could be filibustered and punishment dangerously delayed. I offered the plan at that time because the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission was then in session, and in a position to take the proposal under consideration as an easy egress from adamancy.

Referring to this plan, the Hartford Courant stated on November 1:

> Senator BRIEN MCMAHON, chairman of the Senate's Committee on Atomic Energy, in addresses last week before the American Bar Association and the New York Herald Tribune's fifteenth annual forum on current problems, presented a realistic solution of the atomic bomb impasse at the international level that deserves earnest consideration. In light of the adamant positions of both the United States in support of the Baruch plan and of Russia in defense of the use of the one-nation veto as exercised in the Security Council of the United Nations, together with the fact that time may be running out before the secrets of the bomb may be generally known, the McMahon proposal might well be for all peoples the difference between survival and extinction.

The plan, Mr. President, as suggested 3 months ago and as repeated here now, has all the virtues of simplicity combined with realism. In brief, it is this:

Let a treaty for the control of atomic energy be drawn up which will specify violations requiring punishment—just as we have done, I might add, in our domestic act. Let the treaty spell out the type of punishment to be meted out for each type of violation. Let it be written into the treaty that questions of violation are questions of fact for determination by the International Court of Justice. Let the treaty make it mandatory on the Court to hear the evidence immediately and return a finding of fact within a limited and specified space of time. The treaty should state that the judgment of the court would be final and that upon a finding of violation by the court it would be mandatory on the Security Council to implement the Court's decision in the manner specified within the treaty.

Under such a treaty swift and certain punishment would await such violations as, one, illegal possession or use of an atomic bomb; two, illegal possession or separation of atomic material suitable for use in an atomic bomb; three, seizure of any plant or other property belonging to or licensed by the Authority; four, willful interference with the activities of the Authority; five, creation or operation of dangerous projects in a manner contrary to, or in the absence of, a license granted by the international control body.

In view of the technical nature of many possible violations, it would be well to write into the treaty that the Court is to give great weight to the finding of facts as to violations made by the Atomic Development Authority.

Article 36 of the statute of the International Court of Justice, which is an integral part of the Charter of the United Nations, makes it clear that among the cases within the jurisdiction of the Court are legal disputes concerning the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation.

In other words, Mr. President, we would simply be using a tribunal already established within the framework of the United Nations for a purpose already specified as within its jurisdiction. We would simply be using the machinery of the Court to notify the Security Council when the deputy marshals in the form of the international police power would be needed to enforce the agreement which the high contracting parties had entered into.

It seems to me that this plan meets the American objective at the same time that it eliminates the stated Russian objections, while, simultaneously, it strengthens the United Nations and implements its principle of collective action. If the Russians are sincere in their desire to do away with atomic and other weapons of mass destruction, and I sincerely hope they are, then I can see no reason why they should refuse to acquiesce in this proposal for peace and go forward to the establishment of the Atomic Development Authority and the era of world-wide peace and prosperity which must follow. If they are not sincere, we shall soon know it and we shall then know what we must do to survive in a world that has a potential aggressor.

Until such an international authority is in actual and effective operation, we must not, we dare not, disarm or weaken our defenses. Once it is in effective operation, once we have successfully solved the problem of controlling atomic energy, the problems of controlling other weapons, of reducing or eliminating armies and armaments—yes; of doing away with war itself, will be tremendously simplified and their solution greatly accelerated, for atomic energy holds the key to the future. It contains the answer to whether we, the people of the earth, shall live in peace and happiness or die a sudden and ignoble death of our own devising. May God grant us the wisdom and the fortitude so to act that we preserve for our descendants a world worthy of their ancestors, who learned how to disintegrate the atom without disintegrating the earth.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KNOWLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I regret that I was unable to hear the entire address made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. I wish to congratulate him upon the presentation of this subject before the Senate and the country. I think he has done an admirable and constructive piece of work.

I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut, in view of the statements he has made, whether or not he believes that the Budget recommended by the President of the United States in connection with atomic energy is correct. The President recommended a program which will involve the expenditure of $444,000,000 in the fiscal year 1948. In the opinion of the able Senator, should that be decreased because of the economy drive that is being made?

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, first I desire to express my thanks to the Senator from Illinois for his complimentary remarks. In answer to his question concerning the Budget, I may say that I have not had an opportunity to study the Budget recommendation as I intend to study it, in great detail, before the appropriation comes to the floor of the Senate; but certainly to engage in any economy that would jeopardize our progress in atomic science, to engage in any economy that would in any way hamper our efforts to keep ahead and to keep going in this science, would, in my opinion, be an economy that might result in the destruction of the American people.

Mr. LUCAS. May I point out to the able Senator that recommended expenditure of $444,000,000 compares with an outlay of $385,000,000 in the current fiscal year? In other words, there is an increase of about $60,000,000 in this recommendation by the President of the United States for the development and research in atomic science. If I understand correctly the viewpoint of the Senator, there is nothing he would do at this juncture of affairs in the world to decrease one iota the development of atomic energy in all its phases.

Mr. McMAHON. I should distinctly say not; but I may state that while I did not read the dispatch in the press, I was told about one in which a Member of this body declared that this was one of the subjects on which it was hoped to economize, so that the proposed 20-percent tax reduction could be put into effect. Frankly, I am astonished that the Senator in question had secured sufficient information in order to arrive at that conclusion, because I think it must be solely within his own knowledge; it is not within the knowledge of anyone else.

Mr. LUCAS. My reason for making the request of the able Senator was that every Member of the Senate knows that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has made a special study of the question of the development of atomic energy. No Senator on either side of the aisle has done more research work or has applied himself more enthusiastically to this question than has the Senator from Connecticut; and I hope, in view of his peculiar knowledge of this question, that he will analyze the budget recommended by the President of the United States. Candidly speaking, I shall rely to a great extent upon the judgment of the Senator from Connecticut as to whether or not any portion of the budget should be cut, when the budget cutters begin to reduce the budget proposed by the President.

I desire to ask one other question of the Senator, if I may. The Senator stated that in his opinion we should do in this country everything within our power to communicate to other peoples of the world, either through magazines or by radio or any other form of communication or personal application, our theory and our form of government and the democratic way of life as it exists in this country, and, as I understood him, this is a matter of defense for our own free way of life. I ask the Senator this question: Has he given any study to what he thinks should be done by our Government or can we do anything as a government to put into effect the idea the Senator has conveyed?

Mr. McMAHON. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that during the present fiscal year the Government of the United States is spending $19,000,000 in educational programs and for the dissemination of facts to other countries. I have it on the word of our Ambassador to Yugoslavia—of course it is only an estimate, but it was made in answer to an inquiry submitted by me—that other nations were spending $44,000,000 for propaganda in Yugoslavia alone.

Mr. LUCAS. The able Senator from Connecticut has struck at a very vital point, so far as I am concerned, in connection with the spending of money. I think it would be the better part of wisdom, and it probably will be done in due course of time, to ascertain, if we can, how much other nations of the earth are spending in lands other than their own in attempting to put across their theory of government or their form of economic life or any other thing in connection with building up their own national philosophies on foreign soil. I anticipate that other great powers of the earth are spending so much more than we are it will make us look rather niggardly when our budget is compared with theirs.

I have always thought that if we utilized every possible means at our command to sell America, over the air or through magazines or by other type of propaganda, we would be doing a great service to the people of this country and would be doing much for our own security in the future. But it will be found that many people object to our spending even the $19,000,000 now alleged to be used for this type of work.

Mr. McMAHON. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that those who will object will not be individuals who have traveled around the earth. I know of two Members of the other House of Congress who recently have concluded an extensive trip. They started on their journey prejudiced against any effort on our part to make known and promote our way of life among other peoples of the earth. The two House Members to whom I have referred have returned, and I will say to the Senator that they are the most enthusiastic proponents of this program I know of. I may say further to the Senator that, according to my information, we have in all France only 11 men disseminating information on the subject of what America means and what it stands for. In France I understand the Soviet Government employs 1,014 individuals doing the same kind of work on behalf of the Soviets. We who possess liberty and know what it means to the human race, we who realize all it has cost in blood and treasure through the centuries, and who certainly are not trying to sell, as some are, slavery in a hovel, ought to be able to convince the peoples of the earth that our way of life offers the greatest opportunity to those seeking freedom, as well as the greatest reward in the material things of life.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. McMAHON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois posed a very difficult question to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, and I am not surprised that the Senator is unable to answer it. I do not think any Senator can answer the question which the Senator from Illinois posed as to the amount of money which should be spent in this enterprise in the year 1948. I do not think any Senator's judgment on that question would be very good, unless the Senator knew the purpose for which the money would be spent.

We are trying, as I understand, to work out a system of controls for atomic bombs. I do not pretend to know very much more about the matter than any other Senator. The only thing the former Manhattan project is doing is manufacturing and creating atomic bombs. If that is the purpose of the project, if that is what the money is being used for, I would not hesitate to say that $444,000,000 is entirely too much money for us to be spending. If the money is being spent for research, such as the Senator from Connecticut has pointed out is possible, that would be an entirely different matter, and in that event perhaps I would want to see twice as much as $444,000,000 spent. But the point I am trying to make is that neither the Senator from Connecticut nor any other Member of the Senate, I think, can answer the question as to whether that amount is too much or whether it is not sufficient.

Up to the present time the appropriations for atomic energy have been made entirely on faith. The Senate was not told what the purpose of the original appropriation was, and how the money was to be used, and from that day to this the Congress of the United States has opened the Nation's money bags strictly on faith. The time will have to come very shortly when judgment must be substituted for faith. I hope that time will come before the $444,000,000 is made available.

I thank the Senator from Connecticut for permitting the interruption.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one further statement?

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to answer, if I can, the Senator from Colorado, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado that at least our gamble on the basis of faith certainly has so far paid off big dividends. I, however, agree with the Senator that we cannot go along on that basis. We would not be worthy of the traditions of our Republic or of the Congress if we did.

On the other hand, I think the Senator must realize, and I think it is important that the world should know, that our efforts are being devoted to the objective of directing atomic energy into peaceful channels. We know it is the cry of some that all we are doing is manufacturing bombs to intimidate the people of the earth. The Senator from Colorado knows, as I know, that such a statement is not true. If we wanted to follow that policy we would not be saying to the people of the earth, "Here are the benefits of atomic energy, and all we ask is that we be protected from its brutal use."

I may say further to the Senator from Colorado that he and I, as members of the committee, and the other Members of the Senate who have perhaps more indirect responsibility, but certainly a very grave one, must make a thorough study of the proposed budget. It is because I have not made it yet that I do not now want to commit myself with respect to it. But I still do not want to be understood as thinking that the amount of money recommended is out of proportion to the great work, and I agree with the Senator from Illinois, that instead of cutting it down we may have to think about increasing it. I do not know about that as yet.

I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, my only reason for propounding the inquiry was that I knew the Senator from Connecticut was chairman of the committee previous to the Eightieth Congress. I know the thorough study he had made of the subject, and I thought perhaps he might have analyzed the President's budget message and given some consideration to it, to the end he might tell me whether he thought the amount recommended was adequate or inadequate. As I said before, I am going to rely upon the Senator from Connecticut and other members of the committee to a great extent in forming my final judgment upon this item of the budget.

We must rely upon the judgment of members of all committees, and this is especially true on the atomic proposal. As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, heretofore we have been making appropriations for atomic development on faith. I presume that to a certain extent we shall continue to make them on faith, unless we wish to give to the world the secret of the atomic bomb.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, less than a week after the election of last November 5 the Department of State announced plans for simultaneous negotiation of trade agreements with 18 foreign countries, under authority of the Trade Agreements Act which expires in June of next year. Along with this announcement the Department issued a list of products on which tariff reductions would be considered. This list covers 56 pages of rather fine print, and appears to include at least three-fourths of the articles making up our import trade. Certainly the major portion of American industry will be drastically affected by these trade agreements if sharp reductions are made on most of the items listed, as has been the case in the past. What we have, in short, is a general tariff revision by executive action.

Shortly after the State Department's announcement, therefore, I wrote Mr. W. L. Clayton, Under Secretary of State, suggesting that action on these proposed agreements be deferred until the new Republican Congress should have an opportunity to review our foreign-trade programs. I can see no need for extraordinary haste in slashing our remaining tariff rates. Mr. Clayton, however, has rejected my suggestion categorically. He has indicated every intention of proceeding with his program and making many additional tariff reductions before his authority runs out next year.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a copy of my letter to Under Secretary Clayton, Mr. Clayton's reply, and my response thereto.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECEMBER 19, 1946.

Hon. WILLIAM L. CLAYTON,
Assistant Secretary of State,
State Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CLAYTON: Reference is made to the recent announcement of intention to negotiate trade agreements with 18 foreign countries. I am writing to urge that these negotiations be temporarily suspended until the new Congress shall have an opportunity to write a new foreign-trade policy. This announcement apparently indicates an intention to continue with the present tariff-reduction program, despite the repudiation of this administration by the voters. Such an intention is amazing to me.

The trade agreements program in its present form is a "lame duck" policy. The attempt to use the authority of the Trade Agreements Act, previously wrested from a Democratic Congress, to destroy our system of tariff protection, seems to me a direct affront to the popular will expressed last month.

The list of products on which tariff reductions may be made during these negotiations covers 56 pages, and appears to include at least three-fourths of our total import trade. On the list are dozens of items in which the people of my State are vitally interested. Among them are cattle, hogs, and meat; cheese, butter, and other dairy products; wheat, and other grains; wool; and a long list of fruits and vegetables. In a tremendous number of cases, tariff reductions of 40 to 50 percent have already been made in the past 12 years. Apparently you propose to further reduce the rates even on these items by some substantial amount, up to 50 percent of what protection is left.

Reductions already made under the trade-agreements program have reduced the protection to approximately half of our producers benefited by tariffs, and such reductions have averaged 30 to 40 percent. In other words, your program to date has constituted a substantial revision of our system of protection, as far-reaching as was the Tariff Act of 1930. The announcement of the new proposed treaties leads me to believe that a second sweeping downward revision of our tariff system is planned.

My views are in accord with the ostensible program of the Trade Agreements Act, that our foreign trade should be expanded by securing advantageous concessions from foreign nations, without doing substantial injury to domestic agriculture and industry. The conduct of the program to date, however, has not been in accord with this pretended goal. On the contrary, it appears that the program is being used as a cloak in an attempt to commit this country to a policy of very low tariffs. On the other hand, supposedly valuable concessions secured from foreign countries have been nullified by blocked exchanges, pool buying, and various other devices. There is nothing to indicate that renewed negotiation on the present basis will reverse this trend.

It is for these reasons that I protest your apparent decision to continue with this program, when the American people have just spoken so emphatically in the reverse direction. Cooperation between the Democratic administration and the Republican Congress in the interests of the national welfare will be difficult at best. A determination on your part to proceed with this program, in defiance of the wishes of the people, will make it almost impossible.

Your comments on any changes in your plans with respect to this program, in view of the change in the control of Congress, will be awaited with interest.

Yours very truly,

HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator.

JANUARY 16, 1947.

The Honorable HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BUTLER: In your letter of December 19, which was acknowledged by my secretary during my absence from the city, you urge that negotiations under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act be suspended. You advance four arguments in support of this request. First, you contend that the trade-agreements program was repudiated by the voters in the November election and that its continuation would be a direct affront to the popular will. Second, you refer to the pretended goal of this ostensible program and suggest that the concessions obtained in past negotiations have been valueless. Third, you complain that the list of products under consideration in connection with the pending negotiations is long. Fourth, you conclude that the administration intends to destroy our system of tariff protection.

On none of these points do I find it possible to agree.

First, there is no evidence to support your contention that the trade-agreements program was repudiated by the voters in the November election. Certainly, it would have been impossible for any voter to suppose that this program was an issue in the campaign. The American people had been repeatedly assured that there was no partisanship in foreign policy; that politics stopped at the water's edge. The Trade Agreements Act, first passed in 1934, had been renewed four times, each time with a substantial number of Republican votes. On the last renewal, which involved an increase in the authority of the President to negotiate agreements, the Republican vote in the Senate had been practically a tie, 15 for and 16 against. The three last Republican candidates for the Presidency—Mr. Landon, Mr. Willkie, and Mr. Dewey—had each explicitly endorsed the principle of tariff reductions through reciprocal agreements. You may recall that this principle had been advanced, many years before, by President McKinley, President Theodore Roosevelt, and President Taft.

It is not without significance that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was not raised as a national issue in the campaign. Before the last renewal in 1945, the extension of the law with increased power was specifically supported and vigorously urged by leading organizations representing American business, farm, and labor groups. This program has always had, and it continues to have, a broad basis of popular support. Any party that sought to destroy it would tar itself with the brush of economic isolationism, and it is well known that isolationism is a liability rather than an asset in contemporary politics.

Second, I shall not comment on your use of the words "pretended" and "ostensible" in discussing the administration of the Trade Agreements Act. I should like, however, to call your attention to one indisputable fact. Between 1934–35 and 1936–39, our imports from countries with which we did not have trade agreements increased 12½ percent; our imports from countries with which we did have trade agreements increased 22 percent. In the same period our exports to countries with which we did not have trade agreements increased 32 percent; our exports to countries with which we had trade agreements increased 63 percent. It seems to me that this disposes of your contention that the concessions obtained through trade-agreement negotiations have been valueless to the United States.

Third, it is true that the list of products on which tariff concessions are now being considered is a long one. This list was issued for the purpose of assembling information on these products and in order to give all interested parties a full opportunity to present their views. But it should not be inferred that the tariff on all of these products will be reduced or that the tariff on any particular product will be reduced by the full amount permitted by the law. It should be noted, moreover, that the countries with which we are planning to negotiate represent not only a substantial percentage of our imports but also a substantial percentage of our exports and that the list of products on which we plan to seek concessions from other countries will be quite as long and as important as the list on which we would consider making concessions in return.

It should not be overlooked that the projected negotiations are but one part of a larger program of international economic cooperation which stems from the Atlantic Charter and includes our participation in the Economic and Social Council, the International Monetary Fund, and the Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and other agencies which both parties in Congress have already approved by overwhelming votes.

These negotiations are a necessary prerequisite to the establishment of the International Trade Organization proposed by the United States and this organization in turn is essential to the whole structure of international cooperation in economic and political affairs. The trade negotiations and the ITO are part and parcel of a program that is designed to promote the prosperity of the United States by obtaining international agreements which will commit the other countries of the world against closing their markets to our goods. It is also designed to promote the peace by substituting consultation and cooperation for aggression and conflict in international economic relations.

Fourth, the administration has never sought to destroy our system of tariff protection. It does not seek to do so now. Changes in tariffs have been made only after thorough investigation and full hearings. During four successive renewals of the Trade Agreements Act, both Houses of Congress have built up a voluminous record that covers, in detail, every criticism that has been raised concerning the operation of the act. If you will examine this record you will find that particular groups have expressed their fears concerning what might happen to them at some future time. But you will find no demonstration that these fears have ever been justified. If any industry in the United States has suffered serious injury as a result of the operation of the trade-agreements program, the record does not disclose it. In the absence of any such evidence you will understand why it is difficult for me to give weight to the vague fears of groups who have never been hurt and who, I am confident, will never be hurt by the operation of this act.

I am glad to learn that you believe that "our foreign trade should be expanded by securing advantageous concessions from foreign nations without doing substantial injury to domestic agriculture and industry." This is the way in which the Trade Agreements Act has been administered in the past. This is the way in which it will be administered in the months to come.

As you know, President Truman assured Speaker RAYBURN, at the time when the Trade Agreements Act was extended in 1945, that no action would be taken during his administration which would result in grave injury to any essential American industry or agricultural activity. Moreover, the Department of State has announced that all future trade agreements will contain an escape clause similar to that contained in the agreement with Mexico which will permit the President to take appropriate action to protect any industry or agricultural activity which is seriously threatened by the operation of such agreements.

Far from intending to destroy our system of tariff protection, our Government is entering into the projected trade negotiations for the purpose of insuring that tariffs, rather than discriminatory import quotas, exchange controls, and bilateral barter deals, shall be the accepted method by which nations regulate their foreign trade. If it were not for the initiative which our Government has taken in this matter, the world would be headed straight toward the deliberate strangulation of its commerce through the imposition of detailed administrative controls. I need hardly tell you that such a development would be seriously prejudicial to the essential interests of the United States. Through a judicious exercise of the bargaining power which the Trade Agreements Act has placed in our hands, I am confident that we shall be able to reverse this trend. Without that power, there is little hope that we should be able to do so.

We are fighting for the preservation of the sort of a world in which Americans want to live—a world which holds out some promise for the future of private enterprise, of economic freedom, of rising standards of living, of international cooperation, of security and peace. The trade-agreements program is an instrument whose aid we need if we are to achieve these ends.

Very truly yours,

W. L. CLAYTON,
Under Secretary.

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM L. CLAYTON,
Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CLAYTON: Receipt is acknowledged of your reply to my letter of December 19, 1946, with respect to the negotiation of the trade agreements now pending with 18 foreign nations.

Despite your reply, it is still my view that Congress should give renewed consideration to the problems of our foreign trade.

Attached for your information is a copy of a statement I have made to the press with reference to your letter, which was given to the press. I believe it may explain my position more fully.

Very sincerely yours,

HUGH BUTLER,
United States Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, before proceeding further I should like to mention the fact that I realize that the present Secretary of State has had nothing to do with this program to date. What his views are on the conduct of the program, I do not know. Possibly he will not care to take any definite action with respect to the program, one way or the other, until he has had a little more opportunity to acquaint himself more fully with the details of its operation. In any case, I hope it will be understood that what I have to say relates solely to conditions as they have existed in the past, prior to General Marshall's appointment to the Secretaryship.

Mr. President, in my opinion the reciprocal trade agreements are a gigantic hoax on the American people. To begin with, they are neither trade nor reciprocal. Trade implies bargaining, and reciprocity means an act performed between two persons for mutual benefit.

The trade agreements under which we have been operating since 1934 are solely for the benefit of other nations. There is certainly nothing mutually beneficial about them.

This issue may shortly come before the Congress. I wish to take this opportunity to warn the American people against the perils inherent in this most glaring fraud of the New Deal.

Most of us are preoccupied with everyday living. In our smugness the word "tariff" is a mere abstraction. It is a complicated concept. It should not be so. Reduced to practicalities, tariff can carry terrifying implications. It can be a dangerous instrument. It also can be an instrument for good.

There are those in the State Department who take advantage of this national ignorance. They are the crisis boys. With them, as with the whole New Deal philosophy, there is always a crisis. If it is not to be found in domestic affairs, they launch into international affairs to scare us.

Thus, knowing that the American people as a whole—the man on the street—know little or nothing about trade agreements and that awful word "tariff," they attempt to bludgeon him into the belief that unless he accepts the economic philosophy that they espouse he is lost.

It is this frenzied attempt to jam down the American throat the concept that lower tariffs alone will save us and prevent war that I resent.

Historically, of course, the Congress had the sole power to fix tariff rates. The Congress abdicated that power in 1934 when it turned over this constitutional power to the State Department. In that year Congress gave the right to the State Department to reduce tariffs by 50 percent.

That was a mistake, and an action bordering on immorality. I say this because the people of the United States elected Members of the Congress and endowed them with the sole right of making tariff schedules. The did not elect members of the State Department. They never intended that the State Department should perform these duties.

The State Department proceeded, then, to slash tariff rates. In some cases this was done through pure whimsy or caprice. It did not matter to the global thinkers in the State Department how such actions might affect the employment of thousands of American workers or the American standard of living.

In an effort to assuage the feelings of the American businessman, the New Deal set up a strange creation called the Committee for Reciprocity Information. This is supposed to be an interdepartmental committee designed to reconcile the differences of American business in connection with the tariff. Actually, it is a fake tribunal before which the defendants are convicted without trial. It is, from another viewpoint, a packed jury. The views expressed and the pleas for protection by American business are usually ignored. For the past 2 weeks hearings have been conducted before this committee. Approximately 1,000 briefs have been filed with the committee.

These hearings are a public confession of the American businessman's frustration. This is his country, to be sure, but he does not feel that way when appearing before this committee. He has the feeling that he is on trial for his life; and, in a sense, he is on trial for his economic life. His own State Department, supported by taxes of American labor, agriculture, and business, inflames his inferiority complex, an emotional weakness played on by the British for 100 years.

Why the State Department goes through all this rigmarole when it has already made up its mind to reduce tariffs is hard to say.

The master minds in the State Department are even now planning further tariff reductions which will lower our standard of living. Already they are resolved to reduce tariff rates on hundreds of agricultural and industrial commodities. The same administration admits the necessity of a program to support our domestic agricultural prices at a fair level. Yet every student knows that such reasonable price levels cannot be maintained if a flood of competitive imports comes into our markets at lower prices.

We have not yet felt the full impact of these give-away agreements. World shortages explain that. But, in the near future, this outrageous treatment of the American people will emerge as one of the most dangerous measures we could possibly have taken.

I am not arguing for stiff barriers against world trade. That is the impudent reply to my position which is constantly made. Obviously, I want world trade. That means business and commerce for all of us. I am merely saying we should have protection for our high standard of living. I want other nations to prosper, and prosper they can by diversifying their crops and their industries.

But let us get back to these hearings that are being held in Washington in connection with the tariff. They are a joke. Here we have millions and millions of American dollars at stake, not to mention the livelihoods of millions of our people, and the hearings on this complicated subject continue for only 3 weeks. Imagine that. Three weeks to determine the economic destiny of our people! And, of course, as I said before, the jury is packed and, I believe, the verdict has already been passed down.

It is very unfortunate that most of us do not grasp the trend of these negotiations. Most of us—mainly because we do not have the time—cannot sit down and study the whole tariff problem. But there are some of us who feel that we are paid to make a study of this subject; and I, as a United States Senator, am one of them. I wish I could get across to the people of this country the seriousness of this situation.

I am only one person. It is rather difficult for me as an individual to speak out against the myths and folklore that have been built around the sacred trade agreements. It is difficult for me to assail the intellectual and economic beliefs of those two apostles of the trade agreements—Franklin D. Roosevelt and Cordell Hull. But I am as sincere in my beliefs as they were in theirs, and I think the time has come when someone should speak out in defense of American industry and labor.

My own thought is that industrial, agricultural, and labor groups should be asked to join in the actual negotiations. Three weeks of hearings before groups of minor officials are not an adequate substitute. Furthermore, I believe that trading with foreign countries is a matter that should be passed on finally by the Congress and not solely by the executive department. I believe that in this way we shall again become honest with ourselves and with the people with whom we deal. I shall have more to say about the tariff in greater detail as the subject comes before the Congress.

Mr. HATCH obtained the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I repudiate the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska that no profit has accrued to the American economy comparable to what has been bestowed upon other countries under the reciprocal trade program. I repudiate the suggestion that the Government of the United States has sold down the river its own citizenry to foreign States or interests.

I repudiate the suggestion that a representative committee created by the Government of the United States to hear the citizenry of this country is a packed committee, which has already made up its mind, before it concludes the hearings, and is disposed only to ensnare the American citizen into some betrayal of his own interest and of his own country's welfare.

I say, on the contrary, Mr. President, that it is a fact, proved by unimpeachable statistical data, that the reciprocal trade agreements program inaugurated by one of the greatest of Americans, Hon. Cordell Hull, has brought immeasurable economic advantage and has made an incalculable contribution to world well-being and world peace. If permitted to continue, it will make a greater contribution in the days and years ahead.

I affirm, Mr. President, that our State Department and our other departments are not betrayers of the American people. I affirm that my own personal experience during the past week in appearing before two of these reciprocity-information committees gives me the opinion that the interests of my State were being fairly heard. We were invited to make a full statement of how we were affected by the proposed negotiation of agreements under the trade-agreement law and I have confidence in the competency and fairness of these committees.

I go further, Mr. President, and say that I hope, for the good of America and the world, the position taken by the able Senator from Nebraska is not the official position of the Republican Party. I know that it is not the official position of the Democratic Party. I know that President Truman proposes to continue to follow the path of President Roosevelt in trying to stimulate American and world trade, because America can be prosperous only when it can make a contribution to world trade and derive a profit from world trade.

If the position taken by the able Senator from Nebraska is the official line of his party, it is notice to the American people that we are headed again down the iniquitous path of economic isolation which will conclude at the abyss of another Smoot-Hawley tariff law and lay a predicate for the political isolation which will again grow from the seeds of totalitarianism out of the womb of economic chaos on earth.

I hope, therefore, that the able Senator presumes to speak only his individual sentiments, and that his party has not fallen into the delusion and the snare of economic isolation so often found to be false policy.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BUTLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. HATCH. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois, and then I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCAS. I was hoping that the Senator would also say in his remarks that he hoped the State Department was not being bludgeoned in any way by this attempt not to continue wholeheartedly the reciprocal trade program that has been laid down.

Mr. PEPPER. I am indebted to the able Senator from Illinois. I have read in the press within the past few days what I regarded as regrettable instances of legislative pressure upon the executive department of the Government. I have read that leading Senators of the Republican Party in this body and representatives of the Republican Party in the House have made the implied if not the expressed threat to our Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Mr. Clayton, in charge of the reciprocal trade agreement program, that if he should exercise the authority which he now has under a law of the American Congress, the punishment upon him and his department will be a limitation upon his authority by law, or a repeal of the law.

Mr. President, I respectfully submit that it is a transgression by the legislature upon the executive functions of the Government for an administrative officer of this Government to be intimidated, intentionally or unintentionally, by the threat of punitive legislation if he carries out the will of the Congress declared officially for the people of the United States.

I commend what I have observed in the press and what I believe, from my knowledge of the man, will be the course of our Under Secretary of State, Mr. Clayton, in saying that he believes that this program is not only right, but essential to the welfare of the country and of the world, and that he proposes to continue to exercise his prerogatives under the law until the American Congress, in proper form, with the concurrence of the President in the proper way, shall, if it sees fit, alter the law.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I did yield to the Senator from Florida, who replied to the Senator from Nebraska. Evidently the Senator from Nebraska now desires to say something in reply to the Senator from Florida. I rose on an entirely different matter, and I wish to say a word or two on that subject. However, now I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico for yielding to me, and I assure him that I shall trespass only very briefly upon his time.

For the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Florida, I simply wish to repeat something I said in my statement, namely, that I spoke for myself, and myself alone, and I was not speaking for any group of persons, let alone the majority side of this Chamber.

In my statement I said that I was not in favor of high tariffs. I said, in substance, that I believe in reciprocity, but I wish to have real reciprocity. I want it to be a two-way street, instead of a one-way street. I wish to remind the distinguished Senator from Florida and other Senators that in more than 1,200 actions taken on tariffs under the reciprocal trade agreements, it is almost true, if not absolutely true, that there has not been a single advance in tariff. Almost all the changes have been downward revisions; practically none have been advances.

I desire to give one illustration, and then I shall yield the floor. I believe in reciprocity, but the illustration which I shall give is not an example of reciprocity: A certain item is made industrially in my State. During the war it was manufactured in practically all sections of the United States. That item is now being manufactured abroad, and the country from which the item now comes to us has a wage scale which is one-third the wage scale of the factory in Nebraska. The importer gets it into the United States market by paying a duty of 10 percent. On the other hand, the Nebraska manufacturer gets it into the market of the other country by paying a 33-percent duty.

Mr. President, we have been traded out of our eye teeth, under the set-up we have had under the reciprocal trade agreements.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I said I had risen on another matter. The matter I shall discuss is so important, in a way, that I shall not take time now to enter into the discussion of the reciprocal trade agreements program, except to point out this warning and this caution—namely, that apparently there has been a move indirectly to stop the negotiation of all reciprocal trade agreement programs. No direct attack is made to repeal the law. The law is still on the statute books, and it will remain there until 1948. Under that law, which the Congress itself wrote, it is the duty of the members of the executive branch of government to negotiate trade treaties; and if they fail to carry out that duty, either because of statements made in Congress or otherwise, they fail in their duties as responsible officials of government. Certainly if an attack is to be made upon the reciprocal trade agreements program, Mr. President, I hope it will be made directly and that we shall be able to debate the whole issue here on the floor of the Senate, as well as have it debated on the floor of the House of Representatives. Let the attack be a direct one. If there is a desire to destroy the law, let the law be repealed, if it is decided that that should be done. But let us not attempt to do indirectly what we do not have the courage to do directly.

Mr. BUTLER. I quite understand the position of the Senator from New Mexico.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SGT. JAMES A. BURNS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, as I previously said, I rose in connection with an entirely different matter. In common with every other Member of Congress, I have often desired to pay a tribute to every brave and gallant son of my State and of the Nation who made the supreme sacrifice during the war. Obviously that is impossible for any of us to do. But occasionally, incidents occur which do afford us an opportunity to express, even in meager fashion, appreciation of the gallant and brave sacrifices the sons of America have made.

An incident of that kind was called to my attention by one of the official reporters of the Senate, who the other evening was listening to the national broadcast entitled "We, the People," over the Columbia Broadcasting System. On that program was told one of the finest stories of a sacrifice made by an American boy that I have heard anywhere. That young man came from the State of New Mexico. Because I am so proud of him and of the hundreds of thousands of other American boys like him, I now ask unanimous consent to have read at the desk the transcript of that radio program, and I ask all members of the Senate to listen to the reading of the transcript, for I am sure that they, as Americans, will share in my pride.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the transcript will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BOULTON. Today, in New York, are hundreds of people from all over the world on a mission of great importance. They're the delegates to the United Nations, and their every thought is of world peace and harmony. Here with me now, at our Gulf Oil microphone, is one of those delegates, but her mission tonight is for a different reason. For she wants to tell We the People a story—not one of many countries—but a simple story of just one country and an American boy. She's the distinguished delegate from Korea, Miss Louise Yim.

Miss YIM. My story begins in the town of Pyung-Tag, in Korea. It was a pretty little valley town. Then in July the big flood came. The great river washed away hundreds of homes. The people were desperate. Some American soldiers came to help, and one of the first was Sgt. James Burns. Many people in Pyung-Tag knew him before, for he had been a friend to the children, giving them candy and food for their starving families. When they saw Sergeant Burns they knew he would help them to safety.

Mr. BOULTON. What could he do to help so many?

Miss YIM. He worked day and night. He saved hundreds of children by getting them out of the flood area. He helped keep families together. He helped them get food. Time and time again he dove into raging waters to save people. Jimmie Burns was everywhere. He didn't think of himself. He only thought of others. On the day of the flood he was working on the river bank when he heard cries for help. Then he saw a mother and child drifting downstream on a log. Jimmie jumped in to save them. With his last strength he pushed the log to shore. The mother and child were saved. But Jimmie was too tired to fight the strong current. Before anyone could help him, he was gone. Jimmy's mother is here with me now. Until tonight she did not know the brave way her son died.

Mr. BOULTON. And this is the first time his story of courage has been told?

Miss YIM. That's right, Mr. Boulton. After that day everyone in Pyung-Tag talked of Sgt. Jimmie Burns. We tried to write a letter to his mother in New Mexico, but the words didn't come easily. We decided to rebuild the town in his honor. This we are doing. Then when I was chosen to come here to the United Nations the women of Korea commissioned me to see Mrs. Burns and to give her two tokens to express their gratitude and their sympathy. The first is this scroll.

Mr. BOULTON. I know what a handsome tribute it is. And with your permission, I'd like to read it to our listeners. It says: "To Mrs. Frankie M. Burns: Thirty million people extend deepest sympathies and honor. The heroism of your son, Sgt. James A. Burns, will be remembered forever by those he saved and by our Nation."

Miss YIM. Then I have something else for Mrs. Burns. We women in Korea wanted to give his mother a symbol of our gratitude and our affection. It is a jewel box, thousands of years old. I have carried it with me from my homeland. I'm so happy now to put this box in your hands, Mrs. Burns.

Mrs. BURNS. Thank you, Miss Yim. It is hard to believe that my Jimmie will never come home again. But I can't tell you how much it means to have these gifts, for they tell me more than any words can how much your people loved Jimmie, too. [Applause.]

RECOGNITION OF ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND AND ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-NINTH REGIMENTS, CONNECTICUT NATIONAL GUARD

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, in maintaining the national security in the postwar era, the National Guard of the respective States is going to be relied upon very heavily. As a matter of fact, I think that under the present plan each State will be called upon to furnish a larger number of men for various National Guard units than ever before. With that thought in mind, I should like to read into the RECORD a press release from the War Department concerning two Connecticut regiments. It is as follows:

FORTY-THIRD DIVISION REGIMENTS ARE FIRST TO BE RECOGNIZED FEDERALLY

The One Hundred and Second Regiment of the Connecticut National Guard is the first regiment of the postwar National Guard to receive Federal recognition for all its units, the War Department announced today. The One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment, also of Connecticut, was the second to be recognized federally.

Both regiments are now, and were before World War II, units of the Forty-third Infantry Division. During the war the One Hundred and Second Regiment served independently in the South Pacific, after the triangularization of the Forty-third Division, and one battalion took part in the campaign on Okinawa. The One Hundred and Sixty-ninth was in combat on the Russell Islands, New Guinea, Solomons, and Philippines.

Congratulations were sent by the Chief of the National Guard Bureau to The Adjutant General and through him to the Governor of Connecticut and to Maj. Gen. Kenneth F. Cramer, commanding general of the Forty-third Division.

Mr. President, as the junior Senator representing the grand old State of Connecticut, I am extremely proud to see our National Guard so active and so diligent in preparation for the defense of our country. I congratulate the officers and men of these two regiments most heartily.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 27, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Redeemer and our Lord, as we approach Thine altar, make us alive to the virtues divine and so dwell in us that the leaven of hate shall be in the forgotten past.

In these days, confronted by numerous entangling problems, help us if we wonder as we wander. Forgive any spirit in our land that may mar or disturb the unity of our people, and give us the will to stay our faith in the Lord of life and destiny. Stimulate us with the splendid spirit of forgiveness, not embittered by the memory of grudge or resentment. Bless all who dwell within our borders with the true spirit of brotherhood; in every way glorify Thyself through us, and Thine shall be the praise forever. In Thy holy name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 23, 1947, was read and approved.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 70, Rept. No. 9), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

There was no objection.

THE LATE GRACE MOORE

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, a lovely flower has been crushed. From the hill country of Tennessee there came a vibrant voice and a glowing personality that enthralled untold millions of people whom Grace Moore loved. The critics have said, and Grace Moore agreed, that other voices may have equaled and perhaps excelled hers; but in simple genuineness of character, unaffected by fame, in personality and in truly democratic spirit, the glow and warmth of which the people felt and understood in her songs, Grace Moore was the peer of them all.

She was born a Tennessee girl and, though crowned heads about the world commanded her talents, a Tennessee girl she always was, magnificent, beautiful, and inspiring. Yes, Mr. Speaker, a lovely flower has been crushed. May her soul find peace and may God give the world more Grace Moores to brighten and lighten.

GRACE MOORE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleague Mr. GORE in paying high tribute to the life, character, and outstanding service of Miss Grace Moore. She was indeed the flower and pride of Tennessee. From the time she sang in the choir of the Baptist Church in Jellico, she has continued to advance to great heights of fame, but with it all she kept her modesty, her love of her people, and her childhood friends. The people of Tennessee were very proud of the accomplishments of Miss Moore and they followed her illustrious career with delight. Miss Moore was of one of Tennessee's finest families. Her father, the late Col. Richard Moore, after leaving Jellico came to Chattanooga where he was a successful businessman and a citizen of the first rank. Miss Moore's mother, sister, and brothers now live at Chattanooga and I proudly count them among my closest friends and all of Miss Moore's many friends extend to them and to her husband our heartfelt sympathy.

Miss Moore, interviewed only a few days ago by a reporter of the Copenhagen newspaper Berlingske Tidende, said:

> It is wonderful to live and sing. It is a great thing to feel that one is able to help other people with one's voice. I want to play in a new opera where the heroine does not die in the last scene or go mad. That is why I love Charpentier's Louise. The girl is alive when the curtain falls—and it is wonderful to be alive, isn't it?

The memory of Grace Moore will always live.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MERROW asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

SURPLUS GOVERNMENT PROPERTY

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therewith a letter from the War Assets Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am daily in receipt of communications from business concerns in my State, and from other sections of the country, deeply concerned with the question of placing contracts for various types of machinery particularly, and other equipment as well, which run into sizable sums of money. These people express concern because they cannot ascertain as of this date the amount of goods that has not yet been declared surplus. It is reasonable to expect that in placing these contracts they must take into consideration the competitive side of goods now in the hands of the War Assets Administration and the goods that have not been declared surplus, because these will in fact have a bearing upon the market and be competitive to new goods purchased.

I have asked General Littlejohn to give me a break-down of goods on hand in certain classifications, particularly those affecting farm areas and I include a copy of his letter herewith as a part of this record, and I ask unanimous consent to include it.

I was interested to read an article which appeared in the New York Times. It contained an interview with Maj. Gen. Everett S. Hughes. He states that in one field in Ogden, Utah, thousands of trucks and jeeps are standing their rotting. If I judge the language of the article correctly, this machinery has not yet been declared surplus by the armed forces but still remains in their hands. If this is true, it makes it impossible for War Assets to offer them to the public.

It has been my privilege to serve on the Special House Committee To Investigate the Disposition of War Surpluses. In our work I feel we have rendered an especially important service to the Congress and the country. We could not, however, under the resolution force the armed forces to declare goods surplus any more rapidly than they were doing. We were confined in our investigation work exclusively to War Assets and other agencies charged with the disposition of these goods.

In the New York Times article, General Hughes states that he has concluded a 2-week inspection trip in which he was shocked by the sight of 20,000 Army vehicles rusting away in a single field. He recommends a revision of plans for storage facilities or junking of much material.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that while it is reasonable to assume that the Army might wish to carry some of this material for future use, the general changing of things as years move on will render these things obsolete in a very short time, and there is not any particular likelihood of war in the immediate future, in my personal judgment. It would seem to me that these properties should be declared surplus and disposed of immediately, particularly those which qualify for the use of farmers.

Due to strikes throughout the country, particularly in plants manufacturing farm equipment, practically all farmers—especially in the Middle West—are in distress, not alone because they cannot obtain new machinery, but likewise they cannot obtain parts to keep their old machinery running. And yet upon their shoulders rests the responsibility to produce additional crops this year. Surely if it is true, as the general states, that such quantities of merchandise or machinery are rotting away in various places in the United States, by all means this should be declared surplus by the Army and turned over for use by farmers and others at the earliest possible moment.

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1947.

HON. CHARLES R. ROBERTSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ROBERTSON: In reply to your letter of January 14, 1947, regarding a general break-down of goods still to be disposed of by War Assets Administration, the following figures from the inventory control report for the period ending December 15, 1946, may be of use to you in correspondence with your constituents:

Consumer goods

Commodity Division:	Confirmed inventory
Automotive and machinery	$380,427,000
Hardware, general products	511,002,000
Paper, furniture, office machines	105,790,000
Drugs, medical	63,187,000
Textiles, apparel	420,010,000

Capital and producers' goods

Commodity Division:	Confirmed inventory
Industrial machinery and equipment	$533,473,000
Materials and supplies	164,061,000
Metal-working equipment	823,313,000
Metals	295,725,000

The specific items of construction machinery you mention, with the exception of scrapers, are immediately turned over to NHA for disposal to holders of Housing Expediter certificates. For the past 4 months the average declarations to the War Assets Administration have been as follows:

	Per month
Tractors	362
Cranes	135
Turnapulls	12
Scrapers	60

The quantities and rates of future declarations are difficult to estimate at this time, due to the uncertainty of the military program to be determined by congressional action. It has been estimated that future legislation may make possible the declaration of $2,000,000,000 in surplus general products and $3,000,000,000 in real property.

It is hoped that this information may be of use to you and your constituents.

Very truly yours,

J. W. PALMER, Jr.,
Director, Sales Planning and Analysis Division.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include letters in each.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of taxation and to include certain quotations.

Mr. BUFFETT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include editorial comment in each.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances; to include in one a reprint of an article by Mrs. George S. Patton, Jr., widow of General Patton, on our war dead, and in the other to include the farewell address of General Stilwell to the Tenth Army.

Mr. BUTLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD relating to some bills he introduced today.

Mr. ROHRBOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. WELCH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article appearing in the San Francisco Examiner entitled "Second Bay Bridge Crossing."

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include remarks on illegal entries made into the United States, and in connection therewith to include certain excerpts from newspapers and photostatic copies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial on Canol, the major scandal.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and to include as part thereof a letter with a draft of a bill sent to the Speaker by Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and a letter from Col. John Thomas Taylor, of the American Legion, in which he requests me, as chairman of that committee, to introduce three bills for them and also that I may include in my remarks copies of the three bills Colonel Taylor asked me to introduce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely important to pass very promptly the bill referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs as submitted by the Veterans' Administration or one containing similar provisions. Others of us have had the same idea as contained in this bill which has for its purposes the repeal of the limitation on time within which reinstatement of national service life insurance on a comparative health basis may be effected; to provide for automatic conversion of level premium term insurance to an ordinary life plan in cases in which the insured is totally disabled at the expiration of the term, but unable because of mental or other conditions beyond his control to apply for such conversion; and to provide for original issuance of national service life insurance on any permanent plan. The provision for reinstatement of yearly renewable term insurance on a comparative health basis without a physical examination in existing law expires February 1, 1947, and I feel sure the Committee on Veterans' Affairs will want to report this bill out quickly and that the House will agree to pass it, if possible, before February 1.

STUDENT WAR LOANS

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to amend retroactively a provision of the Federal Security appropriation of 1943 having to do with student war loans. Under existing law, loans to men drafted into the armed forces under the Selective Service Act are canceled. No such relief, however, is granted to those who enter the services voluntarily. It seems manifestly unfair that men who enlisted should receive less consideration than those who were drafted.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill to transfer the administration of the Library of Congress from the Office of the President of the United States, in which it should never have been, to the Congress of the United States, in which it should always have reposed. This is done without in any way attempting to prejudice the attitude of the Members of Congress toward any of the present employees of the Library of Congress, but under the terms of the Reorganization Act we are going to have to rely upon expert and professional advice to a large extent provided by the Library of Congress.

I therefore propose that a Congressional Library Board be appointed, to be comprised of the Speaker and the minority leader of the House, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the minority leader of the Senate. We would thus have a bipartisan board selecting the personnel of the Library of Congress. Our facts should be free from bias, and our expert counsellors should be above reproach. At present the position of Librarian of Congress is considered a political appointment. Under the terms of my proposal, that office and all appointments associated with it would be entirely free from partisanship.

SPECIAL ORDER WITHDRAWN

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the special order granted me for today and postpone it to an indefinite date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include some excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Mr. Alva W. Phelps.

Mr. GILLIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a short article by Franklin Burdette on bringing the capital of Indiana back to the people.

Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the sermon of the Most Reverend Lawrence J. Shehan at the annual red Mass at Catholic University on January 26 signalizing the opening of the courts and Congress.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the retiring president of the American Economic Association delivered on last Saturday at the annual meeting held in Atlantic City, N. J.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address he made recently at Nashville.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a brief. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $319.59, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of a letter I have today written to Secretary of State Marshall in respect to further tinkering with the duties under reciprocal trade agreements at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EXPENSES

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, a dissatisfied people sought to change the course of government at the November election by voting the New Deal philosophy of government out, endorsing very largely the principles held out to them by the Republican Party.

They expect and insist the Republican Congress, in the House and Senate, keep its promises and give them the relief for which they voted. In the campaign we told the people what we hoped to do. It is time for action now and may I say to the 245 Republican Members of the House that each of us, as an individual, is now on trial. Your word and promises are at stake. Your party throughout the Nation is on trial. You should keep this in mind, in the consideration of each bill.

By collective effort we can carry out our promises; we must carry them out or deal a deadly blow to the confidence of the American people in representative government. We must carry them out during this session so far as it lies within our power lest an infuriated people turn against us at the next election with the danger of swinging so far to the left as to endanger representative, constitutional government. In our two-party system of government they have lost faith in the opposition party. Ours is their last refuge and hope. We must not fail them.

Mr. Speaker, the people voted for less regimentation and control in government. We can and will keep this commitment. They voted most seriously for economy in government, the eradication of useless bureaus and for a very great reduction of governmental employees.

In fact, they asked this Congress, by their votes, to demobilize bureaucracy. We can and must keep that pledge in the interest of the taxpayers of the Nation.

They voted for a reduction of the high wartime taxes in the hope that such economy in Government could be brought about by the Republicans, that taxes could be reduced, the budget balanced, and with a substantial amount left over for the reduction of the Federal debt now standing at approximately $260,000,000,000. We can and must see that their hopes are realized. In fact, the Republican Party is committed to a reduction of taxes, the balancing of the budget, and to substantial payments on the public debt. This is a great challenge, but it must be met.

Mr. Speaker, propagandists over the radio, news writers, the heads of departments and bureaus, following out the New Deal philosophy of spending without any regard to economy in Government over the past number of years, tell the people and the Congress it cannot be done. They try to influence the Members of Congress and their constituents against a reduction of taxes. Of course, the bureaucrats are against the reduction of taxes, which means a reduction of Government pay rolls. They are standing by their old policies of tax and tax, spend and spend.

Official Washington is so accustomed to the idea of spending the people's money that it cannot embrace the idea of economy. They are still steeped and controlled by the philosophy of spending, of waste and extravagance.

Mr. Speaker, official heads of the bureaus who helped to make up the budget for the President have apparently sold him on the idea that the budget for the coming fiscal year, almost 2 years after peacetime, should be $37,500,000,000. President Truman has told the Congress and the people of the Nation that to carry on governmental affairs he recommends a budget of $37,500,000,000 for the coming fiscal year. There is far too much fat in these figures. The Congress must render it out.

Out of this budget, four times higher than any prewar record, the President would have left over only $200,000,000 to apply on the national debt. At this rate it would take 1,300 years to pay it off.

Those who insist on free spending say, Where will you cut expenses? The answer is everywhere outside of fixed charges. Every request for funds should be gone over with a fine-tooth comb. There is a grim job to be done. It will require real initiative and courage, for it must be done.

Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from New York, Congressman TABER, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, and other House Republican Members suggested the cutting of this budget to twenty-nine or thirty billion dollars a year, official Washington and the propagandists who have served the New Deal for the past 14 years cry out that it is impossible to do this without wrecking the Government. They lose sight of the fact the Government is more likely to be wrecked unless it is done.

Under the Reorganization Act, the House and the Senate for the first time in our history have the duty to make a study of the entire cost of Government, receipts and Government expenses, and are now compelled by law to set a ceiling on how many billions of dollars the Government will spend for all purposes during the coming fiscal year.

The Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate with members of the Ways and Means Committee are now making such a study and on or before February 15 the members of that committee will make such determination. The Congress will have a right to say by its votes in the two Houses what the congressional budget will be and how much money we will expend for all Government purposes during the coming fiscal year.

Congressman TABER, chairman of the Joint Appropriations Committee of the House and Senate, in making this particular study, with other members of his committee, are making the greatest effort ever made in peacetime to meet the hopes of the American people for economy in Government and to keep the pledges of the Republican Party made to the people last November.

Neither the Members of the Congress on either side of the House nor the American people will be fully satisfied with what we will accomplish regardless of the results because the task with which the Congress is confronted is so great. Due to the expense of the war and the building up of bureaucracy with its cost over the past number of years, the Members of Congress in attempting to straighten out the fiscal affairs of the Government find it the biggest peacetime job of Government financing in the history of the world.

The Republican Members of Congress cannot undo within a few short months what it has taken 16 years to build up.

To get some idea of why there will have to be appropriated many billions more in money than the general public realizes, may I set out a few fixed charges and commitments as given to the Congress by the President in his Budget message. This will give you some idea why the Budget cannot be reduced to the figures the general public is expecting.

Fixed charges

Annual interest on public debt	$5,000,000,000
Taxes which must be refunded	2,065,000,000
International commitments (Note: Of this amount, $1,200,000,000 goes to Great Britain on the British loan)	3,510,000,000
Total fixed charges	10,575,000,000

Then the President has asked for—

Veterans' affairs	$7,343,000,000
National defense, including Army, Navy, and the Maritime Commission	11,256,000,000
Transportation and communication	1,530,000,000
Welfare, health, and security	1,654,000,000
Total	21,783,000,000
Grand total	32,358,000,000

Many other large items in the budget runs the President's request up to $37,500,000,000.

Aside from these fixed charges which must be honored it will require, as you can see, a considerable reduction on all of these and other costs of government.

I believe such a reduction can be made as will justify a congressional budget of $30,000,000,000. This I submit, in view of all the facts, might well be the extreme limit and these figures may be too optimistic. So you can see it is not as easy a matter to reduce the budget as it would seem when all the facts are gone into.

Mr. Speaker, it will require a most serious effort. We Republicans must make an all-out frontal attack against waste and extravagance in Government. If necessary, we should put a new ceiling on the number of employees in Government in an effort to reduce Government pay rolls from approximately 2,200,000 at present to 1,300,000 by January 1, 1948.

As a member of the Civil Service Committee for the past 4 years I have constantly fought for the reduction of Federal pay rolls because of my knowledge that practically all bureaus in Washington are overstaffed.

Mr. Speaker, if the Republican Members of Congress who now have the responsibility and who will receive the support of many of the Democratic Members, can find it possible to set the congressional budget at $30,000,000,000 rather than $37,500,000,000, as requested by the President, we can balance the budget, reduce income taxes, and still have over $3,500,000,000 to be applied to the retirement of the Federal debt.

Mr. Speaker, if we can do that in this Congress, we shall receive the plaudits of the Nation; we will strengthen the confidence of the people in their Government, and this is extremely important.

We shall have to courageously use the meat cleaver in cutting expenses. No half way efforts will do. If we can reduce the budget to thirty billions for the coming year, it will then be a simple matter to reduce it by five billion the following year.

Expenses must be reduced. Financially our Government is now in the danger zone. With a $260,000,000,000 debt we are in a position today where we could not stand a long and sustained depression. We must put our financial national house in order, and move it out of the danger zone before it is too late. A sustained depression throwing millions of people out of work and with the Government compelled to add billions of dollars a year to the present $260,000,000,000 debt; confidence in our financial solvency would be so impaired that there would be great danger of the billions of dollars of Government bonds, now held by all the banks and insurance companies of the Nation, losing their value to a degree that might well wreck every bank and insurance company in America. There are 80,000,000 life insurance policyholders who would see their savings dissipated, banks would crash throughout the Nation, and chaos would be abroad in the land. We can prevent the possibilities of such conditions if we will cut governmental expenses now, demand greater efficiency in Government, and move our ship of state out of the danger zone. We must act now. Later may be entirely too late.

Mr. Speaker, every farmer who has accumulated some property, every little businessman, every owner of a home in America, and all of the laboring men of America who want to see industry kept going at full speed which protects their jobs and assures them a living wage for themselves and their families, all are threatened by our present financial condition.

These are some of the problems facing this Congress and these problems must be met by courageous action. Political consideration must be laid aside, and we must all pull together for the common goal in putting our financial house in order for us of today and for posterity that will come after us. The future of representative government may well depend on how well we do our job in the Eightieth Congress.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the remarks I made before the Tariff Commission concerning sugar beets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

SUGAR

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to say just a word about the remarks I am going to include in the Appendix of the RECORD today. First, I call your attention to the fact that at the end of 1947 the Sugar Act of 1937 will expire. That will be the end of it. On June 30, 1947, the War Powers Act, to control the price of sugar, expires.

On March 31, less than 60 days distant, the power of the executive department to allocate sugar to our housewives and industrial users expires. In the face of those three factors, it is only a short while until the House of Representatives must take action on the sugar question. Coming from a sugar-beet producing area, my farmers tell me they are satisfied with the price they are to receive as far as we know at the present time from our contract as presented to us by the Department of Agriculture, which price is $14.50 per ton for 16½-percent sugar content beets. But there are two things we must have, and that is the reason I am speaking to you this morning. We must have labor—hand labor; and, secondly, we must have farm machinery.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

COMMUNISTS IN THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday of last week, I believe it was, there was unfolded on the floor of the House a petition about 200 feet long, signed by Californians and addressed to the Congress, asking that the Committee on Un-American Activities investigate communism in Hollywood. While I am in complete accord with the suggestion made, I should like to say that the immediate problem is getting Communists out of the Government. The bureaucrats should not wait for congressional action, for if there is one thing that should be apparent to them it is that a determination exists on the Hill that Communists are not to be given the free hand in government which they have heretofore enjoyed and that in the effort to put them out there will not be White House interference as was the case in the not too distant past. The Committee on Appropriations has an opportunity to do a good job. I should like to mention here, not particularly in connection with what I have said, but to make an observation which I think is meritorious, that the so-called group of experts that have recently been set up in the Congressional Library under the reorganization bill need a looking over.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

THE STEEL SITUATION AND THE WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much disturbed by the performance of the War Assets Administration in cleaning up the surplus property problem that should be disposed of. At the present time I am informed that they have on hand $250,000,000 worth of steel which the agricultural implement manufacturers, the automobile and refrigerator factories, and freight-car producers are short of, as well as almost every other type of consumer, and which steel is necessary to keep the wheels of industry in America turning. This steel represents 6,000,000 tons, or about 8 percent of last year's production of steel in the United States. They have refused to move this steel and put it on the market. Now is the time that they could get every dollar out of this situation that the Government has invested in it. They have 60,000 people on the pay roll, and their attitude appears to be that they do not want to kill their jobs by getting anything done.

It is about time this kind of situation was cured. It is about time that that steel was put into circulation where it would do some good, and not wait until it becomes a drug on the market, and interferes with the employment of our people in the steel mills.

I hope that in some way, by pressure from Congress or otherwise, we may put some life into that outfit and get that steel out into production in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

THE PASSING OF GRACE MOORE

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday in flaming tragedy, the most beloved living Tennessean, Grace Moore, passed into eternity.

From the time she was a schoolgirl in the little town of Jellico, with pigtails down her back, I knew her and all the members of her family. She was born in Slabtown, a sawmill hamlet, near Del Rio, in upper east Tennessee. Her father, Richard L. Moore, was a native of western North Carolina, and her mother, a native of Tennessee, a member of the well-known Stokely family. When she was but a child, her father moved to Jellico, Campbell County, Tenn., where he engaged in the wholesale drygoods business.

The people of Jellico are devoted to their homes and devoutly loyal to their churches. It was natural that Grace Moore, endowed as she was with a voice that was to make her world famous, should sing in the choir of the First Baptist Church.

Grace Moore was a girl of indomitable will, tireless energy, and soaring ambition. Her father, prominent and successful in business at that time in Jellico and afterwards in Chattanooga, was not enthusiastic about his daughter's ambitions, but nobody could stop Grace Moore. From light opera she sang her way to stardom and world fame in grand opera as a member of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York.

She sang and acted the part of the world's first soprano singer. The world accepted her self-appraisal. She was the most popular singer in this country when her summons came. She herself said, "I may not have the best soprano voice in the world, but people listen to me and I can make them happy." That statement is true. She went abroad during the war and sang for thousands in our armed camps. Through song, she spoke the universal language of mankind and ministered to the welfare of countless thousands.

Grace Moore will be missed. She walked with kings and queens, and the great of the earth, but she never lost the common touch. In her home town she knew everyone, and they all knew and loved her. From that little town of 3,000 souls she went forth to fame and fortune in America and Europe.

I have seen and heard her lift thousands on the wings of song. In her, death chose a shining mark. For her, life has been, and the vast forever should be, one grand, sweet song. She has joined "the choir invisible of those immortal dead who live again. In the minds made better by their presence." She has joined the choir invisible; reached "that purest heaven," where she may be to other souls "the cup of strength in some great agony"; she has joined "the choir invisible whose music is the gladness of the world."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS] has expired.

THE LATE GRACE MOORE

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, the untimely death of Grace Moore is a source of great grief to the people of the State of Connecticut. Miss Moore has for some years lived in Sandy Hook, which is near Newtown in Fairfield County, in a house which the illustrious former Congresswoman, Clare Boothe Luce, occupied last summer.

It was my privilege and pleasure to know Miss Moore quite well over a long number of years. I join with many thousands of others in mourning her death. Hers was one of the great success stories of America. Hers is the type of career, the type of climbing up to the top which could be achieved only in this great country of opportunity.

I want to register the deep feeling of personal grief which I have, and also express the sympathy for her relatives and friends which is felt by all the people of Fairfield County and also by the people of the State of Connecticut.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. HARRIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances, in one to include an editorial from his home town paper, and in the other to include a poem by Horace C. Carlisle.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes today following the special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

THE THREAT OF COMMUNISM

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL], I desire to call attention to the fact that this was not a Republican victory; as someone said down in the dining room, it was merely a delousing of the Democratic Party.

It is true we lost some good men, but we had several on our side, and a few on the Republican side, who committed political hara-kiri by swallowing a hammer and a sickle.

All this seems to be understood by both sides here in the House, and therefore we have not had any such fiasco as the lynching of BILBO at the other end of the Capitol.

On yesterday, in New York, former Governor Earle, of Pennsylvania, made one of the most alarming speeches I have ever read, showing that communism is constantly preparing for war against the United States. He was a diplomat in the Balkans, and knows whereof he speaks. He is telling you what the Committee on Un-American Activities has been telling you for years.

It is my intention to invite Governor Earle to come to Washington. I would like for him to speak publicly, but, if necessary, we will hear him behind closed doors.

I can tell you now it is time for the American Congress to wake up and say to the rest of the world that we are going to keep the atomic bomb, we are going to keep the finest air force in the world, until the peoples of other countries really manifest an honest desire for peace among the nations of the earth.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

VIEWS ON LEGISLATION

Mr. GIFFORD. Why 20 minutes? I have so much ground to cover I wish to correct the Speaker's statement. I asked for the great pleasure of addressing the House for 30 minutes, and it was granted. The calendar is wrong. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show that I had permission for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. STEFAN]. The gentleman from Massachusetts will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Surely with the other special order having been abandoned you cannot regret that I have taken at least 30 minutes. I take this opportunity that my people at home may know my stand on certain public questions, but I shall take some time to make a few remarks addressed to the new Members especially. Lest I forget it, however, I wish to declare at once that I am for reduction in taxes even to the 20 percent, if necessary. I even hope for that. Later if I have the time I will discuss the subject further.

Secondly, I am not in favor of the present method of making trade agreements. They will prove highly injurious to our many and varied industries. I either want to repeal the authority, suspend it, or force the inclusion of escape clauses in each and every agreement. If I have the time, I will discuss this further.

There are other matters on which I have been requested to declare my stand, and I may come to some of them later.

Mr. Speaker, having been here for 24 long years, knowing many highly placed individuals altogether too well, meaning that I know their weaknesses as well as their strength, I often doubt their real capabilities although some of them have done splendidly. I wish to offer some encouragement to the men and women new Members. There may be some DIRKSENS among you, but I do not know. After listening on last Thursday to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] I hesitated to take the time. He was certainly wonderful. I feared you would make comparisons. Who could equal his performance? What a remarkable man he is! He has a world-wide horizon of view. I could only wish I might acquire it also. But I have never traveled far.

However, the traveler sees the subject, paints the picture for us, and tells us all about it. That saves us from all the inconveniences of travel. The travelers return and tell us of the conditions more convincingly, than if we had seen for ourselves. Our colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] evidently saw much and he has a retentive memory. What a picture he drew of the red menace. Never can we forget that speech in which he warned us that that menace is on the march.

Now, in reference to your committee assignments. No doubt many new Members were disappointed. Did you argue with yourself that length of service should not be the sole criterion of your advancement? Shall you just sit here and wait to be assigned to an important committee? I am afraid criticism of that practice is somewhat prevalent. I sat here for a long time. To my recollection I have never urged my assignment to any particular committee. I may have, but I do not recall doing so. You came to me, TOM JENKINS, and told me that I would be assigned to the Committee on Ways and Means—I did not come to you. I always felt if and when my service merited the respect and confidence of the Members I would receive proper recognition.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to say, in view of the fact the gentleman is addressing the new Members of Congress, that in the person of the distinguished speaker now addressing the House we find one of the most unassuming, one of the most cultured, one of the most beloved Congressmen I have ever known.

Mr. GIFFORD. I love that. But I once recited "Flattery is the food for fools." However, "now and then we men of wit condescend to take a bit." Of course, we love praise, especially when is comes from one who himself is worthy of praise. I do pride myself on the respect I seem to have among Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle. I feel sure I have it. I think I have even the affection of Democrats, although I have perhaps "ribbed" them more than any other Member of Congress. Generally, it was only playful and so recognized. Probably I shall continue to be playful and avoid being disliked.

Mr. Speaker, I have mellowed with the years. I seem to love everybody. I probably ought not, but I think I do. I have my anxieties about the present Congress and the future, and as an older Member I am anxious to know what the new Members will bring to us in abilities and opinions. As I look over to my left I see the face of a new lady Member. I wish that all the other lady Members were present. May I say to her, one of the great worries I have in the Congress itself is lest we have too many of you. Although I say this in a somewhat jocular way, still I am a little serious about it.

The lady Members we have today are extremely satisfactory to us. But they, like all women, can talk to us with their eyes and their lips, and when they present to us an apple it is most difficult to refuse. Even old Adam could not resist. Women have a language all their own. I do not like to particularize, but I should. I see the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] is present. I read or listen carefully to everything she says on the floor. She is a truly marvelous woman; such a command of language as she possesses. She is also a world traveler. She has also slept in far places. She convinces us that she knows what she is talking about. Because I admire her so much I could hardly resist, I fear, supporting any measure that she would propose, especially if she looked at me as such a woman can. The gentlewoman from Maine, MARGARET CHASE SMITH, who is almost always sitting over there at my left, never seems to have a vacant chair beside her that I could take and get acquainted with her. Why? She is so able and so popular. These ladies are so attractive. They are dangerous in that they may influence us too much. Suppose we had 50 of them. Seemingly, I note flirtations enough now, but what would there be with 50 of them? When I discuss problems here on the floor, sometimes serious problems, I always attempt to use a humorous handle. You must have noted it. Do not think I am joking too much, but I do try to convey thoughts that have very serious import. Perhaps I overdo it. You women now have many times the influence that you would have if the equal rights legislation should pass. I saw the picture of the leaders of the equal rights convention. I was pleased to notice that there were no Congresswomen in the group. It may be that there are some here who belong to that group, and if they ask me to vote for that legislation I suppose I would.

Well, I will say to you younger Members, as we older ones depart, your length of service will give you higher places on committees. But the Committee of the Whole is really all you need. Why wish for anything more? In this Committee you can talk on any subject. When you get to be chairman of a certain committee, then you are practically tied to that post. You are not really supposed to have time for anything else. You may be expected to give your whole attention to that committee. I would not like that. I am interested in many problems and desire perfect freedom in their consideration. Have patience, for "when the sun is set, the little stars will shine." I fear I will be giving my own swan song before long. But how I have enjoyed being here.

I do feel that I might call your attention to this worry of mine, which is of the greatest concern to me and has been for some time—and I want the women particularly to listen to this—that people want the big, strong, good looking man to be selected as President of the United States. Personally I want the issue, not the man, to be the determining factor. Am I not right about that? There are now more women voters than men, and it somehow appeals to me that they could not help but admire and prefer the man whose personality has the most appeal. Personality seemed to have elected a President for an unprecedented four terms. But I want the issue determined, even though the make-up of the candidate running for office is as homely a character as Abraham Lincoln. I warn the new Members not to be overawed by the loud speakers. Many of us who speak poorly, speak the most. I want a diminution of laws. I would like to repeal, and repeal, and repeal. The gentleman from Mississippi told you why they lost the last election. I will also tell you why. The public had grown weary. Their weariness and patience had grown very thin. They had stood Government exactions for too many years. Think of the burdens placed upon the people of this Nation because of bureaus and bureaucrats. They grew up like anthills. No wonder that so many of our citizens seem to act and write as if they "had ants in their pants." That is an old expression but it seems fitting to use it at the moment. They are uncomfortable. There are mountainous reports to be made to these bureaucrats. Let us hasten the job of ridding our people of them.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] told you there are 60,000 employees in the War Assets Corporation. Can we not demand at least a 50-percent reduction?

About 10, 12, or 14 years ago so-called Farleyism was at its height and a great multitude of jobs was created. We Republicans did not get notice of any of those vacancies. No; only Democrats were given notice of those vacancies, and they were filled with many thousands of deserving Democrats who were then enthusiastic to win elections, and they did. Yet now I hear that Mr. Farley himself is complaining of too many bureaucrats, and would get rid of them. But he, seemingly, is largely to blame for the condition.

I see my good and long-time friend, former leader MCCORMACK, watching me closely. I will yield to him now if he so desires.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Indeed I will.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I am not watching my friend closely because I do not have to watch him. I respect him very much.

Mr. GIFFORD. I know you do.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am listening to the gentleman with interest, rather than watching him closely, because he does not have to be watched closely.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to say to these new Members, watch out for him. Never attack the New Deal, because we have heard him so often make the most persuasive speeches defending all phases of the New Deal. Sometimes I think, John, you think the history of America began in the election of 1932. You did wonderful work in protecting the New Deal. I served with you away back in the Massachusetts Legislature some 30 years ago. I respect you. I am really fond of you. You were not always a stubborn Democrat in the Massachusetts Legislature. Often you helped the Republicans to prevent the passage of unsound legislation. But I have warned you new Members not to be carried away in admiration of him, because in oratory he is unexcelled, and sometimes I think he really has a good argument in his strong appeal.

Someone has said that it would be better to have no laws at all than the prodigious number we now have. I can almost agree with that. Is that a foolish statement, really? Thomas Jefferson wrote that that government that governs least is the best. But you know Thomas Jefferson and Jackson are now forgotten except on their birthdays. Meetings are held in honor of their birthdays, usually at $50 or $100 a plate. They seem to capitalize on them. Very little reference is made to the wise advice they gave, which ought to be remembered. It was once said here that they held a Jackson day dinner and took all the "jack" out of Jackson. Well do I remember those methods as used even in my own district during those job placing days. They called on my Democratic citizens for contributions, and I had the names of those who gave the $50 or $100 apiece. Afterward every one of them got a good job. As I recall it, every one of them did. Do you not remember those methods? Farley probably does not want to remember.

I wish to say some comforting things, I really do, to these new Members. For some little time you should perhaps refrain from too much speaking. I did not do much speaking during my first 10 years. I can frankly confess to you I was a most frightened person when I made my first speech here. Now I wish I were frightened. I would perhaps hold my tongue. I was once provoked to warn a new Member here by remarking, "The infant mortality here is very high." I am now anything but frightened. My worry is that I will speak when I ought to hold my tongue. Our wives advise against speaking too much. After all, women are the real critics. But you are building for the future, you new Members, and the future will belong to those who prepare for it.

I want to reduce taxes. Indeed I do. Taxing people on the basis of their ability to pay? That sounds plausible, but why make it so punitive? I was brought up in the older days to learn some of the fundamental rules relating to taxation. My Governor used to send me on missions to confer with other tax cxperts. I foolishly thought I knew something about taxation. Apparently, I did not. I was early taught that taxation, like the atmosphere, should press equally upon all citizens. I found that in most State constitutions there was that phrase, that precious phrase: "Taxes should be proportionate." That now seems to have been deleted from all State constitutions. Proportionate taxation means that if you have 10 times as much as I have, you should pav 10 times as much and not 100 times as much. But now we have the so-called progressive taxation. For the benefit of the new Members, let me recite to you what that great President and long-time friend of mine, Calvin Coolidge, who was president of the Massachusetts Senate when I was a member of that body, once said on the matter of progressive taxation. Some of the older Members may recall it. It is unforgettable. He had such a concise and incisive way of speaking that it carried weight. He said, "If you take 20 percent of what a man makes on Monday, then take 40 percent of what he makes on Tuesday, 60 percent of what he makes on Wednesday, and 80 percent of what he makes on Thursday, he will not work Friday and Saturday." Ability to pay? Yes. But pay the Government all of it? No. I do not envy or hate that man who may make a million dollars. But shall the Federal Government take $900,000 of it, leaving him still to pay his State income taxes and other levies? I want him to have some ability to employ me or my children and grandchildren. I want there to be some incentive left to him to carry on. We must have incentive capital if we want to keep our country going. That word "incentive" should be kept in our minds. Why do people expect citizens to do business without a profit? Balance the budget? Yes. But tax reduction comes first. The question arises—to balance what budget? The $260,000,000,000 direct debt or the Wigglesworth $663,000,000,000 debt? And the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] does not tell you things that are not so. His figures seem to be supported by the Bureau of the Budget.

If you endorse my note, you are liable, and the banks will regard it as a liability. So I am much worried about balancing the budget. But will we balance the budget? Suppose we balance the budget by $2,500,000,000. What would that amount to? No; the paying of that debt will be our problem for perhaps 100 years, unless, like all other nations, we indulge in some sort of financial chicanery. We cut the gold dollar and took all the profits, did we not? Is my Government to call in my dollar bill and issue a new one with a value of 25 cents, and take 75 cents profit on it? Is that method of canceling our debt to be adopted? Did they not do that in France? There is one thing we must save, however, and that is the psychological effect. We must pay the $5,000,000,000 interest, because as long as you and I cut coupons, which is such a pleasant task, and collect real money on those coupons, we somehow feel reassured. But do we not know that we have to be taxed even to pay for those coupons? As I have often said, beware of phony financing. Such economics were not taught in the old book when I was a school teacher. But the comforting thing about it all is that we were assured over and over again by our recent President that we owed this debt to ourselves. Of course, we will not go into bankruptcy because we would not summons ourselves into bankruptcy, nor can anyone from the outside summons us into bankruptcy. Therefore, we can go on and on and on and on until some fatuous condition arises, when we would come to recognize that it would be foolish even to talk of paying the public debt. I am trying to explain this according to my own reasoning. Perhaps I am wrong, but tax reduction and the relief of our people come first, considering what little we can do toward balancing the budget. Many times in my life I could not balance my own budget. For years I had to borrow money to keep the wheels of industry going and to get the tools with which I could work to make money, in the belief that not only could I repay it but that I would make some money to keep other people employed.

I do not know that I have made myself clear; but I will say to you younger Members, no matter how well you speak on the floor, it does not seem to matter. We may enjoy and appreciate it, but we easily forget it. However, if you use the humorous handle, we will be more likely to remember. A couple of months ago one of my newspapers wrote an editorial about the danger of the public debt. I once made a speech on the danger especially of the short-term public debt. One magazine printed the whole of it. About 10 years ago, when I made that speech, what do you suppose that newspaper quoted from it?—

"Hush, little deficit, don't you cry;
You will be a crisis by and by."

We were having all sorts of crises and emergencies in those days. But the newspaper remembered those lines and quoted them again in the recent editorial. There may have been a little humor in it, but it did convey a thought to the people that someday there would be a crisis.

We are rich, are we? No. We are really bankrupt. What of it? Other nations say we are rich and prosperous. Are we? I cannot think so. Someone rose today and wanted to put an article in the RECORD about the great man from London who said, "If we have to live up to the terms we made on preferential trade agreements, we never can pay the debt." Already they are serving notice that the debt of $3,750,000,000 will never be paid. Some of us rather suspected that when we loaned the money. But to think they would come out with it now in that way!

I want to say to the membership of this House, when Will Clayton and others came before the Committee on Ways and Means, to my utter amazement certain members of that committee confounded them on every phase. Those men knew so little about the workings of the trade agreements. Of course, Henry Wallace came. That ought to be enough to condemn it. But what did they know about trade agreements? Only that broad viewpoint—they would make the world better and prevent wars. Perhaps it would do away with war, but I am entirely unconvinced. In 1935 I joined with you in putting an embargo on the sale of arms, because the argument was that if we would not sell munitions no nation would resort to war. Think what happened! You cannot now make me vote by appealing only to my emotions. I must face the hard, cold facts. This is to be one of your problems. It is said that Congressmen do not like hard, cold facts. It interferes with their prejudices. So many of us have to vote our prejudices, as so often we do not have the time to study problems and weigh them carefully.

I was amused to hear someone make the remark that the legislative branch of the Library was open to us, and they could furnish us with all information desired. I live at the famous Cosmos Club in Washington. Everyone there is a scientist or an expert on some subject. We salute them all as "Doctor." I can always find someone there who knows a great deal about any subject on which I wish to be informed. Sometimes they know a great deal more than they should know, as they discourage us so. I am often worried about those persons who have a skull full of booklore. The greatest blockhead I know is someone whose head is filled with educational lumber. I want to get back to the farmer out in the country who has the gift of common sense. Common sense is really to be depended upon. The agent came to the farmer with many pamphlets and told him they would help him do better farming. The farmer replied, "I do not want to read them; I don't do as well as I know how, now."

He did not want to be annoyed with pamphlets, written by any professor who never milked a cow and probably never did any farming himself. I have milked cows. Books did not tell me how to do it.

There are many things I had expected to talk about but my time, of course, is exhausted. If I should turn to these notations there would be no end. But I did make up my mind to say a few words to the new Members of Congress, especially to warn them of certain dangers, although I think they may have an inkling as to some of them by this time. Next, I wanted to make a few declarations of where I stand on tax reduction, labor problems, and trade agreements, and to comment on the public debt. But I do not like to read speeches. Man is naturally lazy and he must have an incentive to get him to do anything. That is why we have got to reduce taxes, to give him an incentive to keep going.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the genleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes, I yield to the gentleman. I am pleased to have a Democrat appeal to me.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman knows the fond affection I have for him.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope so, but I have never tried the gentleman out on that.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In addition to that, I think perhaps the gentleman may appreciate a little rest while I make a brief inquiry.

Mr. GIFFORD. You mean my tongue may need a rest. I myself do not need a rest.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Just so the gentleman may calm himself and not let his emotions get too strong.

Mr. GIFFORD. Do I give you that impression?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I was interested in the gentleman's remarks about farming. I do not, of course, come from a farming area.

Mr. GIFFORD. But I am a farmer, so be careful.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I do not come from an agricultural section.

Mr. GIFFORD. Nor I either.

Mr. EBERHARTER. But I am wondering whether in the gentleman's State they have a State college which gives courses in agriculture.

Mr. GIFFORD. Indeed, we do, and it is a good one.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Then the gentleman will agree, will he not, that a farmer who has the practical knowledge, and in addition the theoretical knowledge he learns out of books in these agricultural colleges, makes a better farmer than one who does not?

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope the gentleman did not get the impression that I was against agricultural colleges. I simply told what one farmer said, that book learning did not appeal to him.

I wonder if the gentleman ever read the old story about the farmer who gained such fame as a weather prophet that he was more often right than Old Probability. His fame spread so widely that Old Probability sent people from the departments to interview him and learn how he foretold the weather. He said to them, "I do not mind telling you. I watch my donkey out in the field. When he grazes contentedly the weather will be good. Whenever he gets uneasy I can tell by the degrees of his uneasiness how bad the weather is going to be." And it is said they went back to Washington—the story is in an old textbook—and appointed a jackass to be the head of every weather bureau in the country. That story is in Haskin's History.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield,

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will extend his remarks to go into the matter of his views on the reciprocal trade agreements because I have great respect for the gentleman's views. I know he is a great statistician on that subject. I hope the gentleman will take time to develop that in his extension.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other things that I wanted to say especially to the younger Members. We listen to arguments and speeches by men of marvelous culture; we listen to them carefully and admiringly. Then we vote against them. It is nice to have respect, and sometimes we wish to vote for measures of national good, but somehow there are people back home pulling the strings, are there not? I represent the old Plymouth district. I think the old Plymouth blood is in my veins. I am very proud of the district I represent, and the people of my district seldom have told me how I should vote. I have been, and I want to say that I still can be, independent. But sometimes we have that appalling decision to make: Shall I vote for my country as a whole or must I vote to protect my own particular district? Which should I represent? Your conscience must be your guide. But you can almost always subdue your conscience; you can always educate your conscience. "You can gauge your conscience to the plot," I think Shakespeare said, did he not?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think I once said that conscience and cowardice are the same. Then again, I said conscience is sometimes just plain yellow. Somebody from New York read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and sent me a copy and after the word "yellow" he wrote, "So are you." All the world seems not ready for liberty; the human liberties that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] told us about. I was expecting to comment further on that speech. I wanted to add "he who will give up a little liberty for a little security deserves neither liberty nor security."

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE GREGORIAN CALENDAR

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, last July 15, Hon. KARL E. MUNDT, of South Dakota, introduced H. R. 7041 in the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress. This bill followed his speech clearly setting forth the defects of the present Gregorian calendar and emphasizing the benefits that would be derived by adoption of the world calendar.

Time and standards of time are not partisan. They are universal and belong to everyone. Agreement was reached by interested Members of both parties that a Democrat and Republican should join in bringing this subject to the attention of the Congress.

Under the rules of the House a bill may not be introduced jointly. Such action, however, is permitted in the other body, and Senators JAMES E. MURRAY, Democrat, of Montana, and H. ALEXANDER SMITH, Republican, of New Jersey, accordingly joined in Senate Resolution 318. The day after the speech by Mr. MUNDT, under a prior understanding with him, I addressed the House, fully subscribing to the views he had expressed and undertaking to set forth some additional considerations. I urged that "our Government should assume a position of leadership in this improvement," and that "the action we take here will not only be beneficial to this Nation but will be influential internationally and helpful to humanity."

There was no expectation that the bills would be passed by the last Congress. In introducing a companion bill in the Senate, the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY expressed the sentiments of all proponents of such action within these words. He said the action was—

> In order to bring the matter to the immediate attention of the Members of this body. Of course, this measure cannot be considered during this session. It is to be hoped, however, that during the recess the Members * * * will study the proposal and will be prepared to consider it during the next session of Congress.

The introduction of this proposed legislation has served several additional purposes. The newspapers of this Nation publicized it both in their news columns and editorially. Press comment was extraordinarily favorable and the public response, as measured by letters to editors and to those of us involved in introducing the legislation, showed a widespread interest and favorable attitude. The result of this informal referendum to public opinion justifies, nay compels, us to reintroduce the legislation and press for its enactment. Many important organizations, business, professional, social, and others, have expressed approval, and some have passed resolutions of endorsement. Government bureaus have been induced to study the matter. The governments of many other nations have renewed their consideration of the desirability of adopting the world calendar. As a result we are informed that similar bills may be introduced in their legislatures as government bills in the case of several nations. Also, a resolution is coming before the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations proposing that it recommend to the General Assembly that the world calendar be adopted by the nations of the world, effective on January 1, 1950.

It is my privilege in this Congress to reintroduce the bill for the adoption of the world calendar. I am advised that my colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], will also address you on the subject.

A slight change has been made in the bill as originally drawn and offered. A phrase has now been incorporated showing that the four quarters of the year approximate the four seasons of the year. This is not a change in the proposed calendar but in our exposition and analysis. I need not stress that the seasons of the year are Nature's divisions. Inevitably, they result in dividing many of the activities of human life into approximately four seasonal periods.

The world calendar divides the year into four equal quarters of 91 days each. In our present Gregorian calendar there are 90 days, and 91 days in leap years, 91 days, 92 days, and 92 days in each quarter. This inequality is complicating and causes many complex, difficult, and practically impossible adjustments for statistical and other purposes. In the world calendar each quarter begins on Sunday and ends on Saturday, contains 3 months, 13 weeks, or 91 days. Each quarter is identical with the others. The first month of each quarter has 31 days, followed by 2 months of 30 days, and each month has 26 weekdays plus Sundays.

The Gregorian calendar has 181 days—and 182 days in leap years—in the first half year and 184 days in the second half of the year. Balance is obviously destroyed. The inequality of these two divisions of the year results in innumerable disadvantages and causes many difficulties. In the world calendar each half year begins on Sunday and ends Saturday, and both halves of the year have exactly 182 days. The half years are synchronized with the months.

By a shift of only a few days, eight in all, one being the world holiday at the end of the year and the other the leap-year day, the world calendar provides an ordered and reliable timetable for the year. It retains the familiar 12 months of the year. Five months correspond to the comparable days of the Gregorian calendar, namely, January, September, October, November, and December. The dates during the 6 months between September 1 and February 28 would remain exactly as they are at present.

In short, the world calendar, a civil calendar, offers a maximum of equalization with a minimum of adjustment. Similarly this affects customs and traditions, and historical dates, scientific calculations and chronometrical usage as little as possible consistent with calendar stabilization.

Briefly summarizing the major benefits that will be achieved by adoption of the world calendar, let me state them as follows:

First. It will fix the year in perpetuity in accordance with the scientific length of the year and retain the 12 months made familiar by the Gregorian calendar.

Second. It will retain and equalize the half years and make them comparable.

Third. It will reapportion the number of days in the months more equally.

Fourth. It will retain and equalize the quarters of the year.

Fifth. It will provide a uniform grouping of the months in a pattern and sequence of days in each quarter of the year.

Sixth. It will provide 13 complete weeks within each quarter and group these weeks uniformly.

Seventh. It will establish an equal working month of 26 business days plus Sundays for all the months, and will reduce the inequality between the months from a maximum of 3 days to 1 day.

Eighth. It will fix holidays so they will always fall on the same day and date.

Ninth. It will enable each year, half year, and quarter to begin on Sunday, which is retained as the first day of the week, and to end on Saturday, which is retained as the last day of the week.

Tenth. It will for the first time in history give man a year-end world holiday set apart from all other days and appropriately dedicated to world peace and friendship, and also a midyear world holiday every 4 years, in leap years.

Almost the only standard used in the world which changes each year is the present calendar. Under the present Gregorian calendar, a revision of the 2,000-year-old calendar of Julius Caesar, each year varies. Each year starts on a different day of the week, and there are in all 14 calendar patterns and 28 types of months. Holidays grasshop throughout the week. Months vary in length without a consistent pattern. The quarter years are not equal.

Is it not desirable that all the peoples of the world start the year at one and the same time? Is it not preferable that people use the same timetable in their lives? With the speed of communication and transportation, is it not necessary that a single standard of time be used so that we can synchronize plans, harmonize thought, expedite timing, and act in unison?

In the past calendars have been promulgated by emperors, kings, and high church officials, with the advice of men of science. Today secular power in democracies is vested in congresses and parliaments and the executive branches of governments. In this Nation the responsibility and duty of revising the civil calendar devolves upon Congress. Let us discharge this obligation in a manner worthy of the representatives of the people of this important and powerful Nation.

WORLD CALENDAR

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, time rules us all. The most powerful and the weakest are equally impotent to stay time. Mighty as is this Nation it cannot add or subtract one second, or a fraction of a second. Time is the master of man and matter.

Each of us exists in relation to time. Einstein rendered a great service to mankind in emphasizing that physicists must consider time and space as indivisible. Philosophers now recognize that all of us exist only in relation to space-time. Nothing is more fundamental or universal than time.

Granting these premises, it is nevertheless true that our measurements and standards of time are determinative of much of our practical lives. Those are man-made creations. In our modern world we are increasingly preoccupied with time itself and our apparatus and technique for estimating its velocity. Today we figure distance largely in time. We say that New York is 18 hours by air from San Francisco, or 20 hours from London by air. We say that New York is 4 hours from Washington by train or that it is 8 hours by automobile. We measure our radio communication around the world in seconds and our telephone by moments. Our actuaries talk about life-expectancy statistics in terms of years. Bankers discuss interest in terms of time accumulation. Only recently the Army and Navy of this Government changed their standards for planes on a basis of a uniform time-standard. Many of the disputes of labor are solely based upon working hours. Among our mechanical gadgets none are more in demand than those saving time. Saving time amounts to a preoccupation, if not an obsession. In every way Americans are an intensely time-conscious people, and this is one reason for our rapid progress. A great early American, Benjamin Franklin, once said: "Do not waste time because this is the stuff of which life is made."

Many persons still alive remember when every town in the world had its own time, which was based upon meridian time. Only comparatively recently have time zones been adopted. In 1872, an American, Charles Ferdinand Dowd, and in 1878, a Scottish Canadian, Sanford Fleming, proposed plans for dividing the earth by means of 24 meridians, each 15 degrees of longitude apart, and recokoning from Greenwich. Each such zone represented an hour of difference in clock time. Great Britain passed a statute in 1880 that all her clocks should use Greenwich time. Many other nations followed and similarly set their clocks at the time obtaining in their national capitals, but in relation to Greenwich time.

In 1883, Canada and the United States agreed upon the use of standard time zones. This was done primariy by the railroads of both these nations. With the increasing speed and volume of traffic on the railroads across the continent, it became necessary to have established time zones. Gradually the system was accepted and put into use by the public at large. Yet, not until March 1918 did the Congress of the United States direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish these various time zones, and thus belatedly accepted what had then long become established by commercial and popular fiat and usage.

Greenwich time, the zones of standard time, and the international date line aroused some opposition when first proposed. There were those reluctant to adopt a new innovation, and they were supported by some public inertia.

In considering calendar revision we do well to recall these facts because they are practically identical today with the few instances in which opposition has occurred. It is also very desirable for us to remember that though it be but recently that these changes were made, they have now been so generally accepted, and all opposition and protest have been silenced by universal acceptance, that we recall the previous incidents only with difficulty and amazement.

Standard time has achieved uniformity and stability in setting the time all around the world. It has proved an enduring benefit contrived by human ingenuity.

We still have other time problems. For one thing we have variations in the exact period of a day, and our astronomers and scientists have been evolving the mechanisms for stabilizing this period of time. The modern astronomer has determined two mathematical formulas with astonishingly exact chronometrical certainty. One is that the earth revolves around its axis with almost precise regularity in close to 24 hours a day. The other is that in its direction relative to distant stars the earth is constant whatever its position in its orbit around the sun. Man has also devised the chronometer, clock, and watch with the day divided into two periods of 12 hours, with 60 minutes in each hour, and each minute with 60 seconds, and further corrected through astronomical reckonings each day. The comparatively new Arlington radio time signal is familiar to us all.

Our only major time standard in general use which today needs major revision is the calendar. The uninitiated tend to think of the calendar as unchanging and unchanged. Actually, like all contrivances of civilization, the calendar has evolved, and our calendar of today is the product of much trial and error.

The Egyptians used a calendar which had as its inspiration the seasonal Nile floods and then the discovery of an astronomical phenomenon, leading to an estimate of the sun year. This calendar goes back to about 4236 B. C. In 45 B. C. Julius Caesar had conquered Egypt, yet Caesar turned for guidance to Sosigenes, a Greek astronomer living in Alexandria, and upon his advice produced a calendar which ever since has been called the Julian calendar. It established the solar year as 365¼ days, divided it into 12 months, and provided for a leap-year day. In A. D. 321 the Emperor Constantine introduced the 7-day week. The B. C. and A. D. system of chronology was added in A. D. 532, and not fully adopted until approximately a thousand years later.

In 1582, only a very short period of the past as measured by history, Pope Gregory XIII found that the calendar was causing the true dates to advance slowly so that ultimately, if unchanged counterclockwise, Christmas would have come in midsummer. Pope Gregory consulted scientists, notably the German mathematician Clavius, and dropping 10 days to make the adjustment then necessary, promulgated the calendar which bears his name and is used in most nations today. The Gregorian calendar did not meet with immediate acceptance, despite its unquestionable improvement. England and the British Empire did not adopt it until 1752. This is the reason that George Washington, whose birthday we celebrate and venerate on February 22, was born on February 11, under the Julian calendar, and continued to celebrate that date as his real birthday. Japan adopted the Gregorian calendar in 1873, China in 1912, the Soviet Union in 1918, and Turkey in 1927. Calendar change is not new.

On July 15, 1946, it was my privilege to introduce as a bipartisan measure H. R. 7041. The gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. JOHN KEE, endorsed it from the other side of the aisle, and I am happy to reverse the procedure in this session and support the similar bill he has just reintroduced. I am happy to reciprocate this courtesy. May I call attention to our comment as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 15 and 16, 1946?

This was an unusual bill in more than one respect. Probably there has never before been a bill introduced in the Congress which in its terms of reference went back to the year 4236 B. C. and which surveyed the intervening centuries. These are technical aspects of this subject which we hoped to clarify. I strongly urge a careful reading of the entire bill as now offered. I also urge all citizens, groups, and organizations to make known to Congress their attitudes and wishes on calendar reform.

The world needs stability. We have been living in a period of experimentation and change. There comes a point when mere stability may be a virtue. I say this notwithstanding the fact that I originally introduced in Congress this bill for calendar change. Paradoxically, only by revision may calendar stability be achieved.

The subject has been studied intensively for more than 100 years. The League of Nations spent 14 years considering over 500 calendar proposals and in the end only one proposal seemed to it worth while, and that was the adoption of the world calendar. Fourteen nations approved and now stand ready to adopt it.

The Christmas and New Year's holidays of 1946–47 are still vivid in memory. You will recall that they happened to fall this year on Wednesday. In other words, they came in the middle of the work-week. The results were unsatisfactory to everyone. Business generally was completely disrupted for 2 weeks, and the individual also was dissatisfied. Under the world calendar we would have had two 3-day holidays always on the same days and dates.

Our social order is highly complex and interdependent. Time tables must be uniform and stable for all people because they affect all. The world calendar is perpetual. It has equal quarters, equal working periods and fixed holidays.

Those of my colleagues who have considered the subject in the interim since I introduced H. R. 7041 for adoption of the world calendar, I trust agree that we should not delay. Those who have not found an opportunity to study it I urge to give consideration to this very basic problem and this admirable solution so readily available to us. Public hearings should make clear to us all the advantages of the proposed calendar and also reveal the reasons, if any, why its adoption would be unwise or undesirable.

A few weeks after I introduced H. R. 7041 in the Seventy-ninth Congress, Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, of Montana, Democrat, and Senator H. ALEXANDER SMITH, of New Jersey, Republican, introduced a companion bill in the Senate. May I point out that this was the first time in the history of this country that a bill for calendar reform had been presented on the floor of both the Senate and the House and the first time that any calendar bill had ever been presented in this Congress which has had bipartisan support. Time belongs to no party.

Were one compelled to use a single word to describe the United States, none would be more appropriate than progressive. To this continent have come many of the depressed and oppressed, of nearly all the nations of the Old World. The early settlers came to a virgin wilderness; later immigrants found here a primitive country; and even the latest arrivals have felt themselves to be in a young society still in the throes of birth and growth whose future is ahead. All have come to our shores with high hopes and in the expectation of finding a richer and better future for themselves, their children and their children's children. In a comparatively short time a great Nation has been created and developed.

Much is still to be done. Many of the aspirations of man have still not been fully realized. A few years ago, within a decade or two, there was an all too prevalent attitude abroad in this land that the period of exploration, pioneering, and adventure was ended. Now we know this people and this Nation are still but on the threshold of a richer and nobler future. Whatever the faults here we know ours is the highest general level ever attained. Practically every individual would welcome an opportunity to come and stay here. The contrast between the public welfare in the United States and any other country in the world must make us all grateful to the providence which finds us in this country.

Many factors contributed to make the United States what it is. Courage was one. Work was another. Daring was still another. These led people to leave the familiar and dare the unknown, to uproot themselves and transplant their lives, to seek to fashion their own lives and their new world in the image of their hearts' desire. They have consciously and consistently sought improvement.

New standards of living, new mechanisms to realize their aspirations, new ways of organization have all played a part in producing this Nation. We have been willing to discard old mechanisms in the most mechanized nation of the world. We have raised productivity by substituting new and improved machinery for unparalleled mass production. We have dared to insist upon better and more useful standards.

The time has come for us to lead the way in adopting a modern calendar for the modern world. The United States has a great opportunity to bring into actual operation the world calendar as proposed in my H. R. 7041 of the Seventy-ninth Congress and Congressman KEE's bill which he has introduced today.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STEVENSON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

COMPENSATION OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, at the request of a number of postal employees of my district, supported by their national organizations, I have introduced bill H. R. 1272, to amend the act of July 6, 1945, relating to the compensation of postal employees. This bill, in brief, provides that such employees shall receive credit for service previously rendered in determining advancement to the meritorious-service grades provided in the act of July 6, 1945. Unless such legislation be enacted, many thousands of loyal employees, men and women who have given a lifetime of service to the public welfare, will be denied any opportunity to share in the rewards which Congress and a grateful Nation have provided.

As the law has been interpreted, employees who have already completed the long years of service required for advancement to these grades must serve an additional 15 years if they are to receive the benefits provided in legislation enacted by the Seventy-ninth Congress. Many of these people, by reason of the number of years of service heretofore rendered and the advancing years which make retirement imminent, will never receive the benefits to which they are justly entitled.

The act of July 6, 1945, sought to correct certain defects in the salary structure of employees in the field service of the Post Office Department. One notable defect in the old law was the lack of stimulant to continuing endeavor after an employee had completed the few years of service then necessary for advancement to the highest salary grade. The ultimate assurance that faithful and meritorious service performed would be rewarded was lacking, and for that reason sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 of Public Law 134 of the Seventy-ninth Congress provided three additional grades, following grade 11, with salary increases of $100 for each grade, for faithful and meritorious service performed after an employee reaches the so-called top automatic grade.

The law provides that after 3 years of service in the top automatic grade, which is grade 11, an employee shall be promoted one additional grade, and after five additional years of service in the first meritorious grade 12, he shall be promoted to the second meritorious grade 13, and after 7 years of service in this grade he should be promoted to the third and final meritorious service grade, which is grade 14. Due to the wording of the law many employees who have already completed 20, 25, and 30 years of service are required to serve an additional 15 years before they can hope to attain the top grade. Many of these people are within 1, 2, or at most, 5 years of retirement age. Their length of service precludes all possibility that they will at some future date obtain the benefits they have already earned.

It should be added that in connection with their retirement annuity, this proposal is of additional importance since the average salary for the last 5-year period will, to a large extent, determine the amount of annuity they are to receive. Thus it will be seen that enactment of H. R. 1272 serves a double purpose.

Enactment of H. R. 1272 would be an honest reward for long, efficient, and faithful service performed in the postal service, and that reward would be reflected in some slight degree through the years of retirement. Surely employees who have performed such commendable service through two world wars, through good times and bad, are justly entitled to this token recognition by their Government.

The principle involved in this legislation is not new and has already proved its worth in the military services where it has justified its adoption over a period of many years. The Seventy-ninth Congress recognized the justice of this legislation and provided the means by which those employees who enter the service today will be suitably rewarded in the years to come. It failed, however, to provide rewards for those who are presently at that stage in their careers when their remaining years of service are few, and as a result they are being paid salaries identical with those of employees having only slightly more than 6 years of service. Employees who, on June 30, 1945, were in the $2,100 grade, whether they had 4 years of service or 40, are in the same salary bracket today. H. R. 1272 is intended to correct that situation.

To further illustrate the purpose of H. R. 1272, inasmuch as Public Law 134 provides that an employee who comes under the law must serve 3 years in grade 11 before he can be eligible to the benefits of grade 12; and then must serve 5 years in grade 12 before he can become eligible to the benefits of grade 13, and thereafter he must serve 7 years in grade 13 before he can be eligible to the benefits of grade 14, it follows that a postal employee who is eligible for retirement in, say, from 1 to 3 years beginning in 1947, must serve all the remaining years of his employment before retirement in grade 11, without any opportunity to receive any of the benefits of grades 12, 13, and 14. H. R. 1272 will correct this iniquity and injustice to postal employees who are eligible to retire in the next few years of their employment.

For your consideration I am setting forth in detail the provisions of H. R. 1272, which follows:

H. R. 1272

A bill to amend the act of July 6, 1945, relating to the compensation of postal employees

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 6, 1945, entitled "An act to reclassify the salaries of postmasters, officers, and employees of the postal service; to establish uniform procedures for computing compensation, and for other purposes," as amended, is amended as follows:

Add a new subsection 23 (a) to read as follows:

"(a) Notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, as a reward for continuous service heretofore rendered or to be rendered hereafter, credit shall be allowed for any period of continuous satisfactory service performed prior to enactment of this act, and shall be counted in the same manner and to the same extent that a like period of satisfactory service would be counted for purposes of promotion to the three additional grades provided in sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, and 19 after enactment."

SEC. 2. This section shall be effective on the first day of the month following enactment.

REGISTRATION OF FIREARMS

Mr. CARSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks on the bill H. R. 1061, providing for the registration of firearms and for other purposes, which I introduced on January 16.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARSON. Mr. Speaker, I have received many protests against this bill from sportsmen's organizations and individuals. There is no one who enjoys hunting better than I do and I belong to many sportsmen's organizations.

I have tried to protect the sportsmen and in section II of this bill you will note the following language:

Any firearm of .25-caliber bore or less, or any firearm intended solely for use as a sporting weapon which the manufacturer certifies as a sportsman's model, shall be exempted from the provisions of this act.

Now, if this language is not sufficient to protect the sportsman I will insist that amendments be adopted that will fully protect them.

Many States have gun collectors' associations. In Ohio we have the Ohio Gun Collectors Association and Mr. T. W. Brown, of my home city, Canton, Ohio, is secretary-treasurer of this fine organization. One of my closest friends in Canton is Terry Brown, who is much interested in the collection of guns and has one of the finest collections in the country. I wanted to protect these organizations and these men and placed the following language in the bill:

That firearms manufactured previous to 1944 and used solely for curiosity, ornamental, or display purposes shall also be exempt from registration.

If this language does not protect them, I will support any amendment that does fully protect them.

There is nothing in this act that would in any way prevent anyone from purchasing or possessing firearms. There was never any intention to discourage the maufacture, or sale of firearms. All this law requires is that the firearm be registered and any transfer of the weapon be recorded. There may be other and better means of keeping track of firearms and I intend soliciting the aid of the editors of Field and Stream, Sports Afield, American Rifleman, and many of the other outstanding magazines published in the interest of sports.

The introduction of this bill was prompted by a conference with my good friend, Capt. Joseph Pence, of the Canton Police Department. Captain Pence is a past president of the Fraternal Order of Police and at present is chairman of the national legislative committee of the FOP. I am a past chairman of the police pension board and have known Captain Pence for a great number of years and have a high regard for him. I have also contacted Attorney General Clark's office and the FBI. My only intention in introducing this bill was to give all possible aid to our law-enforcement agencies in combating this horrible crime wave.

The greatest concern with law-enforcement agencies is the comparative ease with which criminals procure deadly weapons. Last year over a half-million major crimes were committed in the United States by minors under the age of 18 years, the majority of them with firearms.

Prior to 1940 the War Department authorized the sale of weapons to officers of the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, officers of the Reserve Corps, National Guard, and to members of the National Rifle Association. While one of the conditions of these sales is that the firearms are not transferable, nevertheless, a great many of them are sold and the enforcement agencies have no means of tracing them.

During World War II thousands of firearms have been brought into the United States by members of the armed forces. Recently a considerable number of various types of foreign weapons have been found in the possession of the underworld.

The War and Navy Departments have reported to the FBI the loss of hundreds of automatic pistols, machine guns, and so forth, during the war. These are simply reported lost or unaccounted for and there is no means of ascertaining their whereabouts.

These problems, with many others, constitute a potential menace and danger and may lead to an increase in crime. The problem is Nation-wide in character and can only be attacked on a national basis.

My only concern was to be helpful, if at all possible, to our enforcement agencies in preventing this crime wave. In other words, I want to place as many difficulties as possible in the way of organized gangsters who may endeavor to equip themselves with firearms for the purpose of carrying out their criminal activities.

On the other hand, I want to protect the sportsmen's organizations, rifle clubs, and so forth. Let me make this one point clear—I will oppose any legislation that will in any way interfere with or retard the noble efforts of these organizations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 29, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, January 27, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of truth, who alone canst lead men into the truth that is freedom and joy, be Thou our teacher as we seek to find the way of life in times that bewilder and challenge. Teach us better to know ourselves, that, knowing our weaknesses, we may be on guard. Teach us better to understand other people, that we may view their shortcomings with charity, their virtues with appreciation, and their kindness to us with gratitude.

Be with Thy servants in this place, in all things great and small, so that small things become great and great things become possible. Father of mercies, bless their loved ones and their families and make their homes sanctuaries of love and peace where they may find spiritual resources for the strain and pressure of their duties here.

Give us now Thy spirit, to guide and direct our thinking, that when the day's work is over we may merit Thy "Well done." Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 27, 1947, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

AMERICAN ATTITUDE TOWARD POLISH ELECTIONS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. IVES in the chair). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, so far as lies within my power, I wish this morning to register American unity behind the sturdy statement regarding Poland issued yesterday by the State Department. Inasmuch as our repeated warnings regarding the Polish election were ignored in Warsaw and in Moscow, we are bound to take serious account of the consequences. Our frank warnings to Warsaw began on August 19, 1946, continued on November 22, 1946, and were repeated on January 9, 1947. On January 5, 1947, we urged Britain and Soviet Russia, our cosignatories to the Yalta and Potsdam agreements, to join us in these warnings. Britain did; Soviet Russia declined. The situation and its implications, therefore, are not difficult to comprehend.

In my view, Mr. President, a world war which started in behalf of Polish liberty can scarcely be considered adequately won until Polish liberty is something more than a rigged and terrorized election which, it is charged, defies and defeats every elementary concept of autonomy, self-determination, and democracy, and which nullifies the most solemn pledges of which Britain and the United States and Soviet Russia are capable. This finding now seems to be officially confirmed to a controlling degree by the statement issued by the State Department in Washington. I have not spoken until the State Department did.

We would have no business intervening in the internal affairs of another nation in purely domestic matters, but this is a question, Mr. President, which leaps beyond this limitation, because it clearly involves the sanctity of international agreements which are the sole source of the Polish Provisional Government's authority.

This is a four-way question, involving four powers, and not merely one.

I want to make the record upon this score so plain that he who runs may read.

Mr. President, I quote first from the Yalta agreements, which were signed on February 11, 1945, signed in person by Mr. Winston S. Churchill, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and J. Stalin. I read from the official conference report:

> This Polish Provisional Government of National Unity shall be pledged to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible, on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot. In these elections all democratic and anti-Nazi parties shall have the right to take part and to put forward candidates.

I now quote from the report made by the late President Roosevelt to a joint session of the House and Senate in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on March 1, 1945:

> One outstanding example of joint action by the three major Allied Powers was the solution reached on Poland. The whole Polish question was a potential source of trouble in postwar Europe, and we came to the conference determined to find a common ground for its solution. We did. We know everybody does not agree with it—obviously.

I might interpolate that that statement is emphatically true, because Poland itself never had an opportunity even to be consulted.

I continue to read from the President's message to the joint session:

> Our objective was to help create a strong, independent, and prosperous nation—that is the thing we must all remember—those words agreed to by Russia, by Britain, and by me: The objective of making Poland a strong, independent, and prosperous nation with a government ultimately to be selected by the Polish people themselves.

To achieve this objective—

I am still quoting the late President—

To achieve this objective, it was necessary to provide for the formation of a new government much more representative than had been possible while Poland was enslaved. There are, you know, two governments: One in London, one in Lublin—practically in Russia.

Accordingly, steps were taken at Yalta to reorganize the existing Provisional Government in Poland on a broader democratic basis, so as to include democratic leaders now in Poland and those abroad. This new, reorganized Government will be recognized by all of us as the temporary Government of Poland. Poland needs a temporary government in the worst way—

And it certainly got it in just that way—

Poland needs a temporary government in the worst way—an interim government is another way to put it. However—the new Polish Provisional Government of National Unity will be pledged to holding a free election as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and a secret ballot.

And this is the point—

What I am undertaking to do very briefly, Mr. President, is to lay down this historic background beyond any chance of controversion.

I have now read the Yalta record. The next thing that occurred was at Potsdam. I now quote from the official report of the Tripartite Conference at Berlin, which was the Potsdam Conference, released to the press by the White House on August 2, 1945:

The three powers note that the Polish Provisional Government in accordance with the decisions of the Crimea Conference has agreed to the holding of free and unfettered elections—

This is the constant point I want to reiterate; it is at the base of this entire experiment—agreed to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage—

There cannot be any equivocation as to what "universal suffrage" means—universal suffrage and secret ballot in which all democratic and anti-Nazi parties shall have the right to take part and to put forward candidates, and that representatives of the Allied press shall enjoy full freedom to report to the world upon developments in Poland before and during the elections.

Supplementing that official release from the White House regarding the same Potsdam agreement, I read from the report of President Truman to the Nation on the evening of August 12, 1945, dealing with the same subject of the Potsdam agreement:

The question of Poland was a most difficult one. Certain compromises about Poland had already been agreed upon at the Crimea Conference. They obviously were binding upon us at Berlin.

By the time of the Berlin Conference, the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity had already been formed; and it had been recognized by all of us. The new Polish Government—

And these are the key words, which I emphasize—

The new Polish Government had agreed to hold free and unfettered elections as soon as possible, on the basis of universal suffrage and the secret ballot.

Then I skip a few paragraphs and continue from the President's report to the Nation:

At Yalta it was agreed, you will recall, that the three Governments would assume a common responsibility in helping to reestablish in the liberated and satellite nations of Europe governments broadly representative of democratic elements in the population. That responsibility still stands. We all recognize it as a joint responsibility of the three Governments.

One of which is the Government of the United States.

There, Mr. President, is the record of the specifications which were laid down as the indispensable price of setting up the Provisional Polish Republic. Throughout, the specifications are the clear and unavoidable challenge to free, unfettered elections in the traditional democratic process.

What happened? I think perhaps the best summary of what happened is a paragraph from an editorial in a highly responsible metropolitan newspaper. I read the paragraph, and I ask that Senators parallel it in their minds with the promises and pledges to which the honor and the faith of the three greatest nations in this world were pledged.

I quote:

What the results of the election really are may some day become known to history. The best estimates agree that if the election had been "free and unfettered," as provided in the Potsdam agreement, the present regime would have been swept from power by at least a 65-percent majority. But the election was neither free nor unfettered, nor anything except a fraud and farce even less disguised than the voting in the Balkans. It was preceded by an election campaign marked by murder, police terrorism, censorship, and suppression of the opposition, climaxed by the intimidation of the electorate to display government bloc ballots in an "open and manifest" vote to demonstrate loyalty to the regime. It was accompanied by the exclusion of all but a handful of opposition balloting supervisors. And, like the referendum of last June, it is being followed by a dishonest count to attain a majority long predetermined and divided among the Communists and their party satellites.

Now, Mr. President, the statement issued by our State Department yesterday at least substantially confirms that indictment. We must establish the total truth in respect to this indictment. We must establish the total truth in respect to the State Department's charges of yesterday, and then we must face these realities.

Mr. President, I wish to commend the State Department for its forthright statement so far as it goes, and I am sure that the Congress, the country, and the world will be interested in subsequent developments under the reservation of the future American position as asserted in the statement and to be ultimately disclosed.

I concede the difficulty in charting a further course to implement this protest, which does not further penalize the Polish people themselves, who already are the innocent, helpless, tragic victims of the same bad faith which occasions our protest. It would merely compound the outrage if the mechanism of our protest should add to the burdens of the Polish people themselves, as distinguished from their Government—the people who already suffer from this alleged tyrannical oppression, against which we now officially complain.

Our challenge is to the Provisional Polish Government and its sponsors, and particularly the government which will be the successor of the present Provisional Government under color of a so-called election which it is now formidably charged has been a vicious travesty upon the promised freedom and democracy to which we pledged our support, along with Britain and Soviet Russia, and which we have jointly underwritten. Our challenge is to the violation of solemn international agreements signed at Yalta, on February 11, 1945, by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, and Joseph Stalin, in person, speaking for their countries. If that were not enough, our challenge is to the violation of these reiterated warrants respecting free Polish elections, signed subsequently at Potsdam on August 2, 1945, by President Truman, Premier Attlee, and Generalissimo Stalin.

Mr. President, I do not presently undertake to say what steps are appropriate in effective furtherance of our protest, except that frank and immediate consultations between Britain, America, and Soviet Russia, signatories to the Polish guarantee, would appear to be summarily required to find out exactly "who's who" and "what's what."

The three Governments—and Poland too—are committed to the peaceful settlement of such disputes. There is, of course, no thought of any other procedure, and there is no remote suggestion beyond pacific settlement in the words I am uttering today. But I do not see how there can be any thought, either, of resting the case upon the mere filing of an unpursued indictment, when the indictment charges basic violation of the very fundamentals of the Atlantic Charter and the United Nations Charter. There must be a more convincing answer. I take it the State Department will have more to say upon this score at a later date, and I very willingly await its leadership, in view of the clear disposition it has indicated within the last 24 hours that it shares the view which I am now presenting to the Senate.

Mr. President, this is all a part of the painful, tortuous but indispensable process by which the peace-living nations—and I prefer, from here on to substitute "peace-living" nations for the phrase "peace-loving" nations—which has been used up to date in a definition of credentials—this is all a part of the painful, tortuous, but indispensable process by which the peace-living nations of the earth are striving for a new integrity and a new reliance in the sanctity of international engagements upon which we all seek to build the edifice of permanent peace with justice in a free world of freemen. The edifice cannot be erected upon shifting sand.

We must frankly and courageously face each unfolding event in this great evolution, if the evolution shall eventually succeed and if our edifice shall stand. We must still exercise patience, until it ceases to be a virtue; but we must find the right answers and the essential protections each step of the way. We must keep the record straight. We cannot condone or ignore such a record as we here confront without a conclusive searching of the facts and then of our consciences. We must practice what we preach.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks there may be printed in the RECORD the full text of the State Department's release on the recent election in Poland, and the Associated Press report upon that election.

There being no objection, the State Department's statement and the newspaper article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On January 19 a general election was held in Poland, the results of which are expected to be announced shortly.

The United States Government has followed closely the developments leading up to this event in accordance with the commitments it accepted at the Yalta and Potsdam conferences. On numerous occasions it has expressed its concern over the course of events in Poland which increasingly indicated that the election would not be conducted in such manner as to allow a free expression of the will of the Polish people.

On August 19 and November 22, 1946, formal notes were addressed to the Polish Provisional Government on this subject.

On January 5 this Government brought the situation in Poland to the attention of the British and Soviet Governments and expressed the hope that those Governments would associate themselves with the Government of the United States in an approach to the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity. This proposal was rejected by the Soviet Government.

On January 9 this Government delivered a further note to the Polish Provisional Government which stated among other things that if the repressive activities on the part of the provisional government did not cease immediately, there was little likelihood that elections could be held in accordance with the terms of the Potsdam agreement. The British Government has also protested to the Polish Provisional Government the violation of its election pledges.

EMBASSY REPORTS CITED

The reports received from the United States Embassy in Poland in the period immediately prior to the elections as well as its subsequent reports based upon the observations of American officials who visited a number of Polish voting centers confirmed the fears which this Government had expressed that the election would not be free.

These reports were corroborated by the general tenor of the dispatches from foreign correspondents in Poland.

It is clear that the provisional government did not confine itself to the suppression of the so-called underground, but employed widespread measures of coercion and intimidation against democratic elements which were loyal to Poland although not partisans of the government bloc.

In these circumstances the United States Government cannot consider that the provisions of the Yalta and Potsdam agreements have been fulfilled.

The United States Government has made it clear that it has no desire to intervene in the internal affairs of Poland. By virtue of the responsibility which devolved upon it as one of the principal powers engaged in liberating the countries of Europe from Nazi occupation, it undertook, together with the British and Soviet Governments, to secure for the long-suffering Polish people the opportunity to select a government of their own choosing. It was in connection with this undertaking that this Government agreed to the decisions respecting Poland that were taken at the Yalta Conference, including the decision to recognize the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity.

These decisions with respect to Poland, which were accepted by the Polish Provisional Government in their entirety, formed part of a series of agreements between the United States, British, and Soviet Governments. The United States Government considers that the Polish Provisional Government has failed to carry out its solemn pledges.

The United States Government firmly intends to maintain its interest in the welfare of the Polish people. While retaining full liberty of action to determine its future attitude toward the Government of Poland, this Government will continue to keep itself informed of developments in Poland through its diplomatic mission in Warsaw.

UNITED STATES OBSERVERS FIND MANY VIOLATIONS OF POLISH LAW IN VOTE—PEOPLE HAVE ATTITUDE OF CYNICISM, SUBMISSION, WARSAW EMBASSY TOLD

WARSAW, January 24.—United States Embassy observers reported to Ambassador Arthur Bliss Lane today that the attitude of the Polish people to the parliamentary elections was one of cynicism, hopelessness, fear, and abject submission.

The reports told of frustration and regimentation among the nation's voters and attributed the condition to intimidation exercised by the pro-government bloc parties, aided by armed forces which produced what was described as mass open voting and a long list of violations of the Polish constitution and election laws.

The Ambassador said he would send detailed reports to Washington next Wednesday.

Embassy personnel and other Americans visited all the important sectors of Poland before and during Sunday's election.

VOTERS AFRAID TO TALK

Asked his opinion on the reports, the Ambassador said his own views were the same as those of the American Government in notes which were submitted to Moscow and Warsaw and which, in advance of the balloting, scored the election set-up as being neither free nor unfettered.

Embassy observers reported that everywhere they found voters feared to talk about the elections and felt the results were a foregone conclusion.

Reports from those who visited the polls in the cities of Wroclaw (Breslau), Krakow, Katowice, Gdansk (Danzig), Lublin, Posnan (Posen), and Warsaw recited numerous violations of secrecy of voting by tens of thousands.

Observers said there were many arrests of members of the PSL (Polish Peasant Party), that one jail in Kielce had 1,000 prisoners and there was large-scale pressure by security police to force the Poles to vote pro-bloc.

ARMED ATTACKS CITED

The reports cited armed attacks against PSL district headquarters, and mass disenfranchisement of voters. The reports told of no place which had booths for secret voting.

In Lublin the voting was disorderly and probably thousands were unable to cast their ballots before the polls closed, the investigators said. In many precincts only those openly pro-bloc were afforded the first opportunity to vote, they added.

The Embassy reported it had little information on the counting of ballots. But in many places there were no watchers for the Polish Peasant Party and that party was not represented on the election commission.

The British Embassy also is preparing a report to London.

Vice Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk asserted yesterday that the Government bloc had robbed his Polish Peasant Party of victory in Sunday's balloting and that "an honest and fair supreme court must declare this election invalid."

He told 50 foreign correspondents at a news conference that if the appeal to the high tribunal fails the PSL's executive committee will consider a boycott of the new Parliament by the 28 PSL members.

Mr. Mikolajczyk declared that even with the display of power by the bloc parties, the security police, militia, and army, the PSL would have obtained 60 to 70 percent of the vote if it had been permitted to have watchers at the vote counting. Unofficial returns gave the bloc 90 percent of the vote.

He said reports showed that the voters, herded to the polls early in the day by bloc-party organizers aided by armed forces, later showed widespread rebellion. If there had been an honest count of the ballots, he added, it would have shown a majority for the PSL.

Mr. Mikolajczyk outlined these three conclusions from the voting:

"First, the election was a fight of a minority using brutal physical force to overcome the will of the majority of the people.

"Second, the fact that a majority vote would have been shown in favor of the PSL was reflected in the tremendous majority given our party in those few precincts where we managed to have watchers at the vote counting.

"Third, the election should promptly be declared invalid because the new Government emerging from this election, at a decisive and difficult moment for Poland, will not be reflective of the will of the majority of the people."

RESOLUTIONS OF BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF BURKE COUNTY AND WILLIAMS COUNTY FARMERS' UNION, NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Burke County, and three resolutions adopted by the Williams County Farmers' Union, in the State of North Dakota, relating to legislation and certain problems facing the Nation, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] will be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

To the Committee on Finance:

"We, the Board of County Commissioners of Burke County, N. Dak., memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States, as follows:

"1. That the Budget of the United States be balanced;

"2. That the present rate of taxation of the United States remain as it is, save and except that as to the Federal income tax that the exemptions of single persons be raised from $500 to $1,000, and the exemptions of the head of a family be raised from $1,000 to $1,500, and that the present exemption for additional dependents be left as it now is.

"That copies of this resolution be sent forthwith to the Members of Congress from the State of North Dakota.

"Dated this 7th day of January 1947.

"THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF BURKE COUNTY, N. DAK.,
"By OSCAR A. KALLBERG, Chairman.
"Attest:
"WM. JOHNSON, County Auditor."

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Whereas the Agricultural Conservation Program has been set up by Congress to assist farmers in carrying out approved practices that will maintain and improve the soil and water resources of the Nation now and in the future, and to be administered by farmers; and

"Whereas it has been proposed by the Secretary of Agriculture to eliminate all regional offices of ACP and set up a centralized board of 5 men with 17 different departments at Washington, D. C.; and

"Whereas it was evident that this five-man board would be appointed without consideration to their agricultural qualifications and furthermore that the needs and supervisions vary in different regions of the country, thereby warranting representation through regional offices: Be it hereby

"Resolved, That the Williams County Farmers' Union set forth this resolution opposing the proposed change of administration; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and to our Senators and Congressmen."

"Whereas rural electrification is one of the greatest steps forward that has ever been undertaken in the improvement of the standards of living for families on the farms; and

"Whereas the Rural Electrification Administration has proven itself an agency through which such rural electrification has been made possible for hundreds of thousands of farm families throughout the United States, who would otherwise not have been able to get such electric service; and

"Whereas widespread newspaper publicity is at the present time indicating an attitude of misunderstanding and hostility toward the Rural Electrification Administration on the part of some of the Members of Congress from various parts of the United States, which we feel is brought about by the fact that many of these Congressmen are from urban areas, and therefore do not fully appreciate the tremendous services being brought to our farm population through the development of rural electrification by the Rural Electrification Administration: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Williams County Farmers Union in convention assembled at Williston, N. Dak., That we express our whole-hearted support for the further development of rural electrification through the Rural Electrification Administration, and request the present Congress to grant adequate appropriations to the Rural Electrification Administration for continued development and expansion and further request the Congress to jealously guard the Rural Electrification Administration against legislation designed to deter or prevent further expansion of rural electrification through the Rural Electrification Administration; be it further

"Resolved, That we request the Senators and Representatives in the United States Congress from our State to do their utmost toward acquainting all other Members of Congress with our position and with the marvelous job that the REA is doing in making electricity available to the farm families."

To the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas the exemptions for dependents under the Federal income tax was set up at a time when the cost of living was much lower than it is at the present time; and

"Whereas as there is a plan in our National Congress to reduce all income taxes by a certain percentage;

"Therefore, we, the delegates of the Williams County Farmers Union, assembled at Williston, N. Dak., on Saturday, January 4, 1947, do recommend that the exemptions be increased to $1,000 per dependent and that no other reduction be made on income taxes; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to each of our Congressmen."

AUTHORIZATION FOR JOINT COMMITTEE ON ATOMIC ENERGY TO EXPEND CERTAIN FUNDS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 59, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 59) submitted by Mr. HICKENLOOPER on January 17, 1947.

The amendments of the committee were on page 1, line 1, after the word "on", to strike out "February 1" and insert "January 24"; and on page 1, line 5, after the word "the", to insert "Senate section of the", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the unobligated balance on January 24, 1947, in the contingent fund of the Senate to the credit of the Special Committee on Atomic Energy, created by Senate Resolution 179, agreed to October 22, 1945, hereby is authorized to be expended by the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, created by the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, approved August 1, 1946, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate on vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire as to the amount of money involved?

Mr. BROOKS. It is about $11,000; but the circumstance is unusual. The committee did not spend the money which had been provided for it. It is not asking for any more money; it is simply asking to transfer from the original joint committee to the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy approximately $11,000.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SMALL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I would like to inquire as to the amount involved?

Mr. BROOKS. The amount is $7,754. The resolution was introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY]. It makes up for the unused time they had for vacation, and it winds up the committee as of January 31.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 52) submitted by Mr. MURRAY on January 10, 1947, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress (providing for a study and survey of the problems of American small-business enterprises), agreed to October 8, 1940, as continued and supplemented, is hereby increased by $7,754.

Res. 35) providing for a study of emergency and wartime legislation, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The resolution has been unanimously approved by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 35) submitted by Mr. WILEY on January 8, 1947.

The amendments of the committee were, on page 1, line 10, after the word "than", to strike out "February" and insert "March", and on page 2, line 2, after the word "than", to strike out "March 5" and insert "April 1", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That each standing committee of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study of all existing temporary and permanent emergency and wartime legislation (including legislation which terminates on or after a proclamation proclaiming the cessation of hostilities) which falls within the jurisdiction of the respective standing committees. Each such committee is further authorized and directed to make such recommendations with respect to such legislation as it may deem advisable to the Committee on the Judiciary not later than March 15, 1947; and be it further

Resolved, That upon receipt of such recommendations the Committee on the Judiciary shall review and correlate them and not later than April 1, 1947, shall submit such recommendations to the Senate as it may deem advisable.

WESTERN LAND BOUNDARY AND RIO GRANDE BORDER FENCE PROJECTS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and on his behalf, and on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and my colleague the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND], I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution relating to the western land boundary and Rio Grande border fence projects.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) authorizing appropriations for the construction, operation, and maintenance of the western land boundary fence project and the Rio Grande border fence project, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF GEN. CASIMIR PULASKI

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference three joint resolutions. I think it is appropriate that they should be introduced at this time, because each one pertains to the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Gen. The joint resolutions introduced by Mr. BROOKS were read twice by their titles and referred as indicated, as follows:

TEMPORARY POSTPONEMENT OF TARIFF ADJUSTMENTS UNDER RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. HAWKES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 74), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the President and all agencies of the Federal Government are hereby requested to postpone any action seeking the further adjustment of duties under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (the so-called Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act), as amended, until sufficient time has elapsed to permit a scientific study of the necessity for further action under the reciprocal trade agreements policy. The United States Tariff Commission is hereby directed to make such scientific study and report its findings to the Congress.

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS TO MAKE CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND EMPLOY CERTAIN ASSISTANTS

Mr. FERGUSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by subsection (g) (2) (B) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make such expenditures, and to employ upon a temporary basis such investigators, technical, clerical, and other assistants as it deems advisable.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be.

AMENDMENT OF REORGANIZATION ACT RELATING TO THE LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution to amend section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act. Section 138 now reads:

LEGISLATIVE BUDGET

SEC. 138. (a) The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or duly authorized subcommittees thereof, are authorized and directed to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of Congress and after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses a legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year, including the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year. Such report shall contain a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year which shall include such an amount to be reserved for deficiencies as may be deemed necessary by such committees. If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt. Such report shall be made by February 15.

(b) The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year. If the estimated expenditures exceed the estimated receipts, the concurrent resolution shall include a section substantially as follows: "That it is the sense of the Congress that the public debt shall be increased in an amount equal to the amount by which the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year exceed the estimated receipts, such amount being $."

It is my thought that if the concurrent resolution I am now submitting is adopted and followed it will do away with deficit spending, put the Government on a pay-as-you-go basis, and provide for an orderly liquidation of the national debt.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), submitted by Mr. WILSON, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is amended by striking out all of section 138 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 138. (a) The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, are authorized and directed to meet jointly at the beginning of each regular session of Congress and, after study and consultation, giving due consideration to the budget recommendations of the President, report to their respective Houses as follows:

"(1) A legislative budget for the ensuing fiscal year.

"(2) The estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for such year.

"(3) A recommendation of the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure for running the Government in such year.

"(4) A recommendation of the amount to be paid on the principal of the national debt, which sum shall not be less than one-tenth of the estimated over-all Federal receipts.

"After providing for the payment in subsection (4) hereof, if the amount remaining from the estimated over-all Federal receipts is less than the amount recommended as the maximum amount to be appropriated for the current expense of government, then the committee shall in such report recommend a tax to be levied in such an amount as will produce sufficient revenue to retire such excess in not more than 2 years, and the funds derived from any such tax shall not be used for any other purpose than the retirement of such excess, and no appropriation shall be made until such levy is provided for. Such report shall be made by February 15.

"(b) The report shall be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting such budget, setting aside the amount to be paid on the principal of the national debt and fixing the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in such year. If after deducting payment on the national debt the estimated expenditure exceeds the estimated receipts, the concurrent resolution shall also include a section substantially as follows: 'That it is the sense of the Congress that a tax shall be levied sufficiently to retire said excess within a period of not more than 2 years, the amount of such excess being estimated as $.'

"(c) The concurrent resolution herein provided for shall be privileged, and shall not be referred to any committee, but shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"(d) The provisions of subsection (4) and subsection (b) hereof shall not be operative if the Congress by concurrent resolution determines that a national emergency exists."

SPECIAL ELECTIONS TO FILL VACANCIES OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT—AMENDMENT

O. MAX GARDNER, AMBASSADOR TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. ROBERTSON of Wyoming. Mr. President, when the President of the United States nominates a distinguished citizen to the post of Ambassador to a foreign nation, he does so "by and with the consent and approval of the Senate."

On January 8 the President nominated Max Gardner to be United States Ambassador to Great Britain. The nomination reached the Senate on January 10 and was immediately referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. That committee considered the nomination, approved it unanimously, reported it to the Senate, and it was thereupon ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar for action.

Three days later, on January 13, the Senate in executive session unanimously approved the nomination, and the President was so advised.

To a foreign nation this action may have seemed merely a normal parliamentary procedure; but, Mr. President, it was more than that, much more. Here was a nomination by the President of the United States, a good Democrat, sent to the Republican-controlled Senate for our consent and approval. It was first referred to the Republican-controlled Foreign Relations Committee, approved unanimously by them, and then given final unanimous approval by the Senate.

The roll call of that day, January 13, showed that 86 Senators out of a total membership of 95 were present.

I hope and trust that Great Britain and the world at large will understand the full import of this vote of confirmation and approval.

It was not a party vote; it was a national vote. It was the second notification to the world in the short period of 3 weeks that the foreign policy of the United States is, and will continue to be, a national policy and not the policy of any one political party. The appointment and confirmation of Ambassador Max Gardner was a notification to the world that the United States foreign policy will continue to be one of justice tempered with firmness and equality to all nations large and small, and a policy striving for universal peace.

The President made no mistake in this nomination. If I may use a western expression, "It was a natural." Here was a man, a former governor of his State, holding high national office with great distinction, a man of brilliant attainments, respected for his ability, admired for his kindly manner, and loved for his keen sense of humor.

The nomination and approval by the Senate was a great tribute to Max Gardner. Since I came to Washington I have had an opportunity to know him, and to know Max Gardner is to admire and respect him. I rejoice with countless other friends in the great honor that has been bestowed on this fine southern gentleman. I have every confidence that he will perform the highly important duties of this office with great ability and tact.

Throughout his busy and successful life Max Gardner has received his greatest help and encouragement from his brilliant, tactful, and lovely wife, who goes with him to London.

Max and Mrs. Gardner leave our shores on February 6 on the queen of the American merchant marine appropriately called The America.

I feel sure I am echoing the sentiments of every Member of the Senate when I say to them, good health, good luck, and Godspeed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my profound appreciation to the Senator from Wyoming for the very fitting tribute which he has paid to our new Ambassador to London. I have often said in private—I have not had occasion often to say it in public—that in my judgment there is no more typical American in public office or in private life than Max Gardner. Not only does he represent the best that North Carolina has produced or can produce, but in my judgment he represents the best that America has produced in citizenship in public service, in the solid foundation of his Americanism, and his impartial, judicial approach to all the problems which face him and have faced him as an American.

He was an outstanding Governor of North Carolina, having held other offices before he reached the highest office within the gift of the State. He has resided in Washington for a number of years, and he has created a wide circle of friends and admirers which is not bounded by any partisan political division or by any religious division, or by any divisions which might be founded upon race, color, or national origin.

I predict, because I confidently believe, that in representing the United States at the Court of St. James's Governor Gardner and his beautiful, charming, talented, and gracious wife, whom we all know with such great pleasure, will take their places among the finest ambassadors we have ever sent to London. When I say that I have in mind Whitelaw Reid, Joseph Choate, Walter Hines Page—also a North Carolinian—John W. Davis, and many others whom I might mention as being among the outstanding representatives of this great country to the Court of St. James's. I think we may all take pride in the appointment of Governor Gardner. It seems to me—and did at the time—that it was a natural appointment. It was one that anyone would have recommended if he had thought about it, or if he had thought Governor Gardner would accept it.

I join with the Senator from Wyoming in the very deserved tribute he pays to Governor Gardner. I share with him his intimate friendship, which has been to me not only a source of great pleasure, but a benediction. He takes with him the respect, admiration, and confidence, not only of the Senate, but of all America. I have no doubt that he will measure up to every requirement of the position to which he has been called.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my deep appreciation of the tributes which have been paid by Senators on both sides of the aisle to Hon. O. Max Gardner in connection with his recent appointment as Ambassador to the Court of St. James's.

North Carolina has previously had the honor of having two of her sons represent the United States at the Court of St. James's. Walter Hines Page was appointed Ambassador by President Wilson, and served preceding and during the first World War. Robert Worth Bingham was appointed by President Roosevelt and served as Ambassador to the Court of St. James's during a portion of his administration. Both of these men were natives of North Carolina, though neither of them was a resident of that State at the time of his appointment. Each of them made an outstanding record of public service.

In the appointment of Hon. O. Max Gardner, who is not alone a native of North Carolina, but was a resident of that State at the time of his appointment, North Carolina takes particular pride.

I wish to express my own appreciation and that of the State of North Carolina for the tributes which have been paid to him. I think I know Governor Gardner probably better than does any other citizen. I was born and reared in the same town with him, and we have been closely associated through the years. I have watched his career in North Carolina with particular pleasure and pride. In the field of public service and private endeavor he has made a most enviable record. A great lawyer, a successful businessman and farmer, he has had a many-sided career and always has been found in the front rank of those leading the fight for progressive measures and humanitarian causes.

He served as State senator, Lieutenant Governor, and Governor of the State. During the period of his governorship he reorganized the State government and started North Carolina on a great upward march of progress. He has likewise served on national boards, in the public service, without compensation. I think he is qualified not only by nature, training, and experience, but also by superior native ability. He possesses an inherent faculty for understanding and appreciating the sentiments and the currents of thought in American life. Not only is he a great North Carolinian but he is a great American.

I predict for him a service most acceptable to this country and to Great Britain as he goes there with credentials of ability and character to represent this great Republic at the Court of St. James's.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I want my distinguished friend from Wyoming to understand that no word in the very few remarks which I shall make is in any sense critical of the remarks which he has made. I think it was exceedingly appropriate that those words of eloquence and commendation which have come from his lips should have been uttered here. It has not been my privilege to enjoy the personal acquaintance of Governor Gardner, beyond a mere meeting on one occasion, or possibly a few occasions, with the distinguished gentleman who will go as our Ambassador to Great Britain.

It happens that my own father was born in the State of North Carolina, and even during his latter days delighted in the memories of the Blue Ridge Mountains and the beauty and greatness of that magnificent Commonwealth.

The point to which I desire to address myself for only a moment is this: At the outset of the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming he used this language:

> When the President of the United States nominates a distinguished citizen to the post of ambassador to a foreign nation he does so by and with the consent and approval of the Senate.

I observe in the manuscript, a copy of which the Senator from Wyoming has very kindly handed me, that the language "by and with the consent and approval of the Senate" is quoted. My only purpose in rising at this moment—and I repeat that what I have to say is not in any sense critical—is to call attention to the fact that the responsibility and privilege of the Senate is not confined to consent and approval. I observe that in the Constitution of the United States, section 2 of article II, there is the following language dealing with the office of President:

> He shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors—

And so forth. My purpose in rising is to state that by no possible construction of silence after the utterance made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming should the Senate place itself in the position, even inferentially, of interpreting the language of the Constitution in such a way as to imply that the Senate admits its only power to be one of consent and approval. We have the right to be advised with. The nomination is to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I rise simply for the purpose of making the record clear, at least as to my view with respect to that question.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I should like to add my voice to the voices of other Senators who have expressed their hearty approval of the appointment of the Honorable O. Max Gardner as United States Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain. A man who has had such a distinguished career as Mr. Gardner has had and who while stalwart in his Americanism, yet seeks to make every sound contribution to other peoples and to international understanding which is compatible with the preservation of our American standards and ideals, needs few words of commendation. His actions and his life and what he stands for in America are sufficient commendation.

I know of no two citizens of the United States who can better represent the people of the United States at the Court of St. James's than Mr. Gardner and his fine and distinguished wife. I am certain they will reflect credit upon America and that the British people will quickly learn to hold them in great respect.

I think the President's selection of the Honorable O. Max Gardner to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain was a wise choice, and I was most happy when the Senate confirmed it. I am sure all other good Americans join me in wishing Mr. Gardner full success in this very important mission at a crucial hour in the history of the world, and I am certain that Mrs. Gardner will be of great assistance in the work which she will be called upon to do as the wife of the American Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain.

PROPOSED REVISION OF 1939 AGREEMENT RELATING TO QUOTA AND TARIFF ON GROUND FISH

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, this morning the Washington delegation, including myself and other Members, appeared before the Committee on Reciprocity Information regarding their conference and deliberations on the tariff on ground fish, under the reciprocal-trade-agreement program. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a joint statement by myself and my distinguished colleague, Representative HENRY M. JACKSON, from my State.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT TO COMMITTEE FOR RECIPROCITY INFORMATION CONCERNING PROPOSED REVISION OF 1939 AGREEMENT RELATING TO QUOTA AND TARIFF ON GROUND FISH

Mr. Chairman, committee members, I am WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Senator from the State of Washington, and am appearing before you today to speak on behalf of the fishing industry of my State. Congressman HENRY M. JACKSON, of Washington, concurs in this full statement. Your committee is gathering facts from industry and other sources which will enable our State Department to negotiate an agreement with various countries as provided under the Reciprocal Trade Act. I appreciate the heavy responsibility upon your shoulders to at one and the same time carry out the will of the Congress as contained in this act and protect American industry from foreign competition which might be ruinous to it. I know that in discharging your responsibility you are motivated by a desire to reach that agreement which will be most beneficial to the people of this country.

The fishing industry is the third largest industry in the State of Washington. Its continued prosperity is vital to the economic health and welfare of my State. In 1939 an agreement was negotiated relating to imports of ground fish filets which imposed a duty of 1⅞ cents per pound on the first 15,000,000 pounds, or 15 percent of the average annual United States consumption for the three preceding years, and 2½ cents per pound on all in excess of that amount. At that time the average price paid fishermen on ground fish in the United States was 2.104 cents per pound. The duty imposed at that time represented an amount roughly equivalent to the price paid for the raw product from which fillets are produced. In 1945 the average price paid United States fishermen for ground fish had risen to 6.038 cents per pound. The duty on filets percentagewise was therefore reduced to approximately one-third of the price received by fishermen for the raw product. It can readily be seen therefore that the protection afforded by the 1939 agreement was far less effective in 1945 than that at the time the agreement was negotiated. Evidence of this fact can further be found by a brief reference to the growth of imports which has occurred since the agreement was negotiated, or in the last 7 years. In 1939 imports from Canada, Newfoundland, and Iceland of ground fish filets totaled about 9,500,000 pounds. By 1946 this had increased to approximately 50,000,000 pounds, an increase of 500 percent.

Statistics demonstrate that the fishing industry of the United States is capable of supplying the entire needs of the domestic market on this particular product. In fact, this year there is in storage in this country approximately 40,000,000 pounds of frozen filets in excess of the 5-year average. It is interesting to note that this excess of 40,000,000 pounds approximates very closely the imports on this item in excess of the 15,000,000-pound quota.

The fishing industry in this country and in the State of Washington represents a large investment in terms of jobs for our people, as well as invested capital. Nationwide the industry employs directly about 250,000 people and there is a direct investment of approximately $500,000,000.

Whereas I am fully cognizant of the underlying principles of our reciprocal-trade program and am in agreement with them, and am also cognizant of the stake the American consumer has in this problem, it is my firm conviction that the fishing industry of this country must have adequate protection against ruinous foreign competition, made possible by wide differentials in wage rates and standards of living. I urge your committee to weigh most carefully the facts here presented and the facts the industry has presented or will present in negotiating the agreements affecting this product.

Too often, in carrying out these agreements, the country's secondary industries have been used as a trading bait for more favorable tariffs on the major items. The fishery case this time can stand on its own feet on the facts. We must be sure those facts are not lost sight of by the negotiators. In other words, we want the same fight put up for the fisheries as is given to the major items. That given, we know the facts will sustain the effort. We want no justification for any statements that fisheries played second fiddle. To these people it is their economic life.

Because we gave foreign fishery competitors temporary help during the war food shortage years via lend-lease to enlarge their fish production does not mean that you gentlemen need consider, to the detriment of our producers, this newly acquired productive means in making the trade formula. You, in my opinion, should base your recommendations on the lower prewar foreign production and stick to them. Otherwise we will have defeated our own humanitarian purposes by having them boomerang. We can create hardships here, too, unless we stand up for America. It may be about time.

Thank you for the opportunity of appearing here to speak on behalf of the fishing industry of the State of Washington.
